COUNTY HISTORY

THE PREHISTORY OF DEWITT COUNTY

DeWitt County lies on the coastal plain of Southern Texas. From an archaeological standpoint, its ancient cultural remains share many of the traits described by Hester (1980) for the southern Texas area. However, a more recent study by Hall (1984) places the county within the "central coastal plain" archaeological area.

Both Hester and Hall divide up the region's 11,000 years of human prehistory into three najor time periods: Paleo-Indian, Archaic, and Late Prehistoric. With the advent of Europeans into the area in the 17th and 18th centuries, the native Indian cultures are disrupted and soon disappear. In addition to the European intrusion, the native peoples, perhaps linked to the Coahuiltecan Indians, were also severely affected by non-native Indian groups, such as the Lipan Apache, Tonkawa, and Comanche, who began moving into the region in the 17th century. Indeed, these latter Indian groups, who were not native Texas Indians, dominated the central coastal plain by the mid to late 18th century and for a short period into the 19th century.

My focus here, however, will be on the prehistoric archaeological remains. There has actually been only one major archaeological project in DeWitt County — the initial survey for the proposed Cuero I Reservoir published by Fox and others in 1974. As of June 1990, 260

Texas at Austin. Most result from the Cuero I survey of the early 1970s; others are from brief work by professional archaeologists in the area (such as the survey by Bement and Robinson in 1983) and from sites reported avocational archaeologists, including Cecil Calhoun in the 1960s, Mark Hudgeons in the 1970s and E.H. Schmiedlin in more recent years. Though this research has been limited, with the exception of the Cuero I survey, archaeological remains from all of the three major time periods have been found. The Paleo-Indian period represents the earliest Indian occupation, between 9200-6000 B.C. An overview of the archaeology of Texas counties done by Biesart, Roberson and Spotts (1985) reported three Paleo-Indian sites in DeWitt County. There is also the published report of a fluted

cal Research Laboratory, The University of Clovis point (ca. 9200 B.C.) found near Cuero (Hudgeons 1979) and Scottsbluff points found in the county and reported by Birmingham (1980). Though poorly known in DeWitt County, we know from the archaeology of surrounding regions that the early part of the Paleo-Indian era was during the closing years of the Ice Age (Pleistocene) and that the early hunters (such as the peoples who used Clovis points) hunted such now-extinct animals as the mammoth and large bison. As the Ice Age ended, the Paleo-Indian peoples continued their nomadic hunting and food-gathering way of life, until about 6000 B.C.

After 6000 B.C. and for thousands of years, to perhaps A.D. 500, the archaeological record in DeWitt County is represented by the Archaic period. These Indian peoples, some perhaps the descendants of the Paleo-Indian populations and others more recent migrants, also lived as hunters and gatherers in an environment much like that seen in the area today. To be sure, there were periods of drought and perhaps centuries of more rainfall than today; but, the modern plants and animals were mostly in place and were utilized by the Archaic peoples. We are uncertain how widely distributed mesquite was in much of the prehistoric era and whether the nutritious beans of that plant were available during the entire Archaic era. Still, there were abundant trees and shrubs that yielded nuts and berries at different seasons. Whitetail deer, rabbits and other game were likely abundant, along with other animals, such as bear and wolf, buffalo and antelope, none left in the area after modern times ensued. Absent from the Archaic diet would have been armadillo (probably not in the area until the 1830s-50s) and the javelina (peccary), which moved into the southern Texas area in the 1400s.

The bulk of the 212 archaeological sites recorded by the Cuero I survey (Fox and others 1974) date to the Archaic period. Interestingly, Fox and his colleagues found few sites dating to early in that time period. They suggest that the meandering Guadalupe River has cut into and eroded these older sites in ancient times. They did find abundant evidence of Middle and Late Archaic occupations. These are identified by distinctive projectile point types (dart points, used on spears thrown with a spear-thrower before the advent of the bow and arrow), including Tortugas, Pedernales, Montell, Ensor and Fairland (for type descriptions, see Turner and Hester 1985). These range in time from about 2000-1000 B.C. (Tortugas, Pedernales) to the early centuries of the Christian era to (ca. A.D. 500; Ensor, Fairland). Most of the known Archaic sites are campsites - areas of daily life where encampments focussed for a few weeks at a time in the mobile hunting and gathering lifeway. One such site, the Pat Dunn site in eastern DeWitt County, reported by Hudgeons and Hester (1977), was an Archaic campsite, with such artifacts as Matamoros and Refugio dart points and specialized adzes, known as Clear Fork tools (Turner and Hester (1985). However, eroding from a bluff overlooking a small creek running through the site, were the remains of an Archaic Indian burial. The remains appeared to be those of a young male, 15-25 years of age. Around the base of the skull, perhaps in the neck area where they had been suspended as pendants, were five shell ornaments. These were made from the central columella of a Gulf of Mexico conch or whelk (Busycon sp.) — long, cylindrical ornaments drilled at both ends. Although the antiquity of the Dunn site burial is not certain, these kinds of ornaments have elsewhere been found with Late Archaic burials, around 1000 B.C. or somewhat later.

Another Archaic site studied in DeWitt County is 41DW247, where test excavations were carried out by Bement and Robinson (1983). This site, west of the Guadalupe River and north of Cuero. It is located on a gravel terrace and functioned as a quarry area, where Archaic Indians procured flint cobbles and worked these into stone points and tools. The age of the site if likely Middle Archaic, based on a Tortugas point found there during the investigations.

Other Archaic site studies have been reported by Schmiedlin (1981) from sites 41DW243 and 244 in southwest DeWitt County. Site 41DW243 (Kerlick site) yielded artifacts ranging from Early through Middle Archaic times. Prehistoric food remains food in test excavations at the site included much deer bone, as well as that of turtle; one of the deer bones (an ulna) had been worked, probably made into a flint-working tool. Site 41DW244 also yielded deer bones, including some that had been intentionally decorated with asphaltum (natural tar that washes up on the Texas coast). These may have been associated with a disturbed human burial also noted at the site. The date of the burial is uncertain, but much of the site appears to be linked to Middle and Late Archaic occupations.

Around A.D. 500-700, the bow and arrow is introduced into the Texas area. Somewhat later, many of the Indian groups on the coastal plain began to make plain pottery. These new technologies, and some shifts in diet and lifestyle that are still hazy, marke the Late Prehistoric period (A.D. 500/700-1650). Sites of this time period are fairly common in DeWitt County and are most easily recognized by tiny arrow points (often mistakenly called "bird points") used with the bow and arrow. Fox and others (1974) found arrow points and pottery fragments at a number of sites during the Cuero I survey. The earlier arrow points, known as Scallorn, date around A.D. 500/700-1200. Later, these are replaced by Perdiz points from A.D. 1350-1650. Perdiz points, pottery, beveled knives and end scrapers used to process buffalo meat and hides, are part of what archaeologists call the "Toyah Phase." These Late Prehistoric Indians seem to have focused on the hunting of buffalo; though buffalo had been present in earlier times, their presence greatly increased on the coastal plain after about A.D. 1250-1300. Though no Toyah campsites are yet reported from DeWitt County, one has been published in adjacent Goliad County (Hester and Parker 1970). One recent study of a DeWitt County Late Prehistoric site, on the Kerlick Ranch, has been published by Schmiedlin (1981). Among the discoveries at site 41DW242 were abundant deer bones and an arrowpoint of the Scallorn type; another Scallorn was found at 41DW243.

This brief review has sketched the prehistory of DeWitt County. Indeed, all we can do at the present time is a sketch - very little is known about the county's archaeological record. Much work must be done in DeWitt County and most of it has to be done by local avocational archaeologists. Sites must be located and properly documented; artifacts have to be cataloged from each site. Interaction with professional archaeologists is critical. Casual collecting of Indian artifacts is destructive of the archaeological record; if a person collects, he or she ought to keep track of where the artifacts were found, and should report these to trained avocational or professional archaeologists. Reports of sites and artifacts can be sent to the Texas Archaeological Research Laboratory, The University of Texas at Austin, Austin, TX 78712, as it served as a centralized clearinghouse for archaeological data from around the state.

SPANISH AND FRENCH EXPLORERS IN THE DEWITT COUNTY AREA

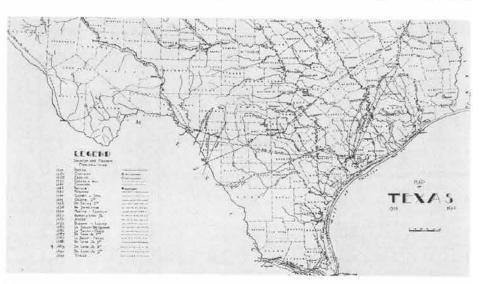

The three most significant early Spanish, French and Mexican explorers who visited the Texas coastal region during the 16th and 17th centuries crossed the present DeWitt County area during their journeys according to historians of that early Texas period. The Spaniard Alvar Nunez Cabeza de Vaca visited the county area while escaping from his coastal Indian captors in the fall of 1534; Rene Robert Cavelier, Sieur de La Salle and his French troops in the fall of 1685 crossed western DeWitt County headed for the Rio Grande from Matagords Bay; and Governor Alonso de Leon made the Guadalupe River bank in northern DeWit County his campground for operations during both of his expeditions to the Texas gulf coas from Mexico in 1689 and 1690.

Cabeza de Vaca was the first Spanish explor er to wander through the county area near the Guadalupe River in 1534 when he was esca ping from the Texas coastal Indian tribes with whom he had lived as a captive after being shipwrecked on the Texas coast in 1528. Cabe za de Vaca's exploration commenced in early 1527 when he was appointed treasurer to the Panfilo de Narvaez expedition from Spain sent to explore and colonize parts of Florida and the Gulf of Mexico coastal region. After a series o well documented misadventures, he and his companions were shipwrecked on Galvestor. Island. Cabeza de Vaca and a few other survivors then spent the following six years living but barely surviving, with the Texas coastal Indians, much of the time being spent as captives of the Karankawa Indians, moving along the central Texas coastal area including visits to gather pecans on the Guadalupe River, which was referred to as the "River of Nuts' in Cabeza de Vaca's detailed journal, "The

In the fall of 1534, he and three companions, one a black man, escaped from their Karankawa captors while in the Corpus Christi area where several bands of Indians gathered annually to feast on the fruit called "tuna" of the prickly-pear. The four survivors had tried to escape during the annual tuna feast the year before, but their plan had been frustrated by a dispute among the several tribes that separately held the Spaniards.

In addition to their unofficial leader, Cabeza de Vaca, the escape party included Alonso del Castillo, a former Captain in the expedition from Salamanca; Estevanico — an Arabian or Moorish black who frequently served as a translator and scout; and Andres Dorantes de Carranza — the closest and most enduring friend of the leader. The four first made their way inland and northward from the Nueces River, crossing western DeWitt County near present Yorktown, according to the historian Carlos E. Castaneda. The first settlement found by the party after their escape was a small Avavare Indian village near the Guadaupe River.

The Avavare band of Indians was loosely connected to the larger Aranamas tribe that ived in the DeWitt County area between the 3an Antonio and Guadalupe rivers during that period. The Aranamas spoke a local dialect of Coahuiltecan, a language that was commonly used throughout much of south Texas and northern Mexico. The existence of the common language stock spread across the area that the four visited allowed Estevanico to converse mudely with each tribe as their journey progressed. Explorers who came later reported the usage of a common sign language among the tribes in the region.

The four remained as guests of the friendly Aranamas Indians over the winter, occasionally performing as medicine men "curing" Indians of diseases. Two hundred years later, this same tribe that sheltered the escape party in this area near the Guadalupe would form the nucleus and largest contingent of Indians living at the Mission La Bahia and became some of Texas first cowboys.

The following spring the Spaniards moved northward with the Indians toward the headwaters of the Guadalupe. By early summer of 1535 the escape party had moved through the Hill County and on westward. The four then turned southwestward and crossed the Rio Grande near present El Paso, where they saw an Indian community with houses and adjoining irrigated farming areas for the first time.

The four moved from one small usually friendly local Indian tribe to another from west Texas and into north-central Mexico in search of the Mexico City area, which they knew was under Spanish control and offered protection. Cabeza de Vaca reported that he remained naked while making his escape and that he changed skins every six months like a snake.

Eighteen months after initiating their escape effort, the party was captured, or as it turned out, rescued in April, 1536, by Spanish troops of Nuno de Guzman, who were engaged in a roundup of Indian slaves in the present Mexican northern state of Sonora. Capturing Indians for use and sale as slaves was not continued or widely practiced by the Spaniards other than Guzman, but during this period human roundups enslaved an estimated 10,000 Indians in northern Mexico.

The four survivors arrived safely in Mexico City in July, 1536. They were received with great acclaim by Hernando Cortes, the Spanish conqueror of Mexico, and were honored with a bullfight and fiesta. From Mexico City the four split - the leader returned to Spain, Castillo and Dorantes remained near the capital, but Estevanico returned northward by foot as the guide for the advance party of the next major Spanish explorer on the America scene, Francisco Vasquez de Coronado. Coronado's expedition made a swing through west Texas, missing the Gulf coast area, concentrating attention on New Mexico and regions further west. The Spanish expedition led by Hernando de Soto and Captain Luis Moscoso in 1542 made a swing through east Texas, also missing the Gulf coast area.

For 150 years after Cabeza de Vaca and his companions established a Spanish presence, albeit tentative, on the Texas Gulf Coast, there was no serious challenge to the Spanish claim to the coastal region. But in 1685 La Salle, the accomplished French explorer who earlier had discovered and claimed the Mississippi River area for France sailed into the Gulf of Mexico with four large vessels carrying a total of over 400 sailors and colonists. This was the first fleet to enter the Gulf waters flying a flag other than that of the Spanish crown. La Salle established a small French colony which he named Fort St. Louis near the mouth of Garcitas Creek, a stream that drains an area between southeastern DeWitt County and present Matagorda Bay.

The Matagorda Bay area is significant to the early history of DeWitt County and all of the Texas central coastal region because its bay was one of the very few inland locations along the 400-mile Texas coast from Galveston to the Rio Grande made accessible by a natural pass through the barrier inlands that ring the Texas coastline. Pass Cavallo leading into the bay was known to be treacherous but nevertheless adequate to allow carefully times and executed vessel movements to pass from the Gulf of Mexico to the mainland. The French usually referred to the inland waters adjoining the entrance as St. Bernard Bay; the Spanish named the bay, Espiritu Santo; and the Americans called it Matagorda Bay.

La Salle considered the Matagorda Bay area part of French Louisiana and planted the French flag, but he was intent also on challenging the Spanish claim to south Texas and exploring Mexico. La Salle directed his first exploration from the Bay area toward Mexico, moving inland and then to the southwest in the fall of 1685 with 50 men. Although his line of march has not been identified with undisputed precision, Carlos Castaneda has marked the route as skirting the western boundary area of present DeWitt County. By the end of the year, La Salle had reached the Rio Grande, and by early 1686 had returned to Matagorda Bay. There is no detailed record of where he crossed the Guadalupe River.

La Salle's settlement deteriorated rapidly over a period of a few years. He was assassinated in February, 1687 by some of his own men in northeast Texas during their trek to reach the Mississippi River. By late 1689, the St. Louis settlement was nonexistent—the members had been captured or killed by local Indians, had died of disease, or had abandoned the community in favor of tribal life with the Indians. There are records of survivors of La Salle's settlement remaining with the Indians in the Guadalupe River area, but there is no information on their precise location.

The presence of the French settlement of St. Louis on Garcitas Creek 20 miles east of the Guadalupe River occasioned a protective response by Spain which sent a series of three military scouting excursions between 1686 and 1688 under Captain Alonso de Leon from northern Mexico to the Rio Grande and the south Texas coast in an attempt to locate and confront the French invaders.

Captain de Leon was a first generation Spanish or Mexican explorer having been born in Mexico in 1640. His father, Alonso de Leon, Senior, had earlier explored northern Mexico including the Rio Grande. Captain de Leon's first expedition left Coahuila in northern Mexico in June, 1686. It was of one month duration and only reached the Rio Grande. The following year he made a second military effort that reached the Nueces River along the coast near Corpus Christi. No Frenchmen were located on either overland trip. No Frenchmen were located by Spanish Captains Rivas and Yriarte who sailed from Veracruz to Pass Cavallo in 1687 searching for the reported French invasion force — they only found two wrecked French vessels and inquired no further.

Upon receipt of specific information the following year that a Frenchman had been sighted living with an inland tribe of Texas Indians, a third, small expedition including only de Leon and 17 soldiers, rushed to an Indian village near present Brackettville about 50 miles east of Del Rio in May, 1788. By early June, de Leon, former Captain but by then Governor of the Province of Coahuila and Commander of the Presidio of Monclova, had returned with his captured evidence of French trespass — one unstable Frenchman named Jean Henri (also identified as Jean Gery), who had been located living with the small band of Indians as their chieftain.

The interrogation of Jean Henri was all the evidence needed by the Spanish officials in Mexico City to initiate another maritime expedition to the Texas coast and to mount two considerably larger and more serious overland expeditions to locate and defeat the French presence and, for the first time, to establish several Spanish forts and missions on Texas soil. The marine excursion led by Captains Rivas and Pez left Veracruz in early August aboard two vessels each crewed by 50 men. The one hundred men spent two weeks in September exploring Matagorda Bay from their vessels, but found nothing suspicious. They reported that the summer drought had dried up the streams preventing the crew from searching upstream. They understandably feared the Karankawas and limited the inspection to what could be observed from aboard ship. They were within a few miles of what they sought. The fast four-day return voyage by the two captains from Matagorda Bay to Veracruz, which was completed on September 29, illustrates how much easier and faster the 100 man marine expedition could move compared to the similar sized overland expeditions that began the following year.

Utilizing a full year to prepare and Jean Henri initially to guide the overland expedition to the Matagorda Bay area, Commander de Leon left Coahuila on his first colonizing mission to Texas in March, 1689. The 1689 expedition was Governor de Leon's most ambitious to that date consisting of over 100 men, two padres including Father Damian Massanet, over 700 horses and 80 loads of flour and other supplies for distribution as gifts to Indian tribes along the route. The list of articles to be distributed as gifts included beads, 200 blankets, tobacco, shirts and other clothing. The unstable but apparently likable Frenchman Jean Henri performed splendidly, guiding the group directly toward the lower Guadalupe River.

This expeditionary force crossed the Rio Grande above present Laredo, crossed the San Antonio River west of Runge, and entered DeWitt County near Yorktown reaching the Guadalupe River on April 14, 1689. The historian J.W. Williams, who has located and written extensively about early Texas trails, places Governor de Leon's base camp location on the Guadalupe in DeWitt County near Hochheim where Texas State Highway 183 crosses the River. At that location the unusually broad valley that lies along the west bank of the River can be seen for over 20 miles from the high ridge approaching the Guadalupe at that point from the southwest.

The approaching caravan must have been an impressive and startling sight 300 years ago, as the first major overland colonization effort into Texas advanced to spread camp in DeWitt County on the Guadalupe near Hochheim. Following a banner painted with a cross and a picture of the patron saint of the expedition, rode de Leon, mounted in light armor and accompanied by over 100 heavily armed cavalry troops in loose column stretched out ahead of the two padres, probably dressed traditionally in robes, carrying crosses, and astride burros. In the rear was a cloud of dust kicked up by the stable of over 600 horses and assorted other hoofed animals. This impressive number of Spanish soldiers with their caravan made the Guadalupe valley near the present DeWitt-Gonzales county boundary line their base camp in the spring of 1689 and again the following year.

Father Massanet reported that a Thanksgiving was celebrated by him at the Hochheim camp on the Guadalupe on April 16, 1689, with a High Mass sung at 9 o'clock that morning in honor of Our Lady of Guadalupe for the protection bestowed upon the expedition. At that time and place, Captain de Leon named the Guadalupe River for the patron saint.

A few days after establishing his camp, Father Massanet, de Leon and 60 of his men left base camp to locate the remnants of the original French colony which was to be found about 40 to 50 miles to the southeast near Matagorda Bay. On the trip to the Bay while still near the DeWitt County area, de Leon discovered an Indian Village of over 250 inhabitants where several Frenchmen, survivors of La Salle's ill fated colony, were living. After securing their reluctant release, de Leon proceeded to the site of the old French fort on Garcitas Creek. De Leon and Father Massanet next crossed the Colorado River to visit the Tejas Indians in east Texas before starting their return journey to Coahuila where they arrived in late May.

