Amstead to address alumni

Founding President of UTPB, Billy H. Amstead, will make a return trip to the Permian Basin as guest speaker for the Alumni Association's Night of Celebration scheduled Friday, May 15 in the student lounge.

Beginning at 6:30 p.m. with a social, followed by a barbecue dinner at 7 p.m., the evening will culminate in a talk by Amstead and the naming of the "Alumnus of the Year".

"The Night of Celebration", organized to help celebrate the upcoming graduation for UTPB seniors, is an opportunity to have alumni return to campus and welcome new graduates into the association according to Woody Kupper, director of Alumni Affairs.

Amstead will talk on the beginnings of the university. President for about four and a half years, Amstead was named UTPB's top administrator in the spring of 1970, not long after the legislation creating UTPB was passed the previous year.

During his tenure as president, he and the few people surrounding him, planned a university—they saw it from an idea on paper through the graduation of its first class.

When Amstead accepted the position as president, he was quoted as saying, "I figured that maybe one out of a million ever had the opportunity facing me now—starting a new university from scratch. . . I can't think of anyone in the world today who is more fortunate than I am."

Current President V. R. Cardozier, who served as vice president for academic affairs during Amstead's tenure, characterized the former president as a "Texan prototype."

"He was a man of action, a man with tremendous drive and imagination—and he moved aggressively. He instilled a sense of enthusiasm and excitement about the potential of the university," Cardozier said.

It was those years of planning, and the enthusiasm generated during that time, that characterized the new university which opened its doors to students in the fall of 1973, and which greatly affected what the university is today.

The program this year will also feature the awarding of the "Alumnus of the Year Award". Created in 1980, the award honors an outstanding UTPB Alumnus with the presentation of a plaque, the honoree's name inscribed on a permanent plaque, and the creation of a scholarship in the honoree's major and name. Last year's Alumnus of the Year, Curtis Pool, will make the presentation.

"We will also be electing officers for the coming year at the celebration, as well as appoint new board of directors," Kupper said.

The cost for the evening is $6, but is free to upcoming graduates. Reservations should be made by calling 367-2136. The dinner is being catered by the Odessa Chuck Wagon Gang.

By the spring of 1971, The University of Texas System Board of Regents had approved UTPB's campus development plan in principle, had approved preliminary plans, and had appropriated funds for expenses through the preliminary planning stage.

UTPB had been through an accreditation inspection which would result in accreditation by the Southern Association of Colleges and Universities, and had announced a Registrar's office would open by Jan. 1, 1972. The spring and summer of 1971 would be busy.

The countdown had begun.

Students learn “musician’s craft”

The art of building fine musical instruments using the methods of craftsmanship of the 16th and 17th centuries is part of the learning process for music students at UTPB. The class is building a 17th-century viola da gamba.

Prof. Craig Lister, music, said building the instrument has been a semester-long project, and work will continue into the summer. A total of 250-300 hours will go into the project. An inaugural concert for the instrument is planned in the fall.

Lister said the viola da gamba, popular in the 15th to 18th centuries, was developed at about the same time as the modern violin, but is in a different family of instruments.

“Actually, there is no relation between the viola da gamba and the cello,” he said. “Laymen might consider the gamba as a six-string guitar that is bowed,” he said. “Like the guitar, the gamba has both frets and a flat back, which gives it its distinctive sound. The cello has only four strings and has a bowed back,” he added.

Lister noted that by 1770, the gamba had died out, but when it was in vogue, it was played in combination with the harpsichord to provide support for singers and instrumentalists.

“It is a fact that the gamba balances with the harpsichord better than a cello because the gamba has a brighter, thinner and more delicate tone than the modern cello. The gamba has a broader range than the cello—our gamba has a range of about three octaves,” he said.

Gambas were made in various sizes and played together or in consort, but they also were played as solo instruments, Lister said. The standard consort was one tenor, one alto and two bass gambas.