On de Leon's second and last colonizing expedition undertaken the following year, he was instructed to establish a small fort and mission in east Texas near the Trinity River in the principal camp of the friendly Tejas Indians. In addition, he was directed to return to Matagorda Bay to destroy the ruins of La Salle's colony. For this campaign, he again organized an impressive caravan of over 100 men, 400 horses and 150 mules but this time, for colonizing purposes, he included 200 head of cattle, 2,400 pounds of powder and lead, and five priests as missionaries, again including Father Massanet. An extra 12 pack mules were provided the church delegation to carry extra chocolate, soap, wine and wax candles. The expedition was launched in late March, 1690 and followed the same route as the one found by Jean Henri the previous year. De Leon and his troops returned to the Hochheim former base camp on the Guadalupe arriving on April 24, 1690.

The first task assigned the soldiers and priests was to burn the ruins of the old French fort near Matagorda Bay. After this was accomplished, they located three French children whom they ransomed from the Indians. After the padres had helped set aflame the remains of the French settlement and surveyed the bay area, they continued to east Texas. They established the Mission San Francisco de los Tejas located between the Trinity and the Neches Rivers before returning to Mexico.

Governor de Leon died shortly after he returned from his last expedition. But before the close of the year 1690, a Spanish marine survey team sailed from Veracruz back to Matagorda Bay to map in detail the bay area.

In the following year, 1691, the Spanish government directed the newly appointed first governor of the Province of Texas, Don Domingo Teran de los Rios to lead fifty soldiers in an overland expedition to establish missions in east Texas. Governor Teran took with him two senior officials who had accompanied de Leon in both 1689 and 1690 — Father Massanet who was the leader of the spiritual conquest and Captain Francisco Martinez. Martinez had served as a translator on the 1689 de Leon expedition and in 1690, as a senior officer.

The new element added to this expedition and not employed with de Leon was a simultaneous amphibious movement across the Gulf from Veracruz by forty additional soldiers under the command of Gregorio de Salinas Varona who was to rendezvous with Teran on Matagorda Bay. As indicated by the marine survey team sent to the bay from Veracruz in 1690 and the marine troops under Salinas Varona dispatched in 1691, the seafaring Spaniards considered Matagorda Bay not only a strategic military location to be defended but a critical marine transportation point from which conveniently to resupply their forces and missions in central and eastern Texas from Veracruz.

Governor Teran and Father Massanet left Monclava in early May, 1691, followed de Leon's route except, according to most historians, he veered northward, crossing the Guadalupe near New Braunfels. On May 18, Father Massanet recorded in his diary that the expeditionary party encountered a large gathering or community about 3,000 friendly Indians at the Guadalupe or Comal River near present New Braunfels. The Indians, who were riding mounted on saddles with stirrups, held a parade for the Spanish visitors with each tribe riding or marching in review, one tribe carrying a wooden cross and two others carrying an image of our Lady of Guadalupe which had been distributed among the tribes by de Leon the previous year. One Indian leader spoke and understood Spanish very well. This spectacle of an early Indian mounted parade involving several thousand Indians carrying crosses and banners across the open plains area occurred only forty miles upriver from where de Leon crossed DeWitt County three years earlier.

During the following two days, Massanet reports the expedition moved 18 to 20 miles to the east to reach the other branch of the Guadalupe River, cited as the San Marcos River, at a point apparently a few miles above present Gonzales. An area on the San Marcos River near the present Palmetto State Park is a location where hot water springs emerge in the manner described as being near their camp by the Father in 1691. By the 26th of May, the party had reached the Colorado River.

From this camp Teran sent Captain Martinez, who had become very familiar with Matagorda Bay on his two previous trips, and 20 men south to meet Salinas Varona's troops who were to be arriving by sea. After this rendezvous failed, Teran continued on to east Texas to explore and support Father Massanet in establishing the new missions. By September 8. Teran had returned to meet Captain Salina Varona who had since arrived at the appointed place on the bay. Teran returned to east Texas to deliver the cargo and supplies to Father Massanet and then again returned to Matagorda Bay to sail directly back to Veracruz. According to an authoritative early history of Texas, written in 1772 by Antonio Bonilla.

A second and final small overland resupply expedition was organized with only 20 soldiers under the command of Captain Varona who had led the marine operation in 1691. It left Monclova in May, 1693. Varona's route has not been charted in detail. Since he was most familiar with the route to east Texas followed by Teran and Spanish troops and padres were at Matagorda Bay, he may have selected the same route skirting the DeWitt County area a few miles to the north to resupply those at the bay. After Varona resupplied the mission in east Texas, Father Massanet decided to abandon it, having concluded that success required a substantial and continuous military troop presence to force the natives to live in the mission. The priest in haste returned to Monclova in 1693, perhaps again traveling on the most familiar and direct route crossing the Guadalupe in the DeWitt County — Gonzales area, which he knew well from his several visits during the previous five years.

The colonizing expeditions and the resupplying efforts of de Leon and Teran failed to establish any permanent missions or settlements but benefited the Spanish government and the Catholic Church by suggesting how it could be accomplished — with a strong continuous military presence organized around a frontier line of forts and the associated local missions made economically self sufficient with agricultural development, including adequate herds and protected grazing lands.

The Spanish Colonial Period in the DeWitt County Area

The Spanish renewed efforts to colonize Texas with more substantial expeditions or entradas that included a larger number of troops and colonists with supporting herds of cattle, horses, and sheep about 25 years after discouraged Father Massanet fled east Texas returning to Mexico. The two significant but limited expeditions of Father Isidro Felix de Espinosa in 1709 and Jose Domingo Ramon with the Frenchman Louis Thuchereau St. Denis in 1716 only confirmed that modest efforts lacking strong and permanent military support would not survive.

The leaders of the two major colonizing expeditions into Texas who initiated the Spanish colonial period both crossed the DeWitt County area. These expeditions, establishing a line of forts and missions supported by Spanish soldiers, colonists and substantial herds of cattle, were led by Governor Martin de Alarcon in 1718 and Marques de San Miguel de Aguayo in 1721.

The Alarcon entrada brought seven families to establish and settled in the new community Villa de Bexar and brought a large supporting herd of cattle, horses, goats and mules for the new town, mission and fort on the upper San Antonio River. Bexar was selected as the site for the first mission, San Antonio de Valero, by Governor Alarcon in May, 1718, as a midway station between San Juan Bautista and other recently established missions and villages on the Rio Grande and the new Spanish missions and presidios in east Texas. After initiating the construction work at the Mission of San Antonio de Valero and the community of Villa de Celiz and Fray Pedro Perez de Mezquia, left San Antonio on May 6, in search of Matagorda Bay. This brief ten-day excursion from San Antonio by Governor Alarcon and his party was different from other Spanish excursions in several respects — the leader was almost cilled, the party was lost and without guides, but lastly the brief expedition had two, not just one diarist. Still, authorities differ on where the party went.

It is certain that Alarcon first moved north eastward, crossing Cibolo Creek on the first day and the Comal and Guadalupe Rivers on the following day. They reached the San Marcos River a few miles above Ottine in Gonzales County on the 9th. Father Mezquia wrote that moving downstream a few miles on the San Marcos River the party discovered first a broad flat two-mile area under irrigation by Indians. This was not the first or only reference to irrigation by Indians in south central Texas. Father Espinosa reported that he found about 500 Indians irrigating land near San Antonio in 1709. A short distance downstream from the irrigated lands, Father Mezquia noted an unusual grouping of large white mounds of earth with distinct bubbling bogs which trembled when they rode near on horseback. They undoubtedly had found the warm sulphur springs and bubbling bogs on the San Marcos River at the present Palmetto State Park near Ottine. Nothing in the San Marcos - Guadalupe River basin area resembles the padre's description other than the prominent bleached raised mounds that quake and belch water in the park

Just downstream from this unusual phenomenon, the party found two large creeks (presumably present Mule Creek and Canoe Creek) and to their surprise a temporarily deserted but well established large Indian community with well over 120 huts. Authorities on Indians in central Texas, report that it was customary for some peaceful Indian tribes, particularly the Tonkawas in south central Texas to abandon their huts and communities and disappear into the woods until any foreign party had left their area. Conservatively assuming each hut accommodated a family of four to six, the community had a population exceeding 600. During the next several days, Indians were sighted, but the quickly disappeared into the bushes and woods only to return to pick up tobacco left as a peaceful gesture by Alarcon's

The two diarists report that Alarcon located the confluence of the San Marcos and the Guadalupe Rivers about 10 miles downstream below the spongy bogs and bubbling springs area. This distance is consistent with that between present Ottine and Gonzales. Although the interpretation of the two diaries is not without question, it appears that about 20 miles below the junction of the two rivers, Alarcon's party located the ford of the Guadalupe for which they had been searching. Both fathers vividly describe how Governor Alarcon on horseback almost drowned crossing the Guadalupe, grasping at last a submerged branch of a cypress. The Texas historian Carlos Castaneda has suggested that this crossing location near present Hochheim became known thereafter as "Paso del Gobernador" or the Governor's Ford. But the confused reports also permit an interpretation placing the crossing near New Braunfels. Any further attempt by the party to reach Matagorda Bay was abandoned, and Alarcon was safely back near Bexar on the 17th.

After returning to Bexar and to the Rio Grande for additional supplies, Alarcon and his replenished troops in September, 1718, headed again for Matagorda Bay, moving this time first south toward the coast along the east bank of the San Antonio River. With Alarcon on this trip was Salinas Varona who could serve as a guide having had met Teran at Matagorda Bay twenty-five years earlier.

The military procession passed through western DeWitt County area and on September 12, established a camp on the Guadalupe near Hochheim according to Fritz Leo Hoffman, the translator and annotator of the diary of Fray Francisco Celiz, the chaplin of the expedition. Celiz reports that during that same day they saw a cross with a pedestal of rock placed on the crest of a hill. This religious sign could have been left by Governor de Leon who camped near Hochheim twenty-eight years earlier. Celiz says that Alarcon named the east bank of the river crossing "The Camp of the Most Holy Name of Mary." They forded the river by raft and moved downstream along the left bank past Cuero to near the present community of Nursery, according to the annotator, before turning away from the Guadalupe toward Matagorda Bay.

Governor Alarcon searched the bay area, found no French presence and, on September 28, moved on to east Texas. Celiz reports that in December on Alarcon's return trip to Bexar from east Texas, the party again crossed the Guadalupe near the ford where the governor almost lost his life crossing the river in early May of that year. Even the branch of the cypress that saved the governor's life was found and noted. Shortly after Alarcon's inspection trip was concluded, Spain and France were at war, the French captured Spanish Pensacola, and French troops drove the Spanish from east Texas.

Three years after Alarcon's inspection trip, the Marques de Aguayo was appointed Governor of the Province of Texas and was requested by the Spanish government to secure Spanish dominion over Texas including the reestablishment of the east Texas missions. While Aguayo was enroute to Bexar with his entrada he ordered Captain Domingo Ramon to proceed to Matagorda Bay through San Antonio to establish a presidio and mission. Captain Ramon who had earlier led the expedition to eastern Texas in 1716 and had been with Alarcon, arrived with 40 men at Matagorda Bay in April, 1721. The captain had been ordered to locate a mission site that would be suitable to receive supplies sent from Mexico by the coastal water route from Veracruz, a water route that had proven successful 25 years

After Captain Ramon had commenced his work at Matagorda Bay. Aguayo toured east Texas and successfully reestablished Spanish control over the mission area there. By April, 1722, Aguayo had returned to Bexar. Shortly thereafter, he commenced his trip south from San Antonio across Coleto Creek, through the DeWitt County area, crossing the Guadalupe to Matagorda Bay. Aguayo formally dedicated the mission and presidio in late April. While the Marques was at La Bahia, a vessel he had earlier chartered arrived with supplies from Veracruz, illustrating again the feasibility of that naval resupply route.

The relative military strength of the Presidio La Bahia at that time is indicated by the size of the military force assigned by the Spanish to each presidio in Texas — east Texas presidios were allocated a total of 100 men; La Bahia had 90 and San Antonio received 53. Even these modest numbers were reduced by half over the following decades.

The La Bahia mission and presidio, however, remained on the bay for only four years. In 1726 the mission and presidio were moved to the Guadalupe River near Mission Valley a few miles below the present DeWitt boundary line. Although the Mission at its Garcitas Creek location had been well situated to receive supplies and reinforcements directly by water through Matagorda Bay from Veracruz, it also had been very vulnerable to attacks by the Karankawa Indians who had killed Captain Ramon during an uprising in 1724. The captain was killed in a skirmish that arose while he was engaged in executing a number of local Indians, mostly Indian women and children, whom he held as captives.

The area surrounding the new location on the Guadalupe River Valley, inland 60 miles from the coast, was inhabited principally by the Aranamas, a less militant and more sedentary and agricultural tribe that earlier had sheltered Cabeza de Vaca. The setting was even more peaceful. Mission Valley is well named - a gentle open valley with an easy broad slope rolling to the low Guadalupe River bank, a setting reminiscent of other pictured scenes of a mission positioned to overview the surrounding valley or countryside leading down to a river. The mission and presidio were developed over the following decades to include an impressive dam and irrigation system that extended at least five miles upstream into the DeWitt County area.

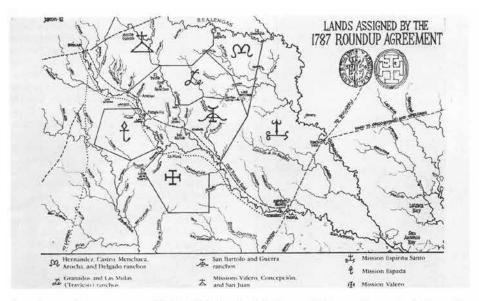

One recommendation to construct the dam and irrigation system originated from Pedro de Rivera, who was requested by the Viceroy in Mexico (or New Spain) to inspect the presidios in Texas in 1728. Rivera visited La Bahia after he had been removed to the location 25 miles inland near present Mission Valley. He recommended that the presidio be reduced in size from 90 men to 40, pointing out that the Aranamas and the other tribes at the new location were peaceful. While at the Presidio La Bahia he ordered the local captain to explore the Guadalupe River and made it navigable so there would be a water link with Veracruz. He also advised the captain to construct a dam so fields up to 15 miles upstream on either side of the river could be irrigated and settlements could be established there. The recommendations for La Bahia and other Texas presidios were accepted by the viceroy. He issued his decree in April, 1729, implementing the recommendation, and specifying the reduction in force.

SPANISH AND FRENCH EXPLORERS

One of the few accounts of the mission life at Mission Valley was written by Charles W. Ramsdall, Jr. He related from extensively cited Spanish sources that over 400 Aranama Indians were gathered at Mission La Bahia when it was first reestablished on the Guadalupe in 1726. He states that the irrigation project on the river was abandoned in 1736 when it was discovered that corn could be grown without irrigation and that the mission prospered with the commencement of the cattle ranch. One of the few documents depicting life at the mission during this period is a report on a celebration

According to this map prepared by the historian Jack Jackson, who has written extensively on the Spanish ranching period, Rancho Viejo was located in DeWitt County on the south bank of the Guadalupe near the Anastasia Crossing where the river was crossed by the La Bahia Road.

Longhorns roamed the prairies held in honor of the Spanish king in February 1748, a year before it was moved to present Goliad. Reportedly the celebration included parades, dancing, duels with wooden weapons, and a modified bullfight with riding and roping bulls. It is conservatively estimated that over 150 unmarked graves of these Indians formally buried by the church fathers between 1726 and 1749 are located in two or more unidentified Indian graveyards in the vicinity of Mission Valley.

The relocation of La Bahia to Mission Valley on the Guadalupe in 1726 and the relocation again later to the San Antonio River near present Goliad were the dominant events affecting the DeWitt County area during the Spanish colonial period. The location of the La Bahia mission required that the La Bahia Road between the mission and the Colorado River cross the DeWitt county area. That road served the mission as the route for commerce and supplies moving northward to East Texas and Louisiana and the road connected with Laredo and northern Mexico, or more precisely identified as the northeastern provinces of New Spain, offering a southern and more direct alternative route between Mexico and the east Texas missions.

The La Bahia Road also served as the route east for cattle drives that were made during the Spanish ranching period. Spanish mission ranching first developed from the need of the newly established frontier missions and presidios, principally these near Bexar and on the Guadalupe River, to become economically self sufficient. After the missions were established, exclusive grazing lands were assigned to each mission to support the inhabitants of the mission and those assigned to duty at the military post.

The La Bahia mission, while located near Mission Valley between 1726 and 1749, occupied one of the most extensive cattle grazing areas ever amassed in Texas covering over 1,000,000 acres between San Antonio River and the Guadalupe River. The mission grazing lands commenced at the point where the two rivers converge about 10 miles inland from the San Antonio Bay, up each of the two rivers for about 60 to 80 miles to points on the two rivers between which the northern boundary was established. The northern boundary was frequently in controversy and was forced southward restricting the mission acreage by the encroachment of private Spanish ranchers. But originally, the northern boundary followed from a point west of Nordheim on the San Antonio River where Ecleto Creek enters the River to several miles above present Gonzales at a location named El Capote for some prominent hills that lie along the Guadalupe near Belmont.

Therefore, during the early Spanish mission and ranching period, the present DeWitt County area south and west of the Guadalupe River was the central part of La Bahia's grazing lands. The county area east of the river was unappropriated Spanish crown lands, occupied often by the Aranamas who had escaped the La Bahia Mission, but under the primary domination of the Apache and Comanche Indians during that early period.

The privatization of Spanish cattle ranching developed as officials from the military presidios retired and wished to remain on the land or during their military service period otherwise sought to raise their own herds. In 1749, under Don Jose de Esandon's comprehensive new mission plan, the Mission La Bahia was moved about 30 miles southwest across Coleto Creek to the San Antonio River. During the same period, a line of private Spanish ranches was being established along the San Antonio River from Bexar south to near present Runge in Karnes County and from there northward along Cibolo Creek.

The relocation of La Bahia in 1749 also coincided generally in time with the increased number of Comanche raids and the celebrated peace accord reached at Bexar between the Spanish authorities and the Apaches. The latter permitted both mission and private ranching activities to be conducted in a relatively unmolested way for only a short period of time. One of the most prominent early private Spanish ranches near the present DeWitt County area was called "Los Corralitos" (Little Pens), located north of Nordheim and Runge.

The principal ranching headquarters for the La Bahia Mission was "Rancho Viejo" (Old Ranch) which remained on the Guadalupe after the mission was moved to the San Antonio River. Rancho Viejo was a typical mission type "rancho" outpost which housed the cattle and livestock operation including the Spanish and more numerous Indian cowboys required to husband the herds of cattle, horses and sheep. The precise location of Rancho Viejo is uncertain but it is thought to be close to the site of the old mission near Mission Valley.

The ranching area between the San Antonio and Guadalupe rivers has been referred to as the cradle of Texas ranching, the land that first produced substantial wealth in Texas — in the form of longhorn cattle, hides, sheep, wool and later mustang horses, some to be sold south in the municipal fairs in Mexico, but most animals to be driven up the La Bahia Road eastward for sale in Louisiana and distribution up the Mississippi and to Florida. One of the earliest dated mission reports on the size of the La Bahia herd places the number of branded cows at 3,220 and the number of sheep at 1,600 in May, 1758. The number of branded cows had reached 16,050 at La Bahia in 1768.

Events in Europe and on the North American continent between 1756 and 1763 changed the adversarial relationship between Spain and France that had been reflected in Texas during the previous 150 years. Spain sided with France and against England in the French and Indian War on the American continent and the Seven Years War in Europe. The Treaty of Paris signed in February, 1763, awarded Spanish West Florida to England. At that time, West Florida included the entire coast of the present Florida panhandle, parts of the coastal and inland areas of present Alabama and Mississippi, plus the east bank of the Mississippi River to a point beyond Natchez. France, as a major force, faded from the Texas Gulf region by relinquishing the west bank of the Mississippi including New Orleans and Louisiana to Spain. No longer was east Texas a buffer area facing the economically aggressive French. Moreover, the coffers in Spain had been drained by the war. The threat to Spanish Texas, for a time, would come from the British who would edge and expand across the Gulf and down the Mississippi. It was, therefore, imperative for Spain to redesign the purpose and arrangement of its missions and presidios in Texas.

The first step in this realignment was to send two inspectors, Father Fray Gaspar Jose de Solis and the Marques de Rubi, to visit and make recommendations concerning the missions and presidios in Texas. These two visits led to one of the earliest written references to the location and identification of a place called Cuero. The word "Cuero" as a geographical point of reference is found in the diary of Father Solis, who in 1767 and 1768 inspected the missions in Texas.

visit first the missions of Rosario and La Bahia on the San Antonio River. The Father then traveled up the San Antonio River to the missions near San Antonio. Lastly, he returned down the La Bahia — San Antonio Road to cross the Guadalupe near present Cuero to follow the La Bahia Road to visit the missions in east Texas. He was instructed also to report on the condition and associated ranching operations of each mission.

It is significant that Father Solis entered Texas from northern Mexico to commence his survey by following the southern leg of the La Bahia Road that crosses the Rio Grande a few miles south of Laredo rather than following the "Camino Real," the major road that entered Texas near present Eagle Pass and continued a more northerly route to San Antonio. By February 26, 1768, the padre had crossed south Texas and was at the Mission Rosario. which was located at that time a few miles south of the La Bahia Mission. Solis had completed his investigation of Rosario and was at the nearby Mission La Bahia by March 6th, where he reported cotton, watermelons, cantaloupes, sweet potatoes, peaches, and figs were under cultivation. Among the 300 Indians at the mission were a large number of Aranamas, the tribe that helped Cabeza de Vaca when he escaped during the winter of 1534.

On March 15, Father Solis left the area near La Bahia to continue his inspection trip up the San Antonio River to the missions near Bexar. Solis was a very exact and an unusually detailed diarist. On the route which followed initially along the present western boundary of DeWitt County, Solis reported seeing a great number of wild animals including wild cattle and horses and many deer, wolves, coyotes, rabbits, and an occasional mountain lion, wild cat, and wild boar. He also saw ducks, geese, turkeys, quail, partridges, hawks and screech owls. The held cattle, Solis said, originated from the herds brought by Governor de Leon about 80 years earlier, in 1589 and 1590.

By early April of 1768, Father Solis had concluded his tour of the missions near Bexar and had commenced his journey toward east Texas, first moving back south along the east bank of the San Antonio River. The father noted that on April 8th, he, his guards and 100 men going to the Presidio of Los Adays in Louisiana were all detained by a fierce norther with freezing rain and snow.

On his trip Father Solis continued to make detailed notes on the names of previously established overnight camps and watering locations visited and of creeks crossed. He specifically mentions in his diary on April 11th, leaving the east bank of the San Antonio River at the ranch "Los Corralitos" and moving along an existing road or broad pathway to the northeast toward the Guadalupe River. The padre passed a landmark grove of live oaks called "Encinas de la Sinfonia" which has been located near Runge by historian Robert H. Thonhoff, and camped on "Cuchiyo Arroyo" (Knife Creek), which has been identified as either Sandies Creek or the upper Coleto Creek in DeWitt County. Sea fish including haddock were abundant there. Here, the party was again hampered by sleet and snow.

On April 15, Father Solis reached the Guadalupe where he noted that the grapevines cover the tree tops, but the grapes (probably the mustang grape) were harsh tasting. Father Solis added that he was confident that the local grape stock could be improved and made palatable. He also added that the wild onion and leafy lettuce made a delicious salad when oil and vinegar were added.

Solis crossed the Guadalupe River by raft accompanied by armed Indians from the La Bahia Mission. He described with admiration the beauty and fertility of the land but also noted the serious illness of one companion, Brother Antonio Casis, caused by poison ivy. The following day was spent by the party on the east bank of the river awaiting the "convoy" (presumably, the 100 soldiers) to pass.

On April 17, Father Solis reported that after crossing the Guadalupe River, they "arrived at Cuero, which is at an oak tree on a bend or corner down the river." The Solis diary translation made by Margaret Kenny Kress notes that Solis arrived at an overnight campsite named Cuero, without making any reference to any directly associated creek.

In fact, the April 16 diary records that after crossing the Guadalupe, most likely at the Governor's Ford near Hochheim, the padre's party camped on the river bank awaiting the company to pass. The following day, the 17th, they moved along the east bank downstream twelve miles past two creeks (most likely Queen's Creek and Cuero Creek) before camping overnight at Cuero where, on the 18th, the father's party seems to have picked up the northern leg of the La Bahia Road above the Guadalupe to follow the road toward the Colorado River and on to east Texas. By the date Solis visited a place on the Guadalupe he called Cuero in 1768, La Bahia had been relocated on the San Antonio River for about 20 years, and the La Bahia Road northward to east Texas as well as southward to Mexico had been well marked. The father consistently refers to following "the road."

Solis suggests that from the use of the Spanish word "Cuero," some location or camp site associated with animal hides or skins on the east bank of the Guadalupe close to the La Bahia Road was the overnight camp used by him on April 17. It was customary for the Spanish to name major rivers or creeks for a prominent church or national figure and to give smaller streams descriptive place-names associated with contemporary local conditions. But the Spanish before the 1760's may not have prepared animal hides or skins on the east bank of the Guadalupe River, an area recognized then as Indian country beyond the operating and grazing lands of La Bahia. However, there had been buffalo and wild longhorn cattle in that area of the river for well over one hundred years. The Aranama Indians, and perhaps other tribes, during that time may have used Cuero Creek and that immediate area as a convenient location to skin animals, both cattle and large game, for their personal use or shelter. Governor Alarcon, fifty years earlier had reported a very sizable community of Indians living just 30 miles upriver, above present Gonzales.

But the creek or location called "Cuero" more likely predates the appearance of both the Spanish explorers and longhorn cattle. "Cuero" probably referred to a location where the Aranamas and other tribes had cured hides of buffalo and smaller game for centuries. Father Massanet reported in 1691 that tribes he met from west Texas and New Mexico, where there were no buffalo, annually visited the Guadalupe area to kill buffalo and tan their hide.

This thought is also supported by the journal of Cabeza de Vaca who related that buffalo, deer and small game were in the Guadalupe River area in the 1530's and that the inland Indian tribes then made leather capes, blankets and straps from animal hides. He reported trading leather straps made by inland tribes for shells and other sea products from the coastal Indians; and during his escape (near the Guadalupe River), he personally engaged in scraping animal skins for his Aranama Indian hosts to cure for leather and for him to obtain scraps of meat to eat.

Having a particular location to prepare animal hides and skins each year would be consistent with the itinerant seasonal life cycle of the local Indian tribes that annually moved on circuit to gather pecans on the Guadalupe (River of Nuts) and to feast on cactus tuna near Corpus Christi. A location customarily used for cleaning and skinning animals and for drying hides and preparing leather would be easily identifiable, and would gravitate toward a special set of natural conditions - first, an abundant supply of accessible local game to kill, abundant fresh water available to clean the game; sharp, preferably flint, rocks to scrape the hides, and motts of live oak trees to provide both strong low branches for stretching and drying the hides and oak bark for curing or tanning the hide for leather.

An area near a creek called "Cuero" met this conditions for some Indian people who were clever enough to produce leather, faithful enough to accept the requirements of the Catholic Church, and tough enough to become Texas first cowboys, but still were not adaptable enough to survive swift and persistent encroachment and avoid extermination. Cuero is one of the few Spanish place names in Texas that has its origin in pre-Spanish Indian culture.

It should be noted that the word "cuera" was also used in Spanish mission days to refer to the protective thick leather jacket worn by presidio soldiers as armor. The soldiers who wore the armor were known as "hombres de cuera."

But Cuero was not only the location identified by a place name by Father Solis along the La Bahia Road east of the Guadalupe in the immediate DeWitt County area. The La Bahia Road by the 1770's had a number of clearly identifiable and well used rest stops and overnight campgrounds that offered fresh water which was essential for the horses and herds being driven. On the first day while still near the DeWitt County area, the party first passed through a rest stop at a location named "Rosebush" (El Rosal). The distinctively large wild rosebushes or rose hedges in eastern DeWitt County were perhaps in early bloom and apparently prevalent over 200 years ago. After overnighting at the campground called Cuero, and passing El Rosal, the padre's party moved northeast twenty miles along the La Bahia Road to camp the following night, on the 18th, at "Father Campa's Pond" (La Mota del Padre Campa), where there was ample fresh water. Twenty miles up the La Bahia Road from the Guadalupe crossing would be near the small branches of the headwaters of Cuero Creek.

The notes written by the father at his overnight camp at Padre Campa's Pond in eastern DeWitt County record that "the road" followed that day led through green and pleasant plains spotted with oaks. Deer, flocks of wild turkeys and quail were in abundance. But, Solis found also poisonous spiders, sluggish water snakes, mites, mosquitoes, gnats, flies, and ticks. In his concluding comments on the area he affirms that despite the nuisances mentioned, the air was pure and climate was temperate, healthful and mild.

Father Solis and his party continued on to east Texas and visited the missions near Nacogdoches during the months of May and June Father Solis commenced his westward tripreturning to the Guadalupe to visit again the La Bahia mission after his visit to the east Texas missions was completed. The father's party was intercepted by a large number of very hostile Indians near the Colorado River Only with the protection of his Indian guides from La Bahia was the party permitted to pass. The hostile Indians encountered by the padre were identified as Aranamas, many of whom had escaped from the La Bahia mission.

On July 15, the father returned to El Rosal to camp overnight before reaching the Guadalupe the following day on his return trip to La Bahia. His diary reference to the location where he camped overnight cites "Pielago del Rosal" meaning pond or a lagoon associated with rosebushes.

Similar diary references to rest stops, overnight watering camps and creeks are found in the diary recorded during the Marques de Rubi's journey from California through Bexar to east Texas that crossed the DeWitt County area during the year before Solis made his journey. Rubi took with him two experienced engineers, one of whom was Nicolas de Lafora, who carefully mapped the area of south and east Texas and maintained a detailed diary.

Many of the Lafora's diary notations of place names and distances traveled are similar to those of Solis. In August, 1767, the Rubi expedition left San Antonio and followed the same route that Solis traced the following spring. The diary entries record Rubi following the east bank of the San Antonio River south, crossing first the Cibolo Creek and camping the next night, on August 26th, at the mouth of Cleto Creek on the San Antonio River. The following day the group changed course, moving in a north by northeast direction for 18 miles to "Cuchillo" Creek (probably a northern fork of present Coleto Creek, near Yorktown). Twenty miles further east Rubi crossed the Guadalupe at a location that the diarist called "Vado del Gobernador" (the Governor's Ford), presumably the crossing near Hochheim. Two governors had earlier reportedly used the Hochheim area as the Guadalupe crossing. Governor de Leon crossed at Hochheim in both 1689 and 1690; Governor Alarcon almost lost his life at the crossing in 1718.

According to Lafora, "Cuervo" Creek was crossed ten miles east of the Guadalupe on the next day. Following the road Solis would also later follow, Rubi passed "El Rosal" on the La Bahia Road fifteen miles beyond "Cuervo Creek" and then the Pond of Padre Campa two miles further along the road.

In October, on Rubi's return trip westward back toward the La Bahia mission, the party camped overnight on October 27th at the watering station "El Rosal." Twenty-five miles down the La Bahia Road the following day, Lafora records that the Guadalupe was reached but the river was very high. The party then moved five miles downstream to a place on the river Lafora called "El Pielago" (a pond or large lagoon). This was at a point where the river forms a semi-circle, according to Lafora. A later map of the La Bahia Road prepared by the Texas Land Office in 1870 shows the road intersecting the Guadalupe at a horseshoe bend near a large associated lagoon. Rubi's rossing of the Guadalupe westward apparently was made several miles downstream rom the Governor's Ford, which he had used earlier. Most likely, Rubi used the Anastasia Crossing on the road to the La Bahia Mission.

On October 30, Rubi's party continued moving through DeWitt County south of the Guadalupe along the La Bahia Road passing several creeks identified by Lafora as "Las Mojarras" The Sea Fish), "El Bagre" (The Catfish), "Las Cruces" (The Crosses), and "La Cabecera" (The Headboard). La Bahia mission was reached the following day. Rubi's report confirmed the presence of members of both the Aranama and Tamique Indian tribes at the mission, but was generally discouraging. Without any extended delay, Rubi was shortly on his journey following the La Bahia Road to Laredo and into Mexico.

The third visitor to the DeWitt County area during the 1767-1768 period was a young 20year old Frenchman, Pierre Marie Francois de Pages. He was on a personal journey rather than an official state or church visit, traveling with heavy escort, from the Presidio Los Adaes in western Louisiana to San Antonio, and then on to Rheda near Laredo on the Rio Grande. During the fall of 1767, Pages crossed the Guadalupe apparently along the southern route as did Solis and Rubi. His notes reflect that after crossing the Guadalupe by raft on the road to San Antonio, he encountered "plantations of Indian corn" with extensive herds and flocks. He also observed wild myrtle bushes or trees which are found today near the Guadalupe and San Marcos rivers. The cultivation of crops undertaken by the local Indian population near the Guadalupe apparently contrasted starkly with the absence of any agricultural interests shown by the Indians near Adaes. The local Indians living west of the Guadalupe were "not so miserably idle as those at Adaes," reported Pages.

Contemporary topographical maps also suggest that a more open, less wooded, route from San Antonio to east Texas would have been to travel from San Antonio first south along the San Antonio River to the point where Ecleto Creek enters the river, then in a northeastward direction crossing the Guadalupe at either the Governor's Ford or the La Bahia Road ford, crossing Cuero Creek and on eastward crossing the Colorado at La Grange. This route, referred to as the "Southern Loop" by several Texas historians was used extensively during the middle and latter part of the eighteenth century to reduce the risk of Indian surprise attacks in the heavily wooded areas that were encountered on the more direct road from Bexar to the Colorado River.

The cattle herds of the missions and private ranches continued to suffer heavily from the Comanche raids during the 1770's. By that time, a stockade named El Fuerte del Cibolo or Fort Cibolo with twenty soldiers was located on the Cibolo Creek about ten miles northeast of DeWitt County to protect local ranchers and allow them to recover some formerly unprotected ranches that they had been forced to abandon because of Indian raids. The small military post served also as a temporary refuge for the 160 Spanish families who were ordered to abandon the east Texas missions in 1773 and to move to Bexar.

During this period of Comanche unrest, and particularly after Spain declared war on England in May, 1779 and became allied with forces supporting the American Revolution, the demand for beef to feed the expanding number of Spanish troops in Louisiana provided a profitable market for the mission herds near the Guadalupe. A serious beef scarcity developed in Spanish Louisiana between 1779 and 1782 during which time the Governor of Louisiana, Bernardo de Galvez, with up to 7,000 soldiers, launched a series of successful military attacks against the British strongholds up the Mississippi River and on the Gulf Coast including Natchez (July, 1779), Baton Rouge (July, 1779), Mobile (March, 1780), and Pensacola (May, 1781).

The Guadalupe River valley during the years of the American Revolution was active serving as the collection point for the first large cattle drives to Louisiana. The earliest out-of-state drives were organized in 1779, almost a hundred years before the much larger drives involving many more cattle over much longer distances were made from the DeWitt County area to Missouri and Kansas after the Civil War

One of the early drives was organized in May, 1780, by a resident of La Bahia who had received permission to drive to Louisiana 1,500 cattle gathered on La Bahia pasture lands near Arroyo de los Nogales, a tributary of Sandies Creek. This drive was made at the request of General Galvez after he had taken Mobile from the British but before he had launched his even larger attack on Pensacola, then the capital of West Florida. But the cattle drive was attacked by a band of Comanche warriors near Sandies Creek, and the herd was disbursed. This raid triggered a reported shootout or skirmish with the Comanches at a mustang corral located on the south bank of the Guadalupe River in DeWitt County in late June, 1780. The raid also illustrates how dominant the Comanches had become by this time. As the one hundred plus Comanche warriors rode along the high banks and watched boldly from across the river, the numerically overwhelmed Spanish troops and cowboys carefully measured the opposing force and singularly resolved the dispute by retiring without getting wet or firing a shot.

The cattle drives continued during the years 1779 to 1782, using La Bahia area as a principal assembly point according to the historian Robert R. Thonhoff, who was written extensively on this period. The drives would be collected near Rancho Viejo perhaps using the horseshoe bend which forms a natural corral on the southern bank of the Guadalupe leading to the La Bahia Road ford. Soldiers from Bexar, La Bahia and the small outpost fort or stockade on Cibolo Creek named El Fuerte del Cibolo would ride escort. But the mission Indians predominantly were the cowboys. Between the Guadalupe and the Colorado Rivers was one of the most dangerous stretches of the drive. "El Monte del Diablo" was feared by both the Indian herd drivers and Spanish military escorts because the high ridge was used by the Comanches as a camp and observation post from which to attack the drives along this stretch. Military records confirm that some of the Spanish troops in Texas remained to fight with Galvez, and that a small number of Americans fought with Galvez at Mobile.

The last large Texas herd, one exceeding 1,000 head, was gathered to be shipped to General Galvez's army under the direction of Antonio de la Garza, a citizen of La Bahia. The roundup occurred between Sandies Creek and the Guadalupe River in the spring of 1782. Although this was several months after the surrender of British General Cornwallis, Galvez was still preparing for his next military venture against the British, the invasion of Jamaica. Estimates of the number of cattle driven from Spanish mission and private ranch lands between the San Antonio and Guadalupe Rivers to Louisiana to feed Spanish troops fighting the British and in support of the American Revolution during the early 1780's range from 10,000 to 15,000 head.

Galvez reclaimed from the British the Gulf coastal lands lost to the British at the conclusion of the Seven Years War twenty years earlier. The contribution made by Spain to the success of the American Revolution has been summarized by R. Ernest and Trevor M. Dupuy, scholars of the Revolutionary period, as follows: "France, and to a lesser degree Spain, were thus enabled to project their land and sea power to the American continent and to the West Indies, to give direct and indirect assistance to the Americans which was probably decisive in shaping the outcome of the Revolution." The Spanish General Galvez became, or at least should be recognized as, a hero of the American Revolution, successfully driving the British from the Gulf while depleting British military resources and occupying the attention of their navy and limited armed forces.

By 1787 the private ranchers near Bexar, with both church sponsorship and direct participation by the La Bahia mission, organized the largest area roundup of cattle ever conducted in the region. The lands included in the roundup, according to the Texas historian Jack Jackson, stretched over 100 miles from Bexar to the Gulf Coast — all of present Karnes and Wilson Counties and up to half of DeWitt, Victoria, Gonzales, Guadalupe, Goliad, Bexar and Atascosa Counties. The results of the roundup illustrated not only how the herds had suffered from out-of-state shipments and Indian raids but also how the private ranches by that time dominated the mission ranch operations. The dominance of the La Bahia ranching operations over those of the Bexar missions, which were nearing the point of being secularized, could also be seen. Out of the total number of about 7,500 cattle counted, the several independent ranches identified 6,000 head of their own and La Bahia identified only 1,500.

By 1790 the Louisiana cattle trade from Texas had ceased. The missions of Bexar were fully secularized by 1793, and the control over Bexar mission grazing lands was transferred to private Spanish ranchers. This development brought the emancipation of the Bexar mission Indians, who were declared to have most of the rights of Spanish citizens. However, the La Bahia missions, which included the newer missions of Rosario and Refugio, were not then secularized. They were, however, on the decline. In 1790, only 124 Indians resided at the three missions, and the missions controlled a herd of less than 2,000 cattle compared to the once huge herd that exceeded 40,000.

During the early 1790's, the east side of the Guadalupe River was first opened for private Spanish ranching operations and the ranching family of Simon Francisco Arocha established one of the first spreads on the left bank. But the large cattle exports were replaced in the 1790's with mustang drives from the same grazing grounds west of the Guadalupe that had produced the cattle drives fifteen years earlier. The La Bahia Road was used during the final years of the decade for the mustang drives Puelles' map prominently identifies "el Cuchiyo" (Knife Creek) as present day Sandies Creek flowing from the west into the right bank of the Guadalupe River a short distance upriver from and "el Cuero" (Cuero Creek) flowing through the eastern county area into the left bank. On the 1807 map, the La Bahia Road is identified as originating in Laredo, crossing south Texas past the Nueces River and through "Bahia" on the San Antonio River, to "el Cuchiyo," the Guadalupe River, "el Cuero" and then on to the "La Baca," "Navidad, "Colorado," "Brazos," "Trinidad" to "Nacodoches."

An accurate perception of how the Spaniards pictured the Texas coastal region at the beginning of the nineteenth century is found in maps prepared by the Spanish map makers during the period. One of the earliest map references to Cuero Creek is found on the 1807 map of the Texas coastal area prepared by Jose Maria Puelles entitled "Mapa Geografico de la Provincia de Texas." The map was contained in a report filed by Padre Puelles when he was a Franciscan friar stationed at Nacogdoches.

Shortly after Puelles map of Texas was published in 1807, the American explorer Z.M. Pike was sent by the President of the United States to explore the newly acquired but unsurveyed lands included in the Louisiana Purchase. Initially following the Arkansas River from the Mississippi to the headwaters of the river in Colorado, Pike explored parts of the present states of Arkansas, Oklahoma, and into Colorado, locating the mountain peak later named in his honor. During the following winter, Pike was rescued or captured by a Spanish military unit in neighboring New Mexico, and he was taken to Mexico City. On Pike's return trip across Texas back to Louisiana, and home, he left San Antonio in mid-June, 1808, and crossed the Cibolo Creek south of New Braunfels, and crossed the San Marcos above Gonzales closer to Luling. He made only a few comments about the area noting the presence of large bodies of Spanish soldiers along the road which he thought were present as a consequence of the simmering disputes between Spain and the United States.