Lister’s students are building a bass instrument built in the baroque style of the 17th and 18th century. Woods used in the instrument are the same as used during that time—spruce for the sound board, sycamore for the sides and back, and maple for the neck.

He noted that while the class began with a kit providing all the wood pieces and bent pieces in their bent shape, a great deal of preparation went into building the instrument, and many tools also had to be made.

The first step in construction involved putting the ribs onto the back and constructing the back and sides.

“Once you get the shape of the back, you cut out the sound board. Then you thin the inside of the sound board. This determines the quality of the instrument, because it must resonate at a certain pitch,” he said. Tapping the sound board at a particular place should produce a bell-like tone between B flat and B natural. This pitch is perfected by thinning the sound board.

Once the proper tone is obtained, decorative F holes must be cut in the sound board with a knife. No saws may be used. The sound board is glued to the back and sides with a thinned animal glue.

Lister noted modern glues are so strong that the wood breaks if repairs are needed. Animal glue will separate, with a sharp blow of a rubber mallet.

Next, a decorative “purfling” is added around the edge of the sound board. This “purfling” is an inlay of celluloid which protects the edge of the board from cracking and causing a weak place in the instrument.

Once the sound board is completed, the neck piece is carved and the sound post and strings are installed. By this time, Lister said, the sound quality is already determined, but certain perfections in the instrument can be made.

The instrument is played “in the white” at this point, before finishing the wood to identify “wolf tones” or louder notes. He said the sound board may be sanded slightly at this point to tone down various notes.

Even the varnish to finish the wood is authentic, according to Lister. The chemistry lab at UTPB will make the varnish based on a formula used in the 18th century, he said.

Lister said he is hoping, in future classes, to build all the instruments included in a normal baroque ensemble. His classes have already built a harpsichord. After completing the viola da gamba, he said another six or eight instruments will be needed including wind, keyboard, string and percussion instruments.

Starting salaries higher this year for college grads, survey says

The American Association of State Colleges and Universities reported recently that starting salaries for 1981 college graduates are not being affected by the current sluggish economy. The report was based on data compiled by the College Placement Council.

According to the March 1981 Salary Survey, nearly all of the 24 curricula surveyed at the bachelor's level reported increases in starting salary figures over those reported in July 1980. As expected, the highest salary offers went to engineering graduates. Petroleum engineering students drew top offers at $26,244 for the bachelor's level.

Although engineering majors comprise only seven per cent of the projected bachelor's degree graduates in 1980-81, they have received 63 per cent of the job offers reported in the survey.

The three business disciplines, with 26 per cent of the bachelor's offers, reported increases of 9-11 per cent with the highest salary average, $16,956, reported for accounting majors.

The seven scientific disciplines accounted for eight per cent of the volume of offers, with computer science majors dominating the job offers but commanding salary offers lower than the averages for majors in physical and earth sciences, which jumped 18 per cent to $21,912, the report says.

A label identifying the craftsmen who built the instrument (top left) was encased in UTPB's new 17th-century viola da gamba before the sound board was laid and clamped into place (top right). Finally, the instrument was strung and prepared for playing the "white" (bottom right) before final perfecting sound and finishing. Some 250-300 hours of work go into the building of the instrument before it is completed this summer.

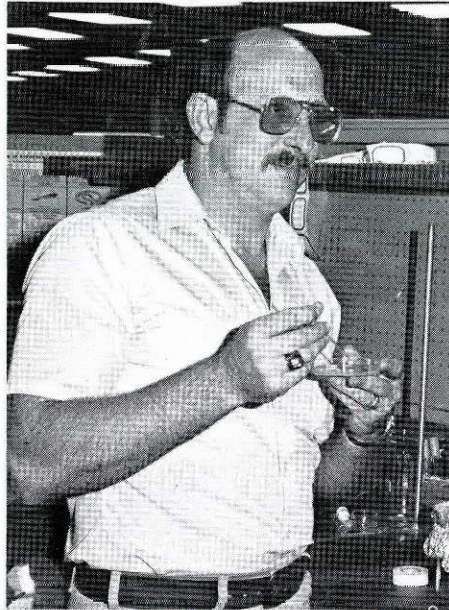

Five more to med schools

Three UTPB students and two alumni have been accepted into medical and dental schools for the upcoming fall semester. They join another 18 who had been accepted through 1980.