Shortly after the turn of the century, the Spanish government first formally authorized the establishment of a city in the general area of DeWitt County, a few miles above present Gonzales on the San Marcos River. San Marcos de Neve was organized in 1808 by Texas' first empresario, Felipe de la Portilla, who brought Mexican families from present Matamoros to locate on the ford of the San Marcos River used by the Camino Real. This was on the route pioneered by Teran and Massanet in 1961 across the San Marcos River in northern Gonzales County near the hot springs identified by Father Massanet on the journey and also near the large Indian village that Alarcon found in the present Palmetto State Park area. The city reached a population of over 80 but was abandoned as a result of a series of devastating floods and Indian raids.

The presence of large droves of mustangs in the DeWitt County area at the commencement of the 19th century attracted not only Spanish interest in exporting horses to Louisiana but also attracted the interest of several Indian tribes, particularly the Comanches, who were dependent on the animals for mobility and the pursuit of their preferred range animals, the buffalo. The horse only stimulated their aggressiveness. This increased aggressiveness by the Comanches, as reflected in the boldness and frequency of their raids during the early 19th century, coincided with the decline of Spanish influence over Texas and the rise of revolutionary moments in Mexico.

Father Hidalgo first tolled the church bell for the Mexican Revolution in 1810. The revolutionary spirit reached the DeWitt County area first when the 500 man Magee-Gutierrez Expedition crossed at the Anastasia Crossing of the Guadalupe marching south on the La Bahia Road from Nacogdoches to attack the presidio at La Bahia in early November, 1812. As the name given the expedition suggests, the military force was composed of both Mexican republican revolutionaries led by the former Mexian official, Jose Bernardo Gutierrez de Lara, and American adventures led initially by former West Point graduate and U.S. Army officer, Augustus Magee.

One of the American officers on the Expedition, Captain Josiah Taylor, crossed the Guadalupe along the La Bahia Road and later remembered the land located on the north bank of the ford. Captain Taylor distinguished himself in the Mexican revolutionary cause during the expedition and was so honored by being presented the sword of surrender of the City of Bexar from the royalist Spanish Governor on April 1, 1813. Captain Taylor had helped assure victory in the battle for the provincial capital city of Bexar by leading the raid on the royalists cavalry herd on the evening before the day of battle, capturing 60 guards and 300 horses at the Battle of Rosillo outside Bexar. The captain, however, was very seriously wounded in the Battle of Medina, in which the revolutionaries were soundly defeated a few months after the victory at Bexar, and Taylor was fortunate then to leave Texas alive.

Fifteen years later, Josiah Taylor returned to Texas, became a new colonist with Green DeWitt and applied to the Mexican government for a land grant of the property in DeWitt County he had seen in 1812 on the north bank of the La Bahia Road river crossing of the Guadalupe. The new Mexican government remembered Taylor's early service record in support of the Mexican Revolution and granted the property to his widow, Hebzebeth Taylor, in 1831. The legal instruments of Mexican title, including Green DeWitt's sworn statement citing Josiah's distinguished military service at Bexar to the Mexican revolutionary cause, noted that the boundary of the tract included the La Bahia Road. The ford of the river used by the road was referred to in the deed as the Anastasia Crossing.

There were no significant mission ranching operations from La Bahia after the Magee-Guierrez expedition occupied the mission and fort during the fall and winter of 1813. By 1814, hostile Indians had reduced La Bahia to ruins and the mission effectively was abandoned. The sacking of La Bahia by Indians in 1814, after almost a century of service, signaled an increase in the destructive power and mobility of the dominant Indian tribes. During the following decades the neighboring communities of Gonzales, Victoria and Linnville would be established as San Marcos de Neve had been earlier only to be attacked by Indians and then later either be reassembled or abandoned.

The lands of DeWitt county remained largely uneffected by any Spanish colonizing influence during the last few years of the decade preceding the close of the Spanish Colonial period and the raising of the Mexican green, white, and red flag of independence over the DeWitt County area in the 1820's.

EARLY SETTLEMENT

The Mexican government offered extraordinary inducements to the people of the United States to settle in Texas. In the early 1820's Texas was a vast unsettled wilderness except for Spanish missions around which clustered a few settlers. Over this vast domain roamed twenty two tribes of Indians.

The country was beautiful. It's warm climate, clear streams, vast herds of wild game and nutritious grasses made it a veritable paradise to look upon.

Soon the restless American pioneers began to pour in. James Norman Smith, an early settler, was later to describe DeWitt County: "I told of the beauties of the Guadalupe River and valley and told of its beautiful scenery. I told of the prairies all covered with lovely flowers, all colors and varieties; the large spreading, shady live oak trees many with boughs bending under the weight of numerous clusters of delicious looking grapes; the river bottom covered with large pecan trees. I said when the pecans were ripe the ground would literally be covered with the largest size of these nuts. Numerous cattle were thriving on the best of mesquite grass. These herds of cattle grazed over the wide extended prairies. There were wild mustang horses in droves of hundreds which with their different leaders would make the ground of the prairies tremble under the weight of their flight. The wild deer abounded with any number of herds of five hundred or more in droves. I told all this to folks from Kentucky and suggested that they should visit Texas and DeWitt County.

The history of present DeWitt County actually begins with the coming of the colonists. In May 1828, when Stephen F. Austin secured confirmation of his right to inherit the colonization contract granted earlier to his father, there were in Mexico City other would-be empresarios seeking to have their contracts confirmed. One of these was Green B. DeWitt, who was born in Kentucky September 16, 1797. He moved to Missouri in 1819 settling in St. Louis County and later to Ralls County where he was elected sheriff. He came to Mexico from Missouri as early as 1822. But before DeWitt could obtain his contract, the laws under which he had applied were changed. A new national colonization law was passed in August 1824, and a new colonization law for the Mexican state of Coahuila and Texas followed in March of the next year. Both of these laws affected the territory in which DeWitt hoped to found his colony. Austin, having made friends with DeWitt while they were both waiting for their contracts, kindly recommended him to Baron de Bastrop, then a member of the state congress of Coahuila and Texas. This recommendation, no doubt, was instrumental in securing for DeWitt an early confirmation of his contract in accordance with the new laws. The grant, which he finally secured April 15, 1825, allowed him to introduce 400 families. Following are the boundaries of the DeWitt grant: "On the north of the old San Antonio road, on the east the Lavaca River and from its head a line extended in the same direction as the general course of that river up to the old San Antonio Road, on the west a line commencing on said river two leagues west of the Guadalupe River and running toward the coast at a distance of two leagues west of said river location. This area embraces in a general way the counties of DeWitt, Gonzales, Guadalupe, Caldwell, and parts of Comal, Lavaca, Fayette, and Victoria."

For every 100 families introduced, up to 800, DeWitt was to receive premium lands amounting to five sitios of grazing land, and five labors of other lands, at least one-half non-irrigable. (A sitio is 4,428.4 acres and a labor is one twenty-fifth of a sitio.) The empresario was required to bring in at least 100 families to maintain the validity of his contract.

After obtaining his contract DeWitt employed James Kerr, another Kentuckian, then a member of the Missouri Senate, as his survevor general. Kerr was to select the site for a town, survey the lands and to manage the establishment of a colony. Kerr left Missouri and came to Texas, bringing with him DeWitt's first settlers. Major Kerr was accompanied by the afterwards famous Deaf Smith, Bazil Durbin, John Wrightman, - Strickland, James Musick, and Guron Hinds to act as chainmen, rodmen, or hunters. Kerr selected a beautiful site near the Guadalupe River for the town and named it Gonzales for Rafael Gonzales, who was at that time governor of Coahuila and Texas. In August 1825, he established the first settlement on the DeWitt grant, near where the town of Gonzales now stands. The young settlement, the first American one on the Guadalupe River, had a short life. While Kerr was absent on a business trip, the majority of the settlers went to a dance on the Colorado to celebrate the fourth of July, leaving a few of the colonists remaining at Gonzales. The travelers were attacked by Indians at night, who drove off their horses and left them stranded to walk back to Gonzales. Upon their return they found their homes partially burned and deserted except for one man who had been scalped and was dead. The frightened settlers then fled toward their original port of entry, the mouth of the Lavaca River. About six miles above tidewater they found a small group of DeWitt's settlers who had just arrived in Texas, and who were camping for a short rest period before journeying to the inland center of the colony. These later arrivals and the refugees from Gonzales formed a temporary settlement which came to be known as the Old Station.

When Kerr returned and learned of the raid he decided that his advanced position on the Guadalupe River was untenable with the Indians so unfriendly. He withdrew his settlement to a point nearer other colonists on the west bank of the Lavaca, Old Station. The name "Kerr" was later given to a newly organized county because he was the first American to settle on the upe River.

Kerr continued his survey of DeWitt's colony using the Old Station as his base. DeWitt arrived there in 1827 bringing his family. The little colony harvested its first crop of corn that year. The major part of the colonists food consisted of wild game which was plentiful. Major Kerr remained the surveyor of DeWitt's colony for several years and also became the surveyor of DeLeon's colony and surveyed most of its land including the city of Victoria.

One event that made a lasting impression on Kerr's daughter, Mary Margaret, the grandmother of DeWitt County's late Newton M. Crain, was an occasion when her father took her for a ride on his horse, holding her in front of him on his saddle. Suddenly a small party of unfriendly Indians appeared between them and the settlement, and with wild whoops began the chase. Major Kerr's horse was much faster than the Indian ponies, however, the country was brushy and the little girl was suffering from the hard ride. Out of sight of the Indians the father deposited the child in a thick clump of bushes with the admonition to lie there until he returned no matter what might occur. He then led the Indians in a wide circle and headed for his nearest neighbors. Now with his reinforcements the Indians escaped and Major Kerr found his child safe because she had not stirred when the Indians rushed by.

In early January 1827 DeWitt, who had been absent from the fledgling young colony, sent a number of men to the Gonzales site to begin construction of a fort. The group, under the supervision of Byrd Lockhart, labored on the fort until February. Baptist Lacount, one of the members of the work party, arrived at "Old Station" that month with a report that all work in the area had ceased. The men there were talking of leaving since there was a good possibility of renewed Indian attacks. It seems that a party of Comanche and Waco Indians attacked a party of Lipan and Tonkawa Indians nine miles from Gonzales on the San Marcos River. The Lipans and Tonkawas were badly defeated, losing many men and horses. The surviving Indians retreated down river hoping to find safety in De Leon's colony and told DeWitt's work party of the presence of the Comanches.

Lockhart apparently dissuaded the men from abandoning the site for by April 1827 the fort was completed. Probably as important as the good news of the completion of the fort was Lockhart's report that all was quiet in the area and no Indians had been seen since that day in February. Obviously DeWitt always intended to locate in Gonzales but had been waiting for an opportune time. Now that the fort was built, DeWitt and his colonists abandoned "Old Station" by the end of December 1827. Possibly DeWitt moved the colony before the June date so as to avoid any further problems with the Mexican authorities over their fear of contraband trade by settlers and a dispute with DeLeon over the location of the colony boundaries. DeWitt also removed the colony, so he could begin the actual settlement of his grant and hopefully qualify for his "premium lands".

Gonzales was rebuilt a little later, and gradually became the most important point in the colony. For many years the colonists in the outlying portions of the grant were harassed by the Towakana Indians from the interior, and by the Karankawas, who seldom bothered the main settlement.

Neither the Old Station nor Gonzales was in the limits of what is now DeWitt County.nor was a settlement established within those limits. E.Z. Rather's DeWitt's Colony, lists 199 grants were taken by 179 persons under Green DeWitt's empresario entitlement or directly from the government of Mexico. The dates of arrival for these first settlers vary from March 5, 1825 to December 15, 1831. Titles granted for both DeWitt colonists and the direct grantees range from April 15, 1831 to July 10, 1835. Of these 179, 39 grantees took up titles in what is now DeWitt County. Only four of these tracts did not include Guadalupe River frontage and all were laid out in regard to water availability whether river or creek. These thirty nine grantees were as follows.

K.W. Barton, July 11, 1821; Si Bateman, Apr. 23, 1821; Valentine Bennet, Nov. 8, 1831; Arthur Burns, July 9, 1831; Squire Burns, July 10, 1831; R.H. Tumlinson, June 15, 1831; Joseph Tumlinson, Aug. 8, 1831; Tobias Wentworth, May 18, 1832. Also included were Jose Antonio Valdez and William Cobbey.

One of DeWitt's colonists, Arthur Burns, with his wife and five children settled in 1826 on his headright grant of 4605 acres on Irish Creek near the Guadalupe River south of present day Cuero in DeWitt County. That same year he built a house which was probably the only dwelling between the settlements of Gonzales and Victoria, more than 50 miles apart. Their son, Columbus Burns, was born in Gonzales in 1829, where his mother could be cared for by a physician. Columbus Burns has always been said to be the Anglo child born in DeWitt's Colony.

Although 166 land titles had been issued to settlers introduced by DeWitt, his contract expired April 15, 1831, and his petition for extra time was refused. At this point he had received premium lands for only 100 families. Saddened and completely disillusioned by the failure of his colony and his own financial reverses, he went to Monclova, Mexico, hoping to secure the lands due him for his other 66 families. Without having accomplished anything in this regard, DeWitt died in Mexico on May 18, 1835. Much of his unoccupied land reverted to the Mexican government and was later granted to other empresarios.

In 1832, the year after the expiration date of DeWitt's contract, the colony was organized as a municipality and given control of its own governmental affairs, which until this time had been controlled by authorities at San Felipe de Austin. Ezekiel Williams was appointed first alcalde. During the period of the municipality at least two men from DeWitt County proper served in official positions. In 1833 Charles Lockhart was elected second "regidor" and in 1835 Joseph Clements served in the same office.

DeWitt's Colony is generally considered after Austin's to have been the most successful of the Anglo American colonies in Texas. Local government in DeWitt's Colony was similar to other settlements in Texas though DeWitt's personal influence seems to have been weaker than Austin's.

An August 8, 1830 letter in which Catherine Barton Lockhart writes to her mother in Ohio, referring to conditions in what is now DeWitt County, describes the climate as being extremely pleasant with warm sun in the months of June, July, and August and a constant pleasant breeze flowing. She also reported that corn, sugar cane and cotton do well with little labor. Her greatest regret seemingly was being separated from most of her family, except for a brother, Kimber Barton, and the prohibition of the Protestant Religion. In her letter she tells about William Lockhart being appointed surveyor and "he and Brother' Kimber Marton have been constantly employed because immigration was so great". The surveyor received four dollars for measuring a square league "which in good running takes one day to a day and a half". She happily reported that they had a teacher to teach the children. Judging from the location of the surveys, Catherine and her family were near the area of Concrete and her brother's family south on the Guadalupe in the Hell's Gate river area.

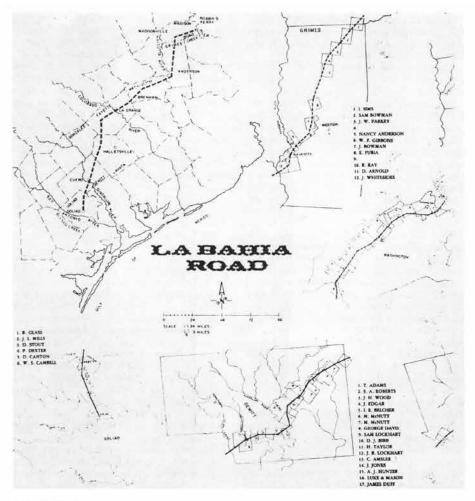

TEXAS REVOLUTION

When the first signs of open rebellion began to show themselves in Texas, the DeWitt colonists were quick to declare their loyalty to the Mexican nation. On January 27, 1827, in a meeting held at "Old Station", they drew up resolutions condemning the actions of the Edwards brothers and the movement known as the Fredonian Rebellion. But in 1832 a delegate was sent to the convention at San Felipe de Austin in October which was called to consider grievances of the colonists against Mexico. By April 1833 a second convention of the people of Texas assembled in San Felipe de Austin. George Washington Davis was a delegate to this convention which drafted a "Constitution for the proposed State of Texas to be forwarded to the Mexican Congress for approval". Sam Houston served as committee chairman of the convention to establish Texas into a Mexican state independent of Coahuila. The political relationship between the colonists and the Mexican authorities continued to deteriorate and by 1835 the colonists felt some action was necessary.

In 1831 the Mexican Government had given

DeWitt's Colony a valuable four pounder cannon which was kept at Gonzales. Late in September 1835 a Mexican force of one hundred fifty men, was sent from San Antonio to Gonzales to seize the cannon and remove it from the Texians because of the continuing discontentment among the settlers. A small group of men in Gonzales held up the Mexican force at the Guadalupe River until reinforcements arrived from other settlements. The following 18 men were the patriots who defended the cannon: Albert Martin (Captain), Mr. Darst, Winslow Turner, W.W. Arrington, Graves Fulcher, Geo. W. Davis, John Lowell, James Hinds, Thos. Miller, Valentine Bennet, Ezekiel Williams, Simeon Bateman, J.D. Clements, Almeron Dickinson, Benj. Fuqua, Thos. Jackson, Chas. Mason and Almon Cottle. On the second of October 1835 the Texians, having crossed the Guadalupe River the previous night, attacked the Mexican force and drove it back to San Antonio. This was the first armed clash between the Texians and the Mexicans and the beginning of the War for Texas Independence and is often referred to as the 'Lexington of the Texas Revolution".

Captain John York, later to found the town of Yorktown, was in command of a company of Scouts who saw service in the storming and capture of Bexar December 5-10, 1835. He and his men volunteered to follow the intrepid Ben Milam in storming the well fortified place, defended by General Cos and about 1500 Mexicans. James Madison Bell, corporal under Captain York, was beside Ben Milam when he fell December 7 or 8. Milam had sent Bell under fire with a message and Bell had returned with an answer when Milam was instantly killed by a rifle ball. The battle ended December 10th with the surrender of Cos to the citizens army of Texians. Valentine Bennet, "one of the old eighteen at Gonzales", later to serve Texas in many ways, also served at Bexar as did David Murphree and Creed Taylor.

The Texans met several times and attemp ted to organize a government. Santa Anna and his large army was in Texas to force the colonists either to submit to his dictatorship of flee beyond the Sabine River.

The Convention met at Washington-on-the Brazos. A cold norther swept down as the meetings opened. On the second day of the session, March 2, 1836 the Declaration of Independence was adopted by a unanimous vote. Having declared themselves free of Mexi co, these Texans began to write the Constitu tion for the Republic of Texas. It came not a minute too soon as the siege of the Alamo had begun in late February, 1836. A messenger from the Alamo reached the little town o Gonzales February 24. Though no one planned to leave the Alamo, a small band of men from DeWitt's colony left Gonzales to join their comrades at the Alamo. Through the dim light of the early morning of the first of March thirty-two men from Gonzales, surged into the Alamo. After the tragic fall of the Alamo March 6, 1836 these thirty-two volunteers from the DeWitt Colony who died at the Alamo were memorialized as the "Immortal Thirty-Two." Their names and ages are: Issac Baker 32 John Cane (Cain) 34; George Cottle 38; David Cummings 27; Squire Damon (Daymon) 28 Jacob Darst 48; John Davis 25; William Dearduff; Charles Despallier, 24; William Fitzbaugh (Fishbaugh); John Flanders 36; Dolphin Ward Floyd 29; Galba Fuqua 16; John E. Garvin 27; John E. Gaston 17; James George 34; Thomas Jackson; Johnny Kellogg 19; Andrew Kent 38; George C. Kimball (Kimble) 26; John G. King; William P. King 24; Jonathan L. Lindley 31; Captain Albert Martin 30; Jessie McCoy; Thomas Miller 41; Isaac Milsap; George Neggan 28; William E. Summers 24; George W. Tumlinson 27; Robert White, 30; and Claiborne Wright 26.

James L. Allen, was also a defender at the Alamo until March 5, 1836, when William B. Travis dispatched him as a courier with a final appeal to Fannin at Goliad for aid. By this time the most experienced scouts were all gone from the Alamo. However, 16 year old Jim Allen, in his words, "a marvelous rider, and with a first rate mare", was sent through the gates.

John W. Smith gets all the glory and deserves much of it, for he carried Travis' last dispatch to the Convention on the night of March 3. According to Lord's A Time to Stand and other local stories another messenger left later with a final appeal to Fannin. Jim Allen reached Goliad on March 8 and his arrival is noted in two different letters dated March 9, 1836. Allen evidently left the Alamo considerably after Smith for the report he carried is much more gloomy. This last courier, 16 year old James L. Allen, rode from the Alamo after nightfall March 5, through the Mexican lines. Allen later served as a scout with Deaf Smith and in the Texas Rangers. According to The Texas Handbook, Allen served as mayor of Indianola later joining the Confederate Army. He was captured and imprisoned during the Civil War at Pass Cavallo. Allen owned a stage line which ran from Indianola through DeWitt County. He and his family moved to DeWitt County in 1867 and lived between Hochheim and Concrete, near the head waters of the Cuero Creek, until his death in 1901. He is buried in the Allen family cemetery near HochOther DeWitt County men who gave their ives at the Alamo were William Dearduff, Thomas R. Miller, and Jesse McCoy, for whom McCoy Creek was named.

News of the disaster spread panic through the settlements. Settlers gathered their families to move out of the way of the Mexican army. This is often referred to as "The Runaway Scrape". Arthur Burns was asked by General Houston to organize and assist in the novement of the Texian families to safety from the local area.

Although present day DeWitt County was centrally located with regard to the historic pattlefields of the Revolution (south of Gonzales, north of Goliad, east of San Antonio, and west of San Jacinto) it was the scene of no important battle. It was, however, the highway raveled by many of the most important people of the period. Sam Houston crossed the Guadalupe on his way from Refugio to San Felipe and spent the night in the home of Arthur Burns. Santa Anna passed through the northern tip of the county enroute to San Jacinto. People of the area were part of the hardships and struggle for independence of their beloved Texas.

The Washington-on-the-Brazos Convention, after declaring Texas independent of Mexico March 2, continued with its business of establishing a legitimate government. Sam Houston left the convention and hurried back to Gonzales where he heard of the fall of the Alamo. He organized the ragged Texas army to meet the Mexican army. A short time before his death, Valentine Bennet, who had participated at Valesco, Gonzales, Concepcion Bexar, San Jacinto, and had been a Santa Fe prisoner, served as a commissioned officer 1835 to 1843 in the Texas Army, was asked by a group of officials who were arguing about what was the official uniform of the Texas Revolution. The question was asked, "Major Bennet, you have probably seen more different commands of the Texas army and have known them under more different circumstances than any other man in Texas. What was the official uniform of the soldiers of the Texas Revolution?" Bennet's reply was, "Rags, sir, just rags; nine out of every ten soldiers who fought in the Texas Revolution wore this same uniform, and sire, it was a fighting uniform."

Fannin's group at Goliad was massacred on Palm Sunday, March 27, 1836. Thomas York, of DeWitt County, died at Goliad. O.H. Perry Davis of Fannin's command was among the few who survived. This came three weeks after the fall of the Alamo. Nothing more was needed to arouse the Texans. "Remember the Alamo! Remember Goliad!" was to be the battle cry at San Jacinto.

The spring of 1836 was extremely wet, and the normally balmy days were punctuated by repeated northers. Hardly a day passed without cold rain that pelted the people mercilessly. Houston's ragtag bunch of poorly armed, untrained men, many concerned about their families who traveled with them, were mainly bound together by desperation over their common plight — fear of the Mexicans and Houston's iron will and personal magnetism.

On April 12, 1846 the Battle of San Jacinto ended in a victory for Sam Houston's army. Among the recorded heroes of San Jacinto from the DeWitt area were: David Murphree, John F. Pettus, Thomas H. and James Madison Bell, Joseph Kent, Berry Doolittle, Allen Caruthers, Robert J. Kleberg, John McCrabb, James J.

Tumlinson, Louis von Roeder, Albert von Roeder, Daniel Boone Friar, John York, Joseph Tumlinson, Valentine Bennet, George Washington and Daniel Davis.

Dr. Robert Peebles of DeWitt County is credited with saving the Land Office papers of Stephen F. Austin's several colonies.

The ten years of Texas Independence were fraught with constant Indian attacks and fear of Mexican invasion. John Henry Brown wrote of a frightening event that occurred on the west side of the Guadalupe River across from present day Cuero. In October 1838 Matilda, thirteen year old daughter of Andrew Lockhart, and three small children belonging to the Mitchell Putman family, left the home to pick pecans in the river bottoms. Hours went by and the children failed to return. The parents feared that the children had been taken by Indians. Brown continues that the family needed nightly protection and so the men could not pursue the Indians. For several years Mr. Lockhart accompanied other Texans searching Indian villages for missing children. During the spring of 1840 the Putman boy was found and returned to his family. The older Putman girl was not heard from for 27 years after her captivity. She had been recovered by an Indian agent in the western part of the state and had been educated with his family. Years later, visiting in Gonzales County during the Civil War, she was identified as one of the missing Putman children. The third Putman child was returned to her family when she was about five years of age. The return of Matilda Lockhart to San Antonio was the beginning of the largest and longest Indian battle in Texas. The Indians brought only two captives into San Antonio, a Mexican boy and 16 year old Matilda Lockhart. She had been terribly abused. Her head and arms were full of bruises and sores. Her nose was actually burned off to the bone, an eyewitness reported. Matilda said that the Indians would beat her and wake her from sleep by sticking a chunk of fire on her, especially to her nose. She also said that there were 12 more captives in the camp. When the Comanches were told to return them, a battle began. When it was over about 40 Indians were killed along with seven Texans. This was the beginning of the Indian Wars that continued to plague the area. The Comanches made their last big raid in South Texas crossing DeWitt County in 1840 to threaten Victoria and burn Linnville. The wars finally ending at the Battle of Plum Creek.

Since the early 1830's, when DeWitt's settlers became the first inhabitants of present DeWitt County, many other families had entered the region and established themselves. Some of them came in before Texas gained her independence, but most of them came after the termination of the Revolution. In 1840 James Norman Smith, a pioneer schoolmaster from Tennessee, brought his family to Texas, intending to open a school somewhere in the new Republic. His first offer came from two families at Tide Haven, on the gulf coast; but he decided to come inland to Cuero Creek, where a Mr. Blair promised to secure for him at least 30 pupils. As soon as Smith and his family arrived in the Cuero Creek settlement (Concrete area of the County), the neighbors gathered and helped him build his schoolhouse, the first to be built in that area. The day school was a success, and he soon decided to teach a Sunday school also. Regular prayer meetings followed the organization of the Sunday School, and within a few months the Methodists and Presbyterians organized themselves into congregations and were visited by circuit riders such as DeVilbiss, Sneed and Blair. Within a year the little schoolhouse, a small log building in a grove of trees on the bank of McCoy Creek, became the center of social activities for the entire community. Day school, prayer meetings, parties, singing fests, and original plays brought the settlers together; and by 1841 they were becoming anxious to secure the organization of a new county with their settlement as its center. In 1842 an area to be called DeWitt County was set apart by legislative enactment, for judicial purposes. In the same year, however, judicial counties were declared unconstitutional; and the McCoy (Cuero) Creek settlement remained part of Gonzales County. No further attempt was made to create DeWitt County until shortly after Texas became a part of the United States.

Invasion by Mexican troops in 1842 under Gen. Vasquez was feared by the people in DeWitt County Area to be the advance guard of a large Mexican force. Families began their preparation to flee from the invading army reminiscent of the earlier 'Runaway Scrape.' Hiding and burying treasured possessions, the people prepared once again to leave their homes, crops and livestock.

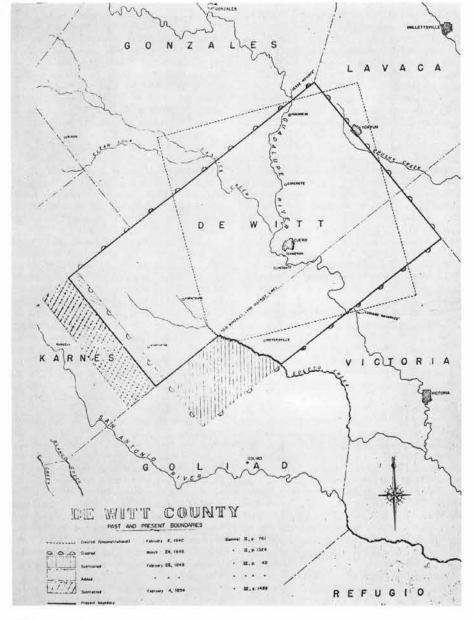

In his diary, Miles S. Bennet recorded a trip to Houston to meet his father, Major Valentine Bennet and his comrades, Capt. M. Caldwell and Curtis Caldwell who had just returned from imprisonment in Perote Prison for their participation in the ill fated Sante Fe Expedition.

Daniel B. Friar, James J. Tumlinson, Josiah Taylor, Creed Taylor, Miles S. and Valentine Bennet participated in the defeat of General Woll and 120 Mexicans at the Battle of Salado and some also engaged in the aborted Somerville Expedition. George Lord and Alfred A. Allee continued with the Meir Expedition. They were captured at Meir by the Mexican Army only to later escape and be recaptured. They drew white beans in the macabre lottery ordered to punish their escape attempt. Their "good" fortune resulted in imprisonment in Perote Prison in Mexico City rather than the death by execution suffered by seventeen of their compatriots. They survived prison and returned to DeWitt County.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION

Directly after Texas became a state in 1846, a bill was introduced into the legislature creating forty new counties, and DeWitt County was among the number. This law stated: "That all portions of the counties of Gonzales, Victoria, and Goliad comprised within the following limits, to-wit: Beginning at the corner of a quarter of a league of land granted to Jesse McCoy, on the north northeast of the Guadalupe river; then in a direction on N 75 E. to Lavaca County line; thence with said line of Lavaca County, down, continuing the same direction until a line S. 75 West will cross Guadalupe River at the lower corner of a league of land, deeded to Lucian Navarra near Prices Creek; then continuing the same course to Colito Creek; then up said creek to the fork of the main branch; thence N. 75 E will intersect the Guadalupe River opposite beginning corner here and the same is hereby constituted a separate district for judicial purposes with the like privileges enjoyed by inhabitants of the several counties of this republic, except that of separate representation in Congress which shall be regulated as heretofore;

Section 2. Be it further enacted that the above described district or territory shall be known by the name of the county of DeWitt and Daniel B. Friar, Ralph Campbell, Joseph Lawrence, James Wood, Ben Craig, James Smith, or a majority of them are hereby appointed commissioners to select a site for the seat of justice in said county and shall be authorized to receive by donation or purchase not exceeding 640 acres of land, to be laid out in lots and sold in such a manner as may be most beneficial to the county, the proceeds of which shall be applied to the erection of public buildings.

Section 4. That the seat of justice to be chosen shall be known and styled as the town of Cuero, and that the county courts shall be held therein for said county on the second Monday in January, April, July, and October, and said county shall constitute a part of the fourth judicial district."

On March 24, 1846, the county of DeWitt was legally created, and named for Green B. DeWitt. Less than three months after the passage of the act of creation, the question of location the county seat became an important matter of dispute. At least three landowners wished to have the courty seat located on their land. Captain Daniel Boone Friar, whose home was designated temporary county seat, hired a surveyor to see if his land was within 5 miles of the center of the county. But his hopes were doomed. The corner of his land nearest the geographical center of the county was at least 7 miles from that point. R.H. Chisholm, owner of the most important ferry in the new county, naturally wanted to have the county seat near his ferry. Four men persuaded him to donate 600 acres to them, in return for which they promised to secure the location of the county seat near the ferry. They were to lay out the town of Clinton on the donated land. However, when the appointed committee came along the river inspecting proposed sites, the four men refused to donate or sell a courthouse site to the county; and Chisholm, believing the promises already made him, also refused to donate. The committee then crossed the river and continued upstream to a point 3 miles above Chisholm's ferry, and chose a site. The landowner at this point, probably a Mr. Blair, granted a 50 acre tract to the county for a courthouse site. This decision of the committee precipitated a contest for the location of the county seat which continued with little rest until late in 1850, and caused the records to be moved back and forth across the river at least four times.

The county was organized and its first corps of officers elected on July 13, 1846. At the first meeting of the commissioners court early in August, held in the home of D.B. Friar, the following officers were present: James M. Baker, probate judge; John Troy, county judge; James N. Smith, county clerk; Joseph L. Baker, district clerk; and V.V. Poinsett, John York, and Crockett Cardwell, commissioners. A few days later, on August 11, K.W. Barton was installed as the fourth commissioner, and William P. Patterson as sheriff. V.W. Poinset and R.H. Chisholm were Magistrates for District #1. John Tumlinson was the first County Treasurer.

The commissioners declared that the home of D.B. Friar should continue to be the county seat until proper buildings could be constructed as the official county seat. This "official county seat" the commissioners noticed as follows: "The Court after due deliberation, believing it to be their duty to give a name to the county seat, and after reflecting upon the great services rendered to this state while it existed as "the Republic of Texas" by the much beloved and lamented, Ewing Cameron who was basely and inhumanely murdered by the barbarous and treacherous Mexican and the Court believing that a more noble patriotic and brave spirit never commanded a band of soldiers. They therefore wishing to perpetuate his memory to future ages, do hereby agree eto call the County seat of DeWitt County by the name of Cameron."

The first County seat, Cameron, was on the east side of the Guadalupe River J Tumlinson survey about four miles northwest of present day Cuero. There was probably never very much there. All of the official records were kept at one house.

The summer of 1846 found James Norman Smith, the county's first teacher and county clerk, acting as a surveyor. He laid out the townsites of Concrete and Clinton.

In March, 1847, the DeWitt County Commissioners' Court arranged for the construction of a Court House, as follows: "The Court appointed William A. Blair an agent to receive proposals for the building of a court house at the town of Cameron and to make a contract with the lowest competent bidder to build the same of the following size: a log house sixteen feet by eighteen feet, the logs to be hewed down after the house is raised — to be eight feet high in the body, to be covered with three feet of clapboards, cabin fashion with one door and shutter — to be done in a good substantial manner - the House to be raised on block one foot high; and ordered that the Clerk furnish him a copy of the same."

During the occupation period of settlement, this section of the country was called the Cuero Settlement by the pioneers. The town of Cuero, however, was not founded until 1873, one hundred and twenty years after the time the name first appeared on the map of Texas, and fifty years after the date of DeWitt's grant. The earliest reference to the word Cuero is in a Diary of A Visit of Inspection of the Texas Missions Made by Fray Gaspar Jose De Solis in the Year 1767-68. "On the 17th I passed by two creeks of good water, very leafy and pleasant banks, plenty fish. We arrived at Cuero, which is a bend or corner down the river, and we stopped on the bank of the Guadalupe River."

DeLeon had named the river Guadalupe in 1689 for the Patron Saint. Later Spaniards continued with the designated name Guadalupe, but left all its tributaries unnamed, with the single exception of one small stream only twelve or fifteen miles long, which they marked "Cuero." Because the other tributaries were unnamed on the map, the colonists gave then Anglo-Saxon names.

The Court met regularly at Cameron until July, 1850, which was probably the last time the County Commissioners met at that place, for the next meeting that is known was in the town of Clinton, in August of the same year. Court was held there for several years; and then a frame building containing offices for the various officials of the county was erected.

A description of the Court House may be found in the Diary of James Norman Smith, who was commonly known as Uncle Jimmy Smith. The following excerpt is from his memoirs; "Clinton Began to Improve Some — the County sold off her Lots (at least many of them) And we had a nice Large Framed Court House Built altogether with Pine Lumber - The Court-Room was up Stairs - This was the whole Length and Breadth of the House -Except the Lawyers and Judges Seat and Juries boxes were Enclosed to themselves with a Door on Each Side of the House to Enter Into the Lawyers and Clerks — The Balance of the upper Story was Large and Spacious for citizens to attend and hear the Trial Cases & what served us For Preaching on Sabbath days and Nights which was a Great convience (sic) to us."

The clerk's office was furnished with hidebottomed chairs; and a strong, rude, old-fashioned desk was presided over by James N. Smith. He held the office of clerk without opposition from 1846 to 1865, when he was forced to resign on account of feeble health. His son, Tom, who was appointed to finish the unexpired term, was later elected for another term.

The second building that was erected for a Court House in Clinton was moved to Cuero in about 1877. This new structure was destroyed by fire and for two years Court was held in the old Nash School House. About 1895 the present Court House was constructed at a cost of $107,000.

Miss Nell Murphree, a great granddaughter of James N. Smith, gave the following facts concerning County Seats and Court Houses in DeWitt County:

"The Texas Legislature created DeWitt County and appointed commissioners Friar, Troy, Blair, and Baker to select a county seat not over five miles from the county's center. Where the Victoria-Gonzales road crossed the road to LaGrange, Commissioner Friar had a combination store, home, and post office. He wanted the country seat located there, but a survey showed that it was seven miles from the county's center. West of the river Captain Chisholm had deeded 640 acres of land to Patterson, Stapp, Donalds, and Miller with the understanding that they would try to get the county seat located on it. But they refused to give any land to the county. Joseph Tumlinson donated 100 acres east of the river. June 23, 1846, the commissioners reported this gift to the court which instructed James Smith to lay it off in blocks and lots. So November 10, 1846, Cameron, names for the Ewing Cameron, became DeWitt County's first county seat.

August 12, 1846 the court decided to use the Friar store as a meeting place until a court house was built. The county seat met there each month; but when the district judge came to hold his court; he refused to hold it outside the county seat and gave orders for the district suits to be re-issued for trial at the next session of his court to be held in Cameron. The court's next meeting in January, 1847, was the last one at Friar's store. Quite heated arguments came up over holding court there. Finally, Judge Troy said, "Adjourn court to meet in hell, for I'll send Sheriff Patterson there by morning." Clerk Smith replied, "Appoint another clerk, for I can't meet at the designated place." The Judge adjourned court to meet in Cameron at the county Clerk's office, a house built of pecan clapboards.

At the February meeting the court appointed William Blair to have built a log house sixteen feet wide by eighteen feet long. April 12, 1847, court met in the Cameron court house and Blair was told to have benches and a table made. At the July session he was instructed to have the cracks in the court house lined with boards.

November 12, 1848, by a majority of four votes Clinton was voted the county seat. Because some votes were not numbered the election was contested. Finally May, 1849, the Supreme Court decided against Clinton, so the county seat was moved back to Cameron. In 1850 the people again voted Clinton the County seat. The county was given a public square and thirty nine other lots. For several years a log court house was used. Then a two-story, frame, glass-windowed building served as a court house, church, and entertainment hall until the county seat was changed to Cuero.

In 1876 the people's vote made Cuero the county seat. Clinton's court house lumber was used in building Cuero's larger court house. This burned in 1893. Court was held in the Nash school house until 1895. Then the county began using its $107,000 granite court house." This court house is still in use and is an imposing structure from the exterior and well kept inside having been completely redone in 1957.

Prior to the year 1846, there were no towns in what is now DeWitt County. Settlers in this section were compelled to go to Victoria or Gonzales to market their produce, purchase supplies, and post letters. This situation existed for six or seven years. Then, in 1838, Daniel B. Friar erected a store about four miles north of Cuero, where the road from LaGrange to Goliad was first known - before DeWitt's colony came - as the road from Burnham's store (LaGrange) to La Bahia (Goliad). The road was crossed by another leading from Gonzales to Victoria later, and at this crossing Friar erected his store. Some five or six years later Friar sold his store to Crockett Cardwell, and it was then known as Cardwell's Store, with Leroy Fudge as manager. In 1847 Mr. Cardwell postmarked letters from his store as Cuero, DeWitt County, Texas, although this was twenty six years before the town of Cuero was officially founded.

About the same time that Friar erected his store, R.H. Chisholm installed a ferry boat where the La Bahia Road crossed the Guadalupe River. Afterwards, when Clinton was the County Seat, there was considerable travel over Chisholm's Crossing by prospectors, adventurers, and fugitives from justice on their way to Mexico or the unsettled Southwest. In addition to his ferry, Chisholm put up a small grocery store made of logs; and from this hut he sold coffee, sugar, tobacco, and whiskey. Clinton, from its very birth, was a whiskey-drinking town, notwithstanding the fact that many cultured and Christian people lived there.

Concrete was the first town founded in the county; the date of its settlement was 1846-1847. Perhaps the name was chosen because of the sandstone found in the area which was hewed from the earth in a soft stage and hardened when exposed to the air. The stone was used in constructing chimneys and building foundations. No doubt DeWitt County's earliest business enterprises were in the Upper Cuero Creek Concrete area Settlement. In the 1840's there was a post office located in the William A. Blair home. Nearby the Grimes brothers from Liverpool, England, had a dry goods store; and Dr. Duck, an excellent physician from London, practiced medicine, and sold medicine from his own small drug store to the neighbors. (Dr. Duck moved to Corpus Christi in 1846.) On the border between the Upper and Lower Settlements the D.B. Friar combination home, store and post office was established in the early forties.

Clinton was founded in 1847-1848 and established as the County Seat in 1849. By 1850 Clinton's hotel was a one-room log house, where, during Court, the Judge and lawyers found entertainment. The cooking was done out-of-doors, and the table was spread in the open air. Later Oliver Stapp built a frame hotel. The main feature of the opening supper was oysters, which had been brought up from the coast in the shells — the first fresh oysters ever served in the county. Before 1850 Clinton had an old horse mill. The county's only waterpower mill was the gristmill belonging to Uncle Moses Rankin.