UTPB life science seniors from Odessa, Mike Neal and Ronnie Steward have been accepted at The University of Texas Health Science Center at San Antonio. Rhonda Robbins, also a life science senior from Odessa, has been accepted at Baylor Medical School.

Two UTPB graduates from Midland, Dick Standefer, class of 1978, and Tom Marsden, class of 1975, have been accepted into the Baylor University School of Dentistry.

Prof. Edwin B. Kurtz, chairman of life science, said 60 per cent of the UTPB students who have applied to medical and dental schools have been accepted. Traditionally, he said, only one out of every three Texas residents who apply are accepted.

Art exhibition opens May 12

The University Art Association will present the entries in its first juried exhibition in a showing scheduled for the third floor art gallery.

Opening May 12 with a reception and presentation of awards, the showing will remain on display through June 30 in the UTPB gallery. The reception is 7:30 - 9:30 p.m.

Jackie Huet, association president, said there has been a great response to the first juried show.

"We have had entries in divisions such as oils, water colors, drawings, photographs, prints, as well as mixed media collages," she stated.

Huet added that judge for the show is Odessa architect, Johnny Fields. A juror for several design awards in local chapters of American Institute of Architecture, Fields has received design awards for building design of Ector County Courthouse as well as the building design of the UTPB campus.

The juried show was the result of much planning and preparation. Huet said the show gave students a chance to compete with other students as well as give the association experience in all phases of an exhibition. Cash prizes will be awarded at opening night.

Gallery hours are 9 a.m. - 7:30 p.m. Monday - Friday.

UTPB Journalists take TIPA awards

UTPB students were among the winners at the annual Texas Intercollegiate Press Association award luncheon at the spring TIPA convention held recently in San Marcos.

College and university journalists from across the state gathered at the press conclave, hosted this year by Southwest Texas State University.

Entries in newspaper, yearbook, general and literary magazine, radio and television competition were judged by professionals in related fields.

Dana Ross, 1980 graduate of Midland, received a 1st place award for the best radio broadcast. Odessan Brent Roach, mass communication senior, took a 2nd place award for the best radio spot commercial in the public service or promotional announcement category.

A 1st place award went to graduate student Travis Woodward of Odessa for the best radio single public affairs program; 2nd place went to Odessan Deanna Haynes, art junior, for a magazine illustration and Carolyn Smith took a third place award for her newspaper news feature entry in division I.

Academics, teaching, service recognized at Convocation

Honors for academic achievement, excellence in teaching and distinguished service were awarded at UTPB's fifth annual Honors Convocation recently.

Prof. Edwin B. Kurtz, chairman of life science, was honored as the university's most outstanding teacher. Recipient of a $1,000 cash award from the Amoco Foundation for excellence in teaching, Kurtz has been a faculty member at UTPB since 1972. Even before the university opened its doors to students, Kurtz was involved in planning and in recruitment of faculty.

He received his B.S. and M.S. degrees from the University of Arizona and his Ph.D. from the California Institute of Technology. He teaches courses in cell biology, plant morphology, organic biology and contemporary natural science, in addition to conducting seminars and speaking regularly for the UTPB speakers bureau.

Besides his teaching duties, Kurtz is active in a number of community activities and is the author of many publications. He is on the editorial board for the "Ranger Rick Nature Magazine," a magazine devoted to educating children about conservation measures in the United States. He has served on the board for 14 years.

Other professors nominated for the prestigious Amoco Award are Prof. Yonina Cooper, computer science, and Prof. Sean Kelleher, government.