In regard to the growth of Clinton at this time, J.N. Smith recorded the following: "There was a Few Settlers in Clinton before It was Established as a County Seat. It was a Small place and Much Dissipation In Drinking Gambling &c. — No Preaching near us — The Different Elections for a County Seat Caused Much opposition (sic) to Clinton for a Long Time. Public Stages for Passengers Run From the Bay up to Austin and Elsewhere on the North Side of the Guadalupe about Six Miles of Clinton and also Stages Run From the Bay to San Antonio about ten miles South of us — Thus Clinton was Left Alone without Much Public Conveyance of any Kind —

I Sold My Two Hundred Acres of Land on the River Where I Lived when I went to Cameron. And with the Proceeds of the Sale of This Land I purchased 3200 acres of Land on Cuero Creek and Its water about one Third Timber Land and the other Prairie almost as Rich as the River Land — I gave Mr. Murphree one Thousand acres of Land. Several Families Settled in Clinton and In a Short time Several Young Lawyers —"

The names of some of the doctors who resided in Clinton at this time are: Dr. Leak, Dr. A.J. Hodge, Dr. C. Blackwell, and Dr. Goodwin. Dr. Williams, who had lived at LaGrange, moved to Clinton and built near Smith's house. The first glass window panes brought to Clinton.

ton were seen in the windows of Dr. Williams' home. Later young Dr. Robinson from Tennessee built a concrete house on a lot adjoining Smith's land. He was Smith's family physician for many years.

An epidemic of influenza in the Clinton neighborhood in February, 1851, caused thirteen deaths. Little Mary Murphree was a victim, and tradition has it that she was the first person to be buried in the Clinton Cemetery.

Å majority of early DeWitt County pioneers were American, immigrating from the southern states, certainly there are instances of northern settlers also. It is interesting to note that many of the families were acquainted or related to people in the states through which they traveled on their way to Texas. The emigration to DeWitt County was part of the Westward Movement.

The bargain the young Texas Republic offered settlers was unbeatable: A huge grant of free land for all newcomers. At first, each family was given 1,280 acres (2 square miles) of land, each unmarried man received 640 acres. Over the years it was reduced and after 1844, new settlers - regardless of martial status - received 320 acres so by 1850 four year old DeWitt County had a population of over 1,716 people. Early census records indicate these people were merchants, farmers, blacksmiths, millers and other much needed craftsmen plus doctors and lawyers. Also, as in any time, there was an influx of lawless adventurers. This vocation is not listed on census rolls.

Most of these land hungry emigrants from the United States loaded their worldly goods on a wagon and trundled west over so-called roads that were quagmires in the spring, filled later with dust. Only a few American immigrants came by boat. But large numbers of Germans landed at New Orleans, Galveston and later, Indianola. They were seeking greater personal freedom and better business opportunities than their homeland afforded them. The German pioneers, noted for the energy with which they attacked the problems of the frontier, were faced with an unusual hardship peculiarly their own. They had to learn to use an axe. In the old country, their homes had been stone huts with thatched roofs; and their fuel, peat or coal. At Meyersville they had to cut down large trees for logs to build their homes. Smaller trees and branches of the larger ones had to be cut into proper lengths for their fireplaces. But they mastered the new technique, built their homes, and provided themselves with firewood; and in 1850, they undertook the larger and more important project of building a church for their community. When they began to plant their crops and work in their fields, however, the German immigrants needed no tutor; they taught their neighbors new methods. One of the men, a Mr. Dreier, had brought with him a plowshare, which he had attached to a rude wooden frame. When he proposed to use this crudely made implement to cut furrows in his land, his neighbors scoffed at him. They had been accustomed to clearing their land with axes and scythes; and their planting had been done by the use of a dibble and point stick. Plows and furrows had no place in their methods of farming. But Dreier's enterprise was successful, and the score with regard to the axe was the area, and gradually became one of the most important elements of the population of the county. On April 1, 1848, Charles Eckhardt, Theodore Miller, C. DeSchutz, and John L. Mueller bought a tract of land from John York, intending to lay out a new town. Under their agreement, York sold a half interest in his league of land for one dollar in cash; the purchasers agreed to lay out the town at their own expense, and allow York to keep each alternate lot, block, and acre lot. The agreement stipulated that the town was to be named Yorktown. On July 24, 1848, Eckhardt and his associates wrote York that they were sending him a copy of the town plat. Shortly afterwards the first settlers began to arrive. Among the first ones were Andreas Strieber, Peter Metz, C.G. Hartmann, and Mrs. Hoppe. Some time in 1848, a German traveler arrived in DeWitt County and methodically recorded his impressions of the countryside. He was delighted with the stately oaks, the deep black soil, and the rushing streams. He was overjoyed with the beauties of the Guadalupe River area.

Meyersville was the second German settlement to be established in DeWitt County before 1850. Adolph Meyer and Fritz Hausmann may be called the founders of this town, for they arrived in the county and took up lands along Coleto Creek in 1846. Other settlers came over from Germany in 1848, and it was about this time that the settlement began to be called Meyersville. Some of the families landed at Galveston, and came by flatboat to Houston. From there, they had their goods hauled by four-horse wagon to Victoria. Unfortunately the wagon would hold only the boxes and trunks; the immigrants had to walk. As if the walking itself were not hard enough, the teamster forced them to travel the entire distance without hot meals; he would allow no fires to be kindled for fear the smoke would attract the Indians. At Victoria, two of the families dropped out of the party, but the others pushed on to Meyersville. Beyond a doubt, that spot, which meant food and rest and the end of their journey, must have looked like a paradise to those travelers.

Burns Station, which was named for one of the first settlers, Arthur Burns, had two or three stores and a post office as early as 1848. It was later called Verhelle because of the Railroad. Terryville, named for J.D. Terry, afterward a County Judge of DeWitt County, began in the late eighteen-forties. Stratton was named for John Stratton of Cuero. It was originally Crosson's Store, named for G.W. Crosson who operated a business near there during and after the Civil War.

Hochheim began in the late eighteen forties and was first called "Dutchtown," because a majority of the residents were German. The town was named in honor of the Patriarch Hoch, whose rock building — originally used for a home and a stage stand — is still standing. HOCH in English means "high", and HEIM means "home," so Hochheim not only commemorates the pioneer citizen, but is also suggestive of the hills upon which it stands.

The house was built by Valentine Hoch in 1856 and 1857. He was an expert rock mason, having learned this trade in Germany. The rock was quarried nearby; the cement he made himself. The timbers were hand-hewn, and the shingles were hand-split. The house was plastered, both the walls and ceilings, with a nice white finish. For many years the house was used as a stage stand, and it is supposed to have been the oldest house between Gonzales and Old Indianola. It was so well built that it has lasted until today. Some years ago the Old Stage Coach Inn was restored by the Ross Boothe family of Gonzales.

Yoakum, founded at the advent of the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railway, occupied the site of Bansy Mahon's store of early times. This was about 1850. The town is named for B.F. Yoakum, and it is divided by the DeWitt and Lavaca County line. Westhoff is build on the site of the Whiteso store of reconstruction days. It was also a railroad town and was first called Bello and then changed to Westhoff. This town was established about 1900.

The land of which present day Nordheim stands was surveyed by the Goliad Land District in 1838 and was patented to Robert Galletty in 1841. By 1879 Vachel Weldon had acquired some of that land from the Galletty family and in 1881 the R. Galletty heirs and V. Weldon sold large holdings to H. Runge and Co. of Cuero. There had been numerous early settlers in the area. After the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railroad was completed in 1896. the railroad built a siding near the entrance to the H. Runge and Co. Ranch in 1897 and called it Weldon Switch. William Frosbese of the H. Runge and Co. Ranch changed the name to Nordheim after his hometown of Northeim in Hanover Province, Germany. The U.S. Post Office Department officially recognized the name of Nordheim in 1898.

Thomaston became DeWitt County's first railroad townsite with the extension of the Gulf Western Texas and Pacific Railroad from Victoria in 1872. It was named for Col. Nathan Thomas from whom land of the Amadore Survey was obtained. Arneckeville was begun about 1859 and was settled by German immigrants. No name was given the settlement until 1872 when a U.S. Post Office was established.

DeWITT COUNTY VOLUNTEERS IN THE MEXICAN WAR

T10

A military confrontation between the United States and Mexico was expected in Texas by the Summer of 1845. The dispute over whether the southern boundary of Texas was the Nueces River emptying into Corpus Christi Bay or the Rio Grande terminating thirty miles below Matamoros near Point Isabel was a minor geographic issue compared to the larger continental question of whether Mexico or the United States would dominate the American West from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific.

The Fourth of July was first celebrated by Texans when the Congress of the Republic of Texas voted on that day in 1845 to accept annexation by the United States. The Congress of the United States delayed and did not act until December of that year. In the meantime United States Brigadier General Zachary Taylor, under direct orders from President James Polk and in command of the 3rd U.S. Infantry Regiment, left Louisiana in July 1845 and landed near the small predominantly Mexican town of Corpus Christi at the mouth of the Nueces River — the coastal area near the Rio Grande at that time being under the control of Mexican General Francisco Mejia. Although Texas remained an independent Republic, the United States by the words of two Presidents had assured Texas that the United States would help protect the Republic from foreign invasion during the time annexation was pending in Washington, as it was during the summer and fall of 1845.

DeWitt County Monument

By October 1845, General Taylor's strength had increased to over 3,500 regular army troops. The size of the General's army was substantially larger than any army in Texas before 1835 — almost twice the size of General Santa Anna's Mexican army at San Jacinto ten years earlier. However, General Taylor's army was only one-fourth the size of the Federal Union Army that invaded and occupied Corpus Christi and adjacent south and central Texas coastal cities during the Civil War.

General Taylor's command in Corpus Christi included Lieutenant Ulysses S. Grant. Both General Taylor and Lieutenant Grant, after illustrious military careers in the Mexican and Civil Wars respectively, would be elected President of the United States. Captain E. Kirby Smith who was also in General Taylor's command, would become the Confederate General responsible for the defense of Texas and the Trans-Mississippi Theatre late in the Civil War. Some DeWitt County residents who served under General Zachary Taylor would serve the Confederate cause under the field

Talk of war with Mexico and the presence of United States troops on the Texas southern coast during 1845 triggered the organization of two Texas Ranger companies which included volunteers from DeWitt County. The first was organized by Captain P. Hansbrough Bell in Corpus Christi in September, 1845 with Private Alfred L. Friar of DeWitt County among the enlisted ranks. A few weeks later in San Antonio, Captain Richard A. Gillespie organized a second company of Texas Mounted Rangers which included three DeWitt County residents — Privates Josiah, James and Rufus Taylor.

Although United States regular Army troops were in position to move south from Corpus during the Fall of 1845, it was not until early January of the following year, after the U.S. Congress had acted to admit Texas into the Union, that President Polk ordered General Taylor to commence operations to occupy all of the region in south Texas north of the Rio Grande. The orders from Washington reached General Taylor on February 3, three weeks after being dispatched. General Taylor's departure from Corpus south-westward along the Nueces River in March coincided with the enactment of legislation in Austin creating DeWitt County for the second time, the first act passed in early 1842 having been declared unconstitutional.

General Taylor's scouts on the overland march to the Rio Grande were members of another newly organized mounted Texas Ranger Company, this one commanded by Captain Samuel Hamilton Walker. Captain Sam Walker had previously gained a nationwide reputation for his prominent participation as a Captain in the Mier Expedition of 1842, his leadership role with his fellow Scotsman Captain Ewin Cameron in the prisoners' escape leading to the Black Bean drawing in Rancho Salado and his subsequent escape from a Mexican prison near Mexico City. Four Taylor brothers from DeWitt County, Creed, Pitkin, James and Josiah joined or transferred into Walker's Ranger Company, although Josiah was assigned to continue scouting duty for Captain Gillespie.

The contribution made to General Taylor's successful march to the Rio Grande and during the Battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma by the forty men in Walker's Rangers Company has been fully documented and praised in every major treatise on the Mexican War. The Ranger Company performed extensive and valuable scouting services for the General during the initial overland march of 150 miles south of Corpus Christi to establish Fort Polk on Point Isabel and to construct Fort Texas across from Matamoros by late April.

In the morning of May 3, General Taylor left Fort Texas to return 30 miles back to the coast where he had stationed his main body of troops and supplies. This separation of United States forces supplies gave the new and more aggressive Mexican General Arista the opportunity to cross the Rio Grande above and below Fort Texas, encircle and shell the isolated Fort and block General Taylor's only direct route of return. The noise and flares from the shelling of the fort were the only reports General Taylor had of the condition of his garrison at Fort Texas and the location of his enemy.

On the night of May 3, General Taylor directed Captain Walker with four of his men to undertake an urgent mission to slip 30 miles back through enemy lines and heavily occupied enemy territory to obtain first-hand information about the condition of the Fort from its Commander, Major Jacob Brown. By the evening of May 5, Captain Walker and his men had secretly visited Major Brown, surveyed the conditions of the fort and returned through the heavily fortified terrain to report that Fort Texas was not in distress and could continue to resist the Mexican Army until General Taylor's reinforcements could arrive.

The success of this daring two-night mission by Walker and his men caught the attention of the U.S. national press just at the time President Polk needed politically to galvanize the wary American public in support of an unattractive war with Mexico. The American press followed the war with Mexico with reporters, sketch artists and photographers in a detailed manner that signaled the extensive press coverage of military personalities and engagements to be given during the Civil War. The Walker raid also gave General Taylor the assurance and time he needed to gather reinforcements and supplies before advancing to dislodge the Mexican Army entrenched on the United States side of the Rio Grande.

The ensuing attacks by General Taylor during the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma on May 8 and 9 set the tone of the engagements between the two armies for the balance of the year. On the first day at Palo Alto Taylor's artillery carried the day. In the afternoon on the second day, Ranger Walker and his band of thirty men rode ahead of the guns and other troops guiding the artillery batteries through the battle area of dense brush, called Resaca de la Palma. The late afternoon attack on the unsuspecting Mexican army unintentionally copied the deliberate siesta timing of General Sam Houston at San Jacinto and the resulting Mexican army confusion and rout was repeated. The two victories on May 8 and 9 pushed the Mexican Army out of Texas, all the way back to Monterrey.

Shortly after the area around the mouth of the Rio Grande had been occupied by U.S. troops and Texas Rangers and the name of Fort Texas had been changed to Fort Brown, the State of Texas raised for the Mexican War which had now been formally declared, two regiments of mounted riflemen and one of foot riflemen. Colonel J.C. Hays raised the First Texas Mounted Riflemen at Point Isabel to serve as General Taylor's scouts for the march on Monterrey. After Captain Walker's Ranger company was disbanded, the Colonel selected Walker as his Lieutenant Colonel with seven company commanders including Captains Ben McCulloch, Tom Green and Jerome B. McCown, each company with about 40 men.

Several DeWitt County residents rode to Point Isabel in May and June to enlist in these three Texas cavalry companies. Alfred Friar's enlistment period with Bell's company had expired that summer, and he joined McCulloch's Company, along with another prominent DeWitt County resident, Clinton DeWitt. DeWitt County residents, Reddin J. Pridgen, who was a Second Lieutenant, and his brother Sergeant Bolivar Pridgen volunteered to serve in Captain McCown's Company. Wesley Sutton whose family later resided in DeWitt County but who at that time was a resident of LaGrange in neighboring Fayette County, enlisted as a Corporal in Captain Tom Green's Company.

The Second Regiment of Texas Mounted volunteers was organized at the same time at Point Isabel. William R. Scurry who later was an attorney and elected representative from Clinton, enlisted as a private in Company A of the Second Mounted Regiment. Scurry was serving as a Major in the unit when he mustered out after the Battle of Monterrey.

Captain Augustus Buchel commanded Company H of the 1st Texas Foot Riflemen, the infantry regiment organized early in Texas for the Mexican War. The Captain had enlisted from Indian Point, near Indianola, in late May and was in command of his Company at Point Isabel in June.

McCulloch's Mounted Company was singled out by General Taylor in early June to scout the best route to advance on Monterrey. When McCulloch determined that the route through Linares would be impractical because of the lack of sufficient water, General Taylor moved his troops up the Rio Grande to Camargo. McCulloch's men, however, diverted from the main route up the Rio Grande to search out General Antonio Canales who was known to have been the Mexican official who had secured the execution of Captain Ewin Cameron during the Mier Expedition after he had drawn a white bean at Rancho Salado. Captain Cameron had been a neighbor of McCulloch's Guadalupe volunteers and the County seat of DeWitt County was named "Cameron" in his honor in the Summer of that year.

At Camargo in August the short threemonth enlistment term of some Texas volunteer troops expired. The Texas Infantry Regiment with Captain Buchel's company voted to return to Texas, but most Mounted volunteers reenlisted. The independence of some of the DeWitt County cavalrymen including the Taylor brothers who did not reenlist is noted from the written comments made on their official federal muster-out rolls that U.S. Army equipment such as a Colt pistols, halters, chains and martingales were missing.

After missing General Canales and regrouping, McCulloch's Company rode off from Camargo on August 19 to the south 50 miles to the city of China and then westward to join General Taylor's main body of troops at Marin, 24 miles northeast of Monterrey. A week before Captain Tom Green's cavalry company joined the other troops at Marin, Corporal Wesley Sutton and 25 other volunteers were discharged for undisclosed reasons. From Marin to Walnut Springs, General Taylor rode with the Texans who he was pleased to have rejoined the main body of troops despite the Rangers lack of uniform or discipline.

After Taylor reached the outskirts of Monterrey in late September, he ordered Hays' Mounted Texas unit with General William J. Worth's regular troops to lead a circling movement to the west, cutting the road to Saltillo and attacking the city from the west. Major Scurry with the Texas 2nd Mounted Regiment remained as escort with the General and his staff. This westward diversion proved successful.

On September 21, six companies of McCulloch's Rangers and three regular infantry companies alone scaled the 400 foot south face of Federation Hill overlooking the city. The summit gave the artillery unit coverage of the city area. A truce was called on September 25. All DeWitt County volunteers in the Battle of Monterrey came out unscathed except Clinton DeWitt who had been wounded on the 21st during McCulloch's dramatic advance on the city from the west. The County of DeWitt, four years later, in August 1850, would name its relocated county seat "Clinton" in his honor.

The two Texas cavalry Regiments returned home after the fall of Monterrey. The parting of the Texans was welcomed by General Taylor who admired the rugged cavalry scouts in battle but had become repulsed by the excesses of the Texans after the fall of Monterrey. The parting was also welcomed by the Texans who had not been paid for their services since they enlisted. A special note was made to the official pay record of Lieutenant Reddin Pridgen reflecting that he received an extra $100 for the loss of his horse which "died from fatigue of the march on the 17th of Aug."

Only a small elite Texas spy company remained with General Taylor after the fall of Monterrey. This was a mounted scout unit that Ben McCulloch had organized with 27 members including Sergeant Bolivar Pridgen. The company was directed to remain near General Taylor's headquarters throughout the winter of 1846-47 as the General moved only a short distance south of Saltillo. These men slipped with McCulloch in Mexican uniform and dress deep behind enemy lines and spent the night of February 20, within the enemy's camp to count precisely the size and composition of Santa Anna's forces. This amazing and detailed intelligence report to General Taylor formulated the basis of the General's successful initial withdrawal and defensive strategy against General Santa Anna's forces at Buena Vista six miles south of Saltillo on February 23, 1847 and made Captain Ben McCulloch personally a Texas legend years before he became a Confederate General. During the Battle of Buena Vista, at Captain McCulloch's side, was Captain William T. Sherman who also became a prominent Civil War General.

After the Battle of Buena Vista, General Taylor's troops remained near Monterrey and McCulloch's spy company returned to Texas. Although Texas troops including Texas Rangers were present at Vera Cruz and Mexico City during the second phase of the war in central Mexico under the command of General Winfield Scott, DeWitt County residents were not prominent in these subsequent engagements in the Mexican War. However, several DeWitt County families and neighbors who served with General Zachary Taylor, were prominent in the Civil War, including General William R. Scurry, General Augustus Buchel, General Ben McCulloch, and in the enlisted ranks, the Friar, DeWitt, Taylor, Pridgen, and Sutton family members.

The settlement of Mexican claims completed by the Mexican War 1846-1848 promised a bright future for the county. Cotton, general farming, the raising of cattle and other livestock were free to develop as early industries of the county. Many homes were enlarged and built. During the fifties, DeWitt County knew a period of real social progress. In 1851, the Meyersville settlement erected its Lutheran church and churches for other denominations soon followed in other communities. On September 1, 1856, the legislature of the state chartered Concrete College, "a school of learning, consisting of male and female departments," to be located in the town of Concrete. In 1857 there were two post offices listed in DeWitt County, at Clinton and at Cuero (Cardwell's Store). Clinton, Yorktown, Meyersville and Concrete were towns in DeWitt County at this time. The schools of the various communities were reported to be "well sustained." A new courthouse, the last to be built in the town of Clinton, was accepted in the summer of 1858.

Most of the early settlers of DeWitt County found either stockraising or farming their most profitable occupation. Few of them are engaged in cross-country freighting, or in other commercial pursuits. But on the eve of the Civil War, the ferries and well-marked roads, which the county had first maintained for protective purposes, were in use as parts of some of the main commercial routes of the state. DeWitt County lay between Indianola, the main port of entry on the central gulf coast, and the important inland city of San Antonio. Some profit is bound to have accrued to the county from the large amount of freight which crossed it, for stage coaches and wagon trains were constantly passing along the roads. In the summer of 1856 the famous camels, to be used on the western frontier, crossed the county on their way to Camp Verde. In the early 1860's, the citizens of DeWitt County began to entertain hopes of having a railroad extended from Victoria to DeWitt County. But the coming of the Civil War killed their hopes. Construction on the road was abandoned, and Victoria remained the terminus of the line until the early

The Texas Secession Convention, held in Austin, January 28 – February 4, 1861, passed the Ordinance of Secession and joined the Confederate States. DeWitt County was represented at the Convention by William R. Seurry, a 39 year old lawyer from Clinton. In the referendum election February 23, 1861 held in DeWitt County the total returns wee 472 votes for Secession and 49 votes opposed Secession. March 1861, Texas became one of the Confederate States of America.

When civil war became publically accepted as the way the North-South conflict would be settled and the question of secession had been resolved, most of the young men and many of the older men of DeWitt County commenced to organize into military units of company size with a captain as unit commander, two or three other officers and usually from 60 to 100 men. Some companies were organized into local home guard militia units, others as Texas State Troop units for service anywhere within the state to meet invasion and others for Confederate States services either inside or outside Texas. The enactment of conscription legislation first by the Texas Legislature and later by the Confederate Congress encouraged able bodied men between the age of 18 and 50 to enlist in the local unit of their choice with family and friends. Texas State Troop companies organized in DeWitt County were included in the 24th State Brigade with units from Calhoun, Jackson, Lavaca and Victoria Coun-

Based on military records in the Texas State Archives and in the office of DeWitt County Court, no less than twelve companies were organized for military service in DeWitt County between the Spring of 1861 and the Winter of 1863-64. Each company was required to file with the state and have certified by the County official a Muster Roll identifying the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates enrolled in the unit at its time of organization and the date and county of organization. Some companies filed two or more monthly muster rolls after organizing.

The names of the members of each unit were handwritten, sometimes with meticulous care but not infrequently with a casualness that makes identification uncertain. It was not unusual for a member to transfer to a second company or to enlist with a Confederate Regiment being organized in a neighboring county.

Confederate muster rolls for DeWitt County companies differed as to the type of information recorded. Some rolls noted the availability of horses and wagons (pistols, shotguns, rifles, lances), or identified the place of birth, age, or county of residence for each member, or specified the special duty of members such as engineers, surgeons or musicians. Most members of units organized in DeWitt County were residents of the county but many residents of Goliad, Gonzales and Victoria Counties enlisted with DeWitt County companies. Since many DeWitt County residents also enlisted directly in Texas State Troop units or Confederate units organized in neighboring counties, there is no definitive records of the military service of each DeWitt County resident who served during the Civil War. But, based on the fact that over 700 individuals have been identified as volunteering, it is thought that the number of DeWitt County residents who served but are unidentified is not large.

Of the twelve companies organized in DeWitt County during the Civil War, nine were organized early in 1861-1862 and three were organized about two years later, in the Winter of 1863-64, when Union General Nathaniel P. Banks invaded the lower and central Texas coast. Of the nine companies organized early, four enrolled as recognized and lettered companies in Confederate Cavalry Regiments which subsequently served from New Mexico to the Carolinas. One of the companies organized in 1864 immediately joined Colonel Rip

Ford's Confederate Cavalry on the Rio Grande. Many of the initial volunteers in the other militia companies later joined Confederate units being organized in adjoining counties. The units formed in neighboring counties that attracted DeWitt County volunteers included McCulloch's Texas Regiment of Mounted Rifles, a company of which was organized in April, 1861 in Gonzales; Colonel Alfred Hobby's 8th Infantry Regiment formed in Refugio in May, 1862; Waul's Legion organized by General Thomas Waul of Gonzales; and Major Edwin Wallers' Brigade in the Texas 2nd Cavalry organized in San Antonio. Individual Confederate volunteers from the County identified by Nellie Murphree in "A History of DeWitt County" include the following: 1) John D. Anderson; 2) George Monroe Alexander; 3) Andrew Jackson Bell; 4) Colonel August Buchel (1st Texas Cavalry); 5) Columbus Burns (Giddings Battalion); 6) Samuel Daniel Calhoun (8th Cavalry); 7) John Richard Calhoun; 8) Austin H. Clegg; 9) George A. Ferguson; 10) Dr. William D. Finney; 11) Alfred Friar; 12) William S. Friar (24th Cavalry); 13) Rudolph Kleberg; 14) Captain Francis J. Lynch; 15) John Frederick McCrabb (Hudson's Co.); 16) James Albert McDonald; 17) William J. McManus (2d. Cavalry); 18) James Hollis Moore (McCulloch's Brigade); 19) Judge David Murphree; 20) Alex Murphree (1st Cavalry); 21) James Hill Pridgen; 22) Redding Smith Pridgen (5th Cavalry); 23) Wiley Washington Pridgen, Jr.; 24) Sam Rankin; 25) Robert Rankin; 26) Major Gustav Schleicher; 27) James Sutton (Waller's Regiment); 28) William Sutton (Borden's Regiment); 29) John Pettus York; 30) Josiah York; 31) William J. Weisiger; 32) Dr. William Watt White; 33) Edmund Fox Wilson (Wood's Regiment)

The first company to be organized in DeWitt County was the "DeWitt Rifles." On April 24, 1861, just two weeks after Fort Sumter was fired upon, Captain W.R. Friend organized in Clinton a company of volunteers for service to the Confederate States. The "DeWitt Rifles" subsequently became Company "E" of the 8th Texas Cavalry, referred to as Terry's Texas Rangers. The company after being organized filed two muster rolls in late April which included the following officers and men: Captain W.R. Friend; 1st Lt. James K. White; 2nd Lt. Alexander H. Sample; 2nd Lt. John M. Brownson; 1st Sgt. Thadeus J. Brownson; 2nd St. Gilbert Gay; 2nd Sgt. William C. McCann: 3rd Sgt. H.J. Tuggle; 3rd Sgt. J.R. Hosmer; 4th Sgt. Martin King; 4th Sgt. H.C. Thomas; 5th Sgt. Benjamin F. McCann; 1st. Cpl. William C. Odom; 2nd Cpl. Mason Arm; 3rd Cpl. Samuel A. Wofford; 4th Cpl. John H. Pleasants; Privates: Franklin Wofford; James M. Wheat; William A. Stevens; Wiley W. Armstrong; Michael Hiller

On May 11, 1861 Chief Justice H.B. Boston of DeWitt County certified to the Governor that an election had been held at the Armory of the "DeWitt Rifles" for officers on April 22, and that the named four officers had been duly elected according to the returns made by the First Sergeant. It should be noted that one of the original early volunteers as a private in this the first company organized in the county was W.R. Scurry, who four months later would be appointed Lieutenant Colonel and command the forces in Sibley's Brigade in a decisive battle in New Mexico within a year. According to records available, William R. Scurry was the only Confederate General from Texas who entered Confederate service first as an enlisted private.

The following additional volunteers joined the "DeWitt Rifles during May and June: James M. Wheat; Michael O'Brien; Samuel D. Calhoon; Franc Reidel; J.C. Wilson; Daniel Reid; Henry Reid; Robert Roehl; Nathan Arm; John Roberts; E.F. Wallace; P. McNeil; — Stevenson; James P. Patterson; J.M. Brooks; M. Miller.

On August 9, 1861, Captain Friend wrote to Colonel X.B. Debray who was at that time Adjutant to the Governor of Texas, advising that his men were ready to move. The movement occurred shortly thereafter with the "DeWitt Rifles" Company enrolling as Company "E" of the 8th Texas Cavalry in Houston on September 9, The Company movements from Houston were swift and numerous. By mid-September Terry's Texas Rangers were in New Orleans and by October had been assigned to General Wheeler's cavalry command then in Kentucky.

Terry's Texas Rangers was recognized as one of the most daring and colorful Texas cavalry units that fought in the Civil War. Shortly after leaving New Orleans in the Fall of 1861, it was occupied in the skirmishes that preceded the Battle at Shiloh fought in Spring of 1862, the first major battle in which the unit served with distinguished valor. In 1863 and 1864 Terry's Rangers were engaged in numerous raids deep behind Northern lines, reconnaissance missions and dismounted front line duty across the Western Theater, but primarily in Tennessee, Georgia, and the Carolinas. Few of the original officers and men from DeWitt County who first organized Company "E" of the Texas 8th Cavalry in Clinton in the Spring of 1861 were paroled with the unit in June, 1865 when those who remained returned

The second DeWitt County company to organize and enroll as a Confederate Cavalry Company was the "Davis Guards" from Terryville and Concrete under the command of Captain Andrew Jackson Scarborough who filed its initial muster roll in June 1861. The original muster roll contained the following four officers, 4 sergeants, 4 corporals, and 54 privates: Capt. A.J. Scarborough; 1st Lt. J.B. Holland; 2nd Lt. J.D. Terry; 3rd Lt. A.T. Brooks; 1st Sgt. Wm. P. Atkinson; 2nd Sgt. A.H. Wyley; 3rd St. Daniel Doherty; 4th Sgt. James Byers; 1st Corpl. A.B. Cudd; 2nd Corpl. Jas. A. Goode; 3rd Corpl. Robt. Goode; 4th Corpl. B.F. McDonald; Engineer A.H. Wilson; Privates: John Shows; G.B. Goode; J.T. Smith; T. Thigpen; Wm. C. Cavendish, Ser.; C. Thomas; John Hollan; A.J. Goodson; W.J. Hargrove; A.P. Atkinson; J.H. Adkinson; Geo Byars; Jas Coble; R.A. Holland; John McManus; Wm. W. Burge; J.D. Sellars; E.M. Smith; J.A. Crawford; A.G. Gibbs; A. Granberry; H. Hollan; Wm. Rush; W.H.H. Holland; L. Farrer; L.W. Howard; John Howard; Wm. V. Boothe; C.C. Woodward; J.E. King, Surgeon; J.E. Lynch; Edward Rayly; H. Vanderhider; J.C. Beasly; Dan Cudd; P.L. Barns; Wm. B. McDonald; Chs. Curry.

The "Davis Guards" had been unofficially organized for over six weeks before formally filing the state required organizational papers. The company in mid-April along with Captain Friend's "DeWitt Rifles" had engaged in the first Confederate combat action taken in Texas directly against Union forces. The federal vessel the "Star of the West" lay at anchor in the Gulf off Indianola ready to disembark to an east coast port with 500 Union troops that had been stationed at posts in Texas and were awaiting departure at Green Lake and Saluria. Under the command of Colonel Earl Van Dorn on April 17, only five days after the commencement of hostilities at Fort Sumter, Texas troops captured the vessel and attempted to block the exodus of the Union troops. However, Major C.C. Sibley who was in command of the Federal forces secured two schooners to evacuate his troops. This final escape effort was blocked on April 25, by four Confederate ships occupied by 20 companies with about 1,200 local militia volunteers. These companies had reported together at Victoria on the 23rd and 24th. The "Davis Guards" and "DeWitt Rifles" were the two companies from DeWitt County that were on board the Confederate vessels ready to fight with the other companies from Victoria, Gonzales, Lavaca, Goliad, Fayette and Matagorda. The first naval engagement involving DeWitt County companies was a clear victory.

At the time this naval action occurred off Indianola, the local Indianola home guard companies had not been formally organized. This organization occurred in June of 1861. Many of the volunteers at that time and others who joined the effort later, subsequently moved to DeWitt County. These include members of the Proctor, Howerton, Woodward, Muegge, Reiffert, Frobese, Kleinecke, Sheppard, Wagner, Freund, Reuss, Flick and many other Indianola families.

Captain Scarborough filed for the "Davis Guards" as required formal monthly muster rolls to the Adjutant General in Austin for the months of June, July, and August, 1861, before the company was enrolled as a unit in General Sibley's Cavalry Brigade. The June report noted in the column for "Remarks" that "Owing to incessant rains, I have not been able to get my company together for 3 weeks. Before I can comply with the Act of 15th February, 1858, we will have to hold another election which we will do in a short time if it ever does quit raining and then you can have commissions issued accordingly." The Captain's enthusiasm was reflected when he added "The Company is willing to anywhere if it is to New York to get a fight." The July report noted that each member had a horse and that the unit had their own weapons which included 50 shotguns, 35 rifles and 15 revolvers.

During the Summer the following new volunteers joined the Company: Wm. C. Terrell; W.C. Thompson; S.G. Gibbs; W. Atkinson; F.C. Beasley; W. McCord; M.H. Allen; J. Terry; John Shows; H. Garrett; S. Wright; A.J. Goodson; C. Thames; Wm. Thames; R.H. Ray; S. Bradley; C. Simpson; J. Hickey; J. Valentine; W. Valentine; J.C. Collinham; Charles Sanders; J.E. Sellers; W. Harris; Charles Sanders; A. McAlman; J.W. Middlebrook; James Johnson; James Riley; George Riley; E. Bagby; F. Batchalor; G. Morgan; A.C. Daniels; John May; P. Dunn; J. Smith; John Spalding; J. H. Andrew; F. Buchel; Wm. Murphy; Wm. Priestly; M.H. Alber.

The "Davis Guards" became Company "B" of the 4th Texas Cavalry in August, 1861. The DeWitt County company had recognizable companies to fight with in the 4th Regiment since Company "A" had been organized by Captain W.P. Hardeman from neighboring Caldwell County and Company "D" had been formed from the "Guadalupe Rangers."

In the Fall of 1861 the 4th Cavalry Regiment was brigaded with the 5th Cavalry and 7th Cavalry into General H.H. Sibley's Brigade. Captain Redden S. Pridgen and other DeWitt County volunteers had earlier joined the 5th Cavalry. The Brigade, in October, rode west out of San Antonio to drive the Union forces from New Mexico. They followed many of the same steps taken during the Santa Fe Expedition in 1841 when citizen soldiers from the Republic of Texas at President Lamar's direction rode across West Texas from San Antonio to occupy New Mexico and the fate of the Brigade was not dissimilar to that of the earlier Expedition.

This DeWitt County company was unique because in command of the 4th Cavalry Regiment was their own DeWitt County commanding officer, Lieutenant Colonel William Read Scurry. General Sibley had initially commissioned Colonel James Reily to command the 4th during the New Mexico Campaign, but before the troops departed San Antonio, General Sibley sent Colonel Riley on a special mission to Mexico and ordered Lieutenant Colonel Scurry to command the Regiment.

William Scurry had moved to Texas from Gallitin, Tennessee as a young attorney in the late 1830's and settled initially in Brenham. He married Janette B. Sutton in December, 1846. His prior military service was distinguished by having been an aide-de-camp to Texas General Thomas J. Rush in 1842, having later enlisted as a private in the 2nd Texas Mounted Volunteers during the Mexican War, and having been promoted before the close of the War to the rank of Major. He had practiced law in Clinton immediately before the outbreak of hostilities and represented DeWitt County as a member of the Secession Convention.

General Sibley's battle campaign in New Mexico commenced on February 21, 1862 with the engagement at Valverde on the Rio Grande above Fort Craig. General Sibley's Confederate forces there were under the direct command of Colonel Thomas Green. Since Colonel Riley was otherwise assigned, Lt. Col. Scurry commanded the 4th Regiment. This, the first battle in New Mexico was a clear victory for the Confederate forces. Colonel Green in his formal report on the action stated: "I will only mention the principal field and staff in the engagement. The cheering voice of Lieutenant Colonel Scurry was heard where the bullets fell thickest on the field." Scurry was shortly thereafter promoted to full Colonel.

Sibley's command then advanced to Albuquerque. On March 28th Colonel Scurry was in direct command of the Confederate troops at the decisive Battle of Glorieta. The DeWitt County Davis Guards fought that day with Lieutenant Holland in command of the Company. Colonel Scurry, in his official report as field commander, noted that of the Confederate loss of 36 men killed, 24 were from the 4th Regiment, 1 from the 5th and 8 from the 7th. Colonel Scurry and most historians have characterized the engagement at Glorieta as a victory for the Confederate forces. But a loss of supplies and support shortly thereafter required the territory of New Mexico to be abandoned and the Confederate troops were forced to return to Texas by the Summer of 1862.

The 4th Cavalry was subsequently remounted and placed under the command of Colonel William P. Hardeman in time to participate in Confederate General Magruder's successful joint assault by land forces under the direct command of General Scurry and sea forces under General Tom Green to retake Galveston on January 1, 1863. The Texas 2nd Cavalry Regiment was also significantly engaged in this battle and numerous DeWitt County volunteers were included in the ranks of Major Waller's Brigade. The close relationship between the DeWitt County Company "B" of the 4th Texas Cavalry and General Scurry continued into early 1864 during the Red River Campaign.

The "DeWitt Guerilla" Company was organized by Captain Josiah Taylor in Clinton on September 1, 1861. The Chief Justice of DeWitt County, H.B. Boston, certified on October that the following officers and Orderly Sergeant had been elected: Captain Josiah Taylor; 1st Lt. W.J. Porter; 2nd Lt. John R. Kelsoe; 3rd Lt. Charles Ormand; Orderly Sergeant James Brown.

The muster roll filed and certified by Captain Taylor at the time the unit was organized, noted that "This Guerilla Company furnishes their own horses, arms and accoutrements, will serve without pay or reward from the Confederate Government and will go into service, wherever the State of Texas is actually invaded by an enemy." It included the following names of privates: L.L. Warren; Samuel Epperson; Wm. Culpepper; R.B. White; James M. Dow; T.H. Clark; J.F. Blair; P.T. Brown; Georg Witting; D.B. Peavy; Hugh Buschick; G.W. Humphreys; J.G. Montgomery; W.B. Prator; William Aaron; Julius Gleiss; W. von Hinueber; W.G. Bell; Robert Kleberg; William S. Brown, James B. Brown; T.H. Reed; M.V. King; Johnson Henryes; H.W. Corley; W.A. Rainey; R.B. York; Charles F. Thieme; Ben Dalley; G.W. Brooks, jun.; James Brooks; A.M. Summers; W.D. Ford; Wm. A. Adams; Turner Tate; R. Flowers; James Brown, jun.; Edmond Marlow; Adolf Haun; C.C. Whittington; Peter Walker; Gustav Holzapfel; B.B. Brooks; James Humphreys; Montgomery Blackwell; W.A. Taylor; David Murry, jun.; Thomas Chandler; J.M. Murry; John R. Hamilton.

During the months before the Guerilla Company enrolled as Company "G" of Colonel Peter C. Woods 36th Texas Cavalry, Captain Taylor filed several monthly muster rolls that reflect the location of the unit, new enlistments and general remarks. In March, 1862, Captain Taylor filed a muster roll that was certified in Meyersville which included a number of new recruits but noted that "Great many of our Company has gone off to Kentucky, at least six or seven." This note probably referred to the members who had left the "DeWitt Guerilla" Company to join the "DeWitt Rifles" with Terry's Texas Rangers who were then in Kentucky.

The last muster roll filed on April 11, 1862 by Captain Taylor from San Antonio reflects a large number of additional new recruits from Goliad, Karnes and Victoria Counties. A list of the new recruits added to the company follows: J.F. Blair; W.A. Adams; R.C. Eckhardt; John Adcock; J. Austin; T.C. Smith; M.A. Porterfield; J. Robertson; H. Foster; B. Lampley; W.B. Praytor; C.G. Bruce; Urban Bluntzer; Charles Ormond (musician): Russell Baker: Rosseau Baker; H. Bower; R.B. York; Julius Sharry; L.P. Wilson; G.M. Williams; R.B. York; Jonathan York; W.C. Middleton; B.F. Middleton; J.D. Newberry; C.W. Nau; A. Ott; J.R. Russerman; J.L. Reed; L. Rimschneider; J. Von Roeder; D.D. Scrivener; John M. Taylor; R.E. Tower; John D. Adams, John Adcock; Wm. G. Bell; Frederick Whitting; C.B. Holmes; A. Kelly; Wm. Kahn; Geo. Lunderbach; Ed W. Marlow; L. Menn; Martin Minke; Fred Menn; H. Menn; C. Davis; R.M. Gill; Wm. Gerhardt; M. Galbert; P.T. Hall; W.M.C. When Colonel Peter Woods' 36th Texas Cavalry was organized in San Antonio in June, 1862, the DeWitt Guerillas became Company "G" with Captain Taylor as Company Commander. Woods' cavalry regiment was assigned duty primarily along the Texas coast during 1862 and was placed in positions to defend the central Texas coast when Union General Banks' successfully invaded and occupied Corpus Christi, Aransas Pass and Indianola. When the Union forces were withdrawn from the Texas coast in early 1864, Colonel Woods' 36th Cavalry rode east to join forces under Cavalry General Tom Green during the Red River Campaign.

The fourth and last company organized in DeWitt County that subsequently enrolled as a mounted company in a Confederate Cavalry Regiment was the "Shiloh Home Guards." It was organized in July 1861 by Capt. H.G. Woods. Captain Woods' sworn statement noted the company was "organized at Shiloh in the County of DeWitt on the west side of the Guadalupe River and about eight miles west of the town of Clinton." This stated identification of the location of the DeWitt community of Shiloh apparently was considered helpful at that time

The muster roll filed when the company was organized included the following officers and men: Captain H.G. Woods; 1st Lt. D.N. Hardy; 2nd Lt. E.M. Edwards; 3rd Lt. J.H. Calliham; 1st Sgt. Joel L. Miles; 2nd Sgt. C. Hartman; 3rd Sgt. Anda Brown; 4th Sgt. Wm. Aaron; 1st Corp. J.D. Campbell; 2nd Corp. J.T. Graves; 3rd Corp. S.F. Hester; Privates: W.S. Friar; G.M. McFarland; E.F. Harris; F.W. Callaway; Mason Lowrey; Math Anderson; Fred Brown; J.N. Fraser; J.F. Ainsworth; Robert Bobit; J.D. Goldman; J. Escuelaro; T.W. Robert; W. McMillan; J.D. McFarland; J.B. Lowrey; R.W. Insall; M.Z. Woods; B. Goldman; Walter Anderson; David Murray; Wyatt Hanks; J.O. Brantley; Wm. L. Brown; J.H. Friar; L.H. Yocum; W.M. Lenton; Joseph H. Brown; J.F. Shannon; Jacob A. Miller; R.H. Dickson; Milan A. Harper; O.T. Cedro; D.B. Calliham; Clay Woods; B.J. Brown; Nathan Lambert; H.T. Lowrey; Tho. Glimp; James F. Baseter; T.J. Bailey; Jonathan York; T.M. Murry; Peter Metz; Lilvenes Brown; Ch. Dahlmann; Anton Metz.

Captain Woods' "Shiloh Guards" were enrolled as Company "K" of the 24th Texas Cavalry, Colonel Francis C. Wilkes' Regiment, at Hempstead, Texas in April, 1862. Poor health required the resignation of Captain Woods in September of 1862. However, the men from DeWitt County continued to serve in what became one of Texas proudest infantry brigades.

The 24th Cavalry Regiment was dismounted at the time it was captured at Arkansas Post in January, 1863. Many of the 5,000 Confederate troops captured at the Post, including the men of the 24th and those with Colonel Garland's 6th Texas Infantry which had been organized earlier at Victoria, were held prisoners of war at Union camps during the Winter and early Spring of 1863. After these troops were exchanged at City Point near Richmond, Virginia in April and May, 1863, the 24th was consolidated with the 17th, 18th, and 25th Cavalry (dismounted); into Deshler's Brigade before the Battles of Chickamanga and Missionary Ridge fought near Chattanooga, Tennessee in the Fall of 1863. In early 1864 the 24th was consolidated into Granbury's Texas Brigade for a long succession of bloody and costly battles including those at Dalton, Georgia, New Hope Church, Picket's Mill, and Atlanta, and then with Texas General John Bell Hood at Franklin, Tennessee and Nashville in late 1864. Few members of the 24th survived these engagements and were present when the Regiment was paroled at Greensboro, North Carolina, in May, 1865.

In the Summer of 1861, three additional militia companies were organized in southwestern DeWitt County, the "Hulan Reserve" from Yorktown, the "Coleto Guards" with headquarters at Mayersville, and a company organized from residents near the county line between DeWitt and Goliad Counties.

The DeWitt County Court certified the muster oll of the "Hulan Reserve" as submitted by Captain Caesar Eckhardt on June 16 as follows: Captain Caesar Eckhardt; 1st Lt. Fredrick Bauer; 2nd Lt. Louis Fuch; 2nd Lt. Chas. Karnei; Orderly Sgt. Robt. Eckhardt; Sgt. I. Gohlke; Sgt. G. Potter; Sgt. L. Lenz; Corp. John Lickor; Corp. A. Greissen; Corp. A. Vorwerk; Corp. F. Hoppe. Privates: Julius Meyer; S. Grun; I. Quast; F. Wehe; D. Schneider; P. Metz; C.H. Husig; A. Riedesel; C. Duerr; I. Schweizer; S.C. Spies; A. Kraege; G. Schulz; W. Gohmert; E. Fechnor; F. Schrafer; F. The notation made on the muster roll of the "Hulan Reserve" was that they were "lancers" and that except for the officers and several privates, the only weapon carried by the enlisted men was the lance. References to the company in the State Archives include notations identifying the same unit as the "Yorktown Light Guard" and the "Hopkinsville Home Guard." The "Hulan Reserve" was organized as a reserve company for service only within the state to repel invasions and did not join as a unit any Confederate States regiment.

The "Coleto Guards" organized in Meyersville by Captain Robert Kleberg was certified on June 17, one day after the certification of the "Hulan Reserve" militia company. The DeWitt County Clerk certified the following muster roll of officers and men: Captain Robert Kleberg; 1st Lt. Jakob Schiwetz; 2nd Lt. Andreas Buehrig; 3rd Lt. Cristopher Diebel; 1st Sgt. George Witting; 2nd Sgt. Bernhard Eckhardt; 3rd Sgt. Frederick Albrecht; 4th St. Jakob Schiwetz, sen.; 5th Sgt. Hugo Buschick; 1st Copl. W. Wilms; 2nd Copl. G. Holzapfel; 3rd Copl. A. Zengerle.

The "Coleto Guards" like the "Hulan Reserve" was organized only as a reserve company to repel any invasion of Texas and not to serve as a unit in a Confederate States regiment.

A third militia home guard company identified as being assembled from the limits of Goliad and DeWitt Counties was organized in August, 1861 by Captain Jacob Schiwitz. Officially the unit was within the 29th Brigade of Texas State troops. The officers and men were certified as follows: Captain Jacob Schiwitz; 1st. Lt. A. Buhrig; 2d. Lt. C. Diebel; Sgt. Rudolph Tampke; Sgt. Fred Albrecht; Sgt. Willie Wilms; Sgt. Berhard Eckhart; Corp. Christoph Albrecht; Corp. Tobias Wilms; Corp. Louis Letsch; Corp. Louis Franke. Macha; Anton Hotz; Anton Goly; Henry Arnecke; Adam Kruhmer; Julius Franke.

During the fall and winter of 1861-1862, no additional companies were organized in DeWitt County, but during March of 1862, the 24th Texas Brigade certified the election of officers for 6 new companies in DeWitt County. One of the six companies is identified in Texas Archive records as "Company D" from DeWitt County's Precinct Number 5 organized by Captain J.T. Kilgore of Yorktown in March, 1862. Most of the men were residents of Yorktown and about fifty percent gave Germany as their place of birth. The State Archives had no record of any county official certification of the unit, but the following muster roll was certified by its Commanding Officer, Captain Kilgore: Captain J.T. Kilgore; 1st Lt. L.B. Wright; 2nd Lt. M.J. Wiethau; 3rd Lt. W. Anderson; 1st Sgt. C. Hartmann; 2nd Sgt. T.M. Stevenson; 3rd Sgt. O.H. Bennett; 4th Sgt. T.C. Caruthers; 5th Sgt. D.N. Hardy; 1st Copl. W.T. Terrel; 2nd Copl. L. Albrecht; 3rd Copl. E. Klaes; 4th Copl. T.H. Caliham. Privates: Jacob Dentler; Jno. Haller; Henry Hubert; Amos Ayers; Joseph Kobitz (musician); Aug. Riedesel; W. Landgraber; H. Heraff; A. Mertens; Jacob Hochet; Walter Edwards; E.G. Sevier; F. Tahnso; R.L. Foster.

The second company to be organized in March, 1862, was the Concrete Home Guard under Captain M.G. Jacobs. The State Archives had a record of the company's certification of officers but no roster of enlisted men. The officers certified as being from Precinct Number 4, DeWitt County were: Captain M.G. Jacobs; 1st Lt. J.E. King; 2d Lt. H. Edgar; 2d Jr. Lt. R.P. Carr.

A list of the officers and men in the Concrete Home Guard is included in "A History of DeWitt County" by Nellie Murphree as follows: Captain M.G. Jacobs; 1st Lt. T.J. Stell; 2d Lt. John C. Terrell; 2d Lt. Henry Edgar; 1st Sgt. M.J. Baker; 1st Sgt. Hyman Edgar. Privates: J.A. Crawford; W.P. Priestly; R.P. Carr; D.L. Peebles; F.M. Cunningham; John O. McGhee; J.G. Alfonds; W.W. Baker.

The officers elected for the companies organized in Precincts Number 1, 3, 4 and 6 were as follows: Precinct No. 1 — Capt. N.M. Stukes; 1st Lt. R.F. Scudder; 2nd Lt. J.M. Smith; 2nd Jr. Lt. J.B. Cox. Precinct No. 3 — Capt. Wm. J. Wissiger; 1st Lt. R.H. Dixon; 2nd Lt. S. Myers; 2nd Jr. Lt. J.D. Stenchcomb. Precinct No. 4 — Capt. W. Hinuber; 1st Lt. Charles Diebel; 2nd Lt. W. Wilms; 3rd Lt. B. Eckhart. Precinct No. 6 — Capt. I.D. Terry; 1st Lt. H.C. Spener; 2nd Lt. T.F. Johnson; 2nd Lt. N.V. Scarborough.

No roster of enlisted men was found for these four companies.

Despite what appears to be an enthusiastic response to the Confederate call to colors from DeWitt County, County Chief Justice Boston felt compelled to explain by letter dated March 19, 1862 addressed to state enlistment officials that the County was not delinquent in providing enlistments. The Justice noted that over 490 men from DeWitt County had left or were leaving immediately, with only the companies of Captain Taylor and Captain Schiwitz uncommitted.

During the 18-month period between the Winter of 1861-62 and the Fall of 1863 no military companies were organized in DeWitt County. But three relatively small companies or units were organized during a six-month period between September, 1863 and February, 1864. It was during this six-month period that General Nathaniel Banks, a pre-war Governor of Massachusetts, initiated the largest and most sustained military effort ever undertaken to occupy Texas. The largest hostile military force in Texas before the Union 13th Corps with over 12,000 men invaded the south and central Texas coast was Santa Anna's army from Mexico which included no more than 2,000 men during the Texas Revolution.

The reasons for the special effort to occupy Texas and particularly the Houston-Galveston area in late 1863 include the President's international relations concern over the growing closeness that was developing between the Confederacy, and particularly elements in Texas, and France which at that time had occupied and was in military control of Mexico. The extensive Confederate cotton trade that moved overland across Texas along the Gulf coast to ports in Mexico for export was supplying Europe with scarce cotton to be manufactured into goods in competition with eastern United States mills which were in need of the same raw product. The cotton export trade also provided the South with one of its few sources of revenue and, in exchange, desperately need medical and military supplies.

The Union forces first major attack to occupy Texas was initiated in early September, 1863 with the unsuccessful naval action at Sabine Pass where 5,000 Union troops on a flotilla of 20 transports led by four gunboats were halted, turned around, embarrassed and defeated principally by a young, unassuming but determined Texas naval artillery junior Lieutenant Dick Dowling and his 42 men.

This action at Sabine Pass triggered an alarm, and in later September the "Mounted Minute Men" were organized for home defense in Yorktown by Captain Joseph Tumlinson. The muster roll certified by Chief Justice Kilgore of DeWitt County included the following officers and men: Captain Joseph Tumlinson; 1st Lt. Walker Anderson; 2nd Lt. L.B. Wright; 3rd Lt. C. Eckhardt; 1st Sgt. J.T. Kilgore. Privates: J.H. Brown; J.H. Callihan; F.W. Caloway; C. Dahlman; E.N. Edwards; Adolph Gentsch; Tho. Glimp; M. Gilbert; C. Hartman; C. Hoff; F. Hoppe; Daniel Farris; N. Kaufman; J.L. Miles; A. Newcomer; M. Oppenheimer; J.T. Porter; W.R. Russell; Joseph Riddle; J. Sickor; Joseph Stewart; C. Strunner; Jno. M. Taylor; F. Welke; John Warsiker; A.C.

All members of the "Mounted Minute Men"; were recorded as residents of Yorktown. Their ages spread from 26 to 65.

Two months later, in November 1863, the Union command in New Orleans launched a second attack on the Texas coast but this time initially landing at the southern most point on the Texas coast near Point Isabel. The seriousness of this invasion effort was emphasized by the presence of Major General Nathaniel P. Banks with the sixteen vessel invasion fleet. The General who at that time was Commander of all Union forces west of the Mississippi had no mission more urgent than that of occupying the State of Texas. As a former Governor, General Banks had very serious presidential aspirations which would be greatly enhanced by the notoriety of being the conqueror of Texas and liberator of southern cotton for New En-

In November, 1863, the General's 13th Corps with 7,000 men having disembarked from 13 transports occupied Brownsville and then moved northward up the Texas coast. General Banks led the troops up to Corpus. A Union military map held in the National Archives, depicts the location of Union Troops on the Texas coast in November, 1863 with the Stars and Stripes flagged at Brownsville, Point Isabel, Mustang Island off Corpus Christi, Aransas Pass, Matagorda Light House, Saluria and Indianola. The port of Indianola had been harrassed, looted and briefly occupied earlier, shortly after Galveston harbor had fallen in October 1862. During late November elements of Colonel Hobby's 8th Infantry Regiment which included Captain Joseph M. Reuss' Artillery Battery and Captain P.H. Breeden's Company had engaged the enemy. During the engagement Company I of the 8th Regiment was captured on Mustang Island and later dispatched as prisoners of war to New Orleans.

By late November, 1863, three Union Divisions with over 12,000 troops were in the southern Matagorda Bay area, poised to march overland to Houston and Galveston by routes crossing the lower Guadalupe, Colorado and Brazos Rivers. DeWitt County located up the Guadalupe River less than 60 miles from Indianola presented a good prospect for a battle-ground.

A new unit, the "DeWitt Militia", was formed during late January and enrolled in the 24th Brigade of Texas State troops. The muster roll which included no officers was certified by the Enrolling Officer, Sam W. Lane, on January 30 to include with a subsequent addition, the following names: Samuel Hayes; T.W. Robinson; C.W. Csafon; I.T. Garnes; M. Blackwell; Rufus Smith; Henry Edgar; F.M. Taylor; W.S. Purson; I.N. Dunlay; Cy I. Stevens; John Arnold; C. Carsner; D.G. Cuero; Harvey Page; W.E. Tips; Jacob Gugenham. Additions: A. Seers; - Sieviers; O. Hoyer; Julius Waggoner; B. Kinsey; L. Mean; F. Ploger; A. Buhrig; N. Kohler; W.O. Neinumber; I. Gaunould; Jacob Reinhardt; A. Hotz; G. Venable; - Hantz; - Singler; -Ireman.

The last unit to be organized in the county was Captain Jacob G. Powers' Company raised to support Colonel Rip Ford's Regiment on the Rio Grande. The following officers and men were enrolled in DeWitt County on February 15, 1864 in Captain Powers Confederate Company: Captain Jacob G. Powers; 1st Lt. Robert Bishop; 2nd Lt. James R. Murrah; 3rd Lt. Gilis McDaniel; 1st Sgt. J.M. Dowling; 2nd Sgt. Wm. J. Park; 3rd Sgt. Wm. Murrah; 1st Corp. Lewis J. McClanahan; 2nd Corp. James Simmons. Privates: Moses G. Ayers; David F. Ball; Andrew J. Butts; James H. Carnson; Rufus Colman; Vincent Cissell; Ira A. Duris; Andrew Garner; Robert Goldman; John Goldman; J.C. Ives; Hermes Johnson; Julius Kysel; Wm. A. Lawrence; Andrew J. Law; Peter Lex; George Harrison; Abel Malloe; Lewis May; F. McDonald; Joseph McCord; M.S. Osburn; Joel Petty; George Petty; Wm. Prusse; Aba S. Rice; James B. Riley; Frank Smith; J.M. Tankerly; John Turner; Andrew Wisloby; Henry Young.

Preparations for a possible Union army invasion up the Guadalupe River from the coast had commenced earlier in December, 1863 in Gonzales where Fort Waul was being constructed on the Guadalupe River. The Confederate fort was located on a ridge within a mile of the Guadalupe and San Marcos Rivers. The location and configuration of the fort was designed to provide a defense from a river attack from Union gun boats and allowed for the placement of over a dozen cannons.

DeWITT COUNTY DURING THE CIVIL WAR

T12

The threat of a Union advance up the Guadalupe River using light draft river steamboats was real. General Banks had acquired two river steamboats, one the "Mustang," in Brownsville belonging to the King and Kennedy business enterprise. These vessels had been used to occupy Rio Grande City more than 100 miles up the Rio Grande. The lightest draft vessels drawing three and one half feet were used in the operations on Matagorda Bay. A detailed Union map of the Texas coastal region prepared in February, 1864 for General Bank's Texas Expedition noted that the Guadalupe River was "navigable to Victoria for boats drawing three and one-half feet of water" and that "the average width of the Riv. from Victoria to Gonzales abt 60 yds" with a rapid current and "supplies plenty, on both sides." This type of information placed on the Union map would be included only if requested for purposes of planning the scope of the Expedition.

Fort Waul was large, measuring about 750 feet in length by 250 feet in width and including an interior block house with the powder magazine and granaries, a well and cistern. The detailed architectural plans of the fort including cross section diagrams of the parapet are in the National Archives. The fort was twice the size of Fort Debray constructed earlier by Confederate forces to defend the critical entrance to Matagorda Bay. An extensive three-mile system of breastworks and rifle pits was designed along the southern rim of the city facing the Guadalupe River and on three elevated points between the fort and the river. The large fortress could have been used only against Union gun boats that had fought their way through DeWitt County and passed Clinton.

Surplus ration for large Confederate troop movements had been stored earlier at Gonzales, Clinton, Victoria, and Hallettsville. Defensive preparations and military plans had been approved for alternate routes of Confederate retreat through Victoria to Clinton and Gonzales or to Hallettsville. Military orders had been issued to burn or destroy supplies that could not be removed. Reports were made of Union scouting activities fifty miles inland from Indianola. The Union threat was taken seriously.

The strength of the Union forces can be understood easily from the troop report of the 13th Corps filed on January 13 by Major General N.T. Dana from his Headquarters in Indianola. General Dana reported having three divisions on line, the 1st Division at Indianola with twelve regiments under the command of Brigadier General William P. Benton with 4,200 men from the states of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin and Ohio; the Second Division at Decrows Point on Matagorda Bay with seven regiments under Major General Francis J. Herron with 2,000 men, and the 4th Division also at Decrows Point with twelve regiments under the command of Brigadier General Thomas Ransom with 4,000 men. When the additional unassigned Union regiments of engineers, cavalry and artillery located along the coast in Texas were added, the total Union troop strength was approximately 13,000 to 15,000 men.

On January 25, 1864, Confederate Colonel James Duff reporting from Victoria to the Adjutant General at the Headquarters of the Army of Texas, stated that "The forces of the enemy at Decrows and Indianola consist of 3 divisions of the Fifteenth Corps, (cit. Thirteenth Corps) one division at Indianola and two at Decrows; say, in all, 15,000 men." The Colonel's intelligence report was accurate.

In defense, the Confederate troops headquartered near Houston in January, 1864 numbered about 12,000. These included General Tom Green's 4th and 5th Cavalry at Virginia Point and Colonel Woods' 36th Cavalry near San Bernard. In addition, there was in the vicinity of Houston Colonel August C. Buchel's Texas 1st Cavalry which had been organized on the Rio Grande during the previous Spring by men from around San Antonio and as far north as Belton and south as DeWitt and Jackson Counties. Colonel Buchel had received his basic military training in Paris and had served as a military instructor in the Turkish Army. After immigrating to Texas in 1845, he served as an aide-de-camp to General Zachary Taylor during the Mexican War. Before the Civil War commenced, he was a resident of Port Lavaca and served as collector for the port. His family association with DeWitt County extends back to the Civil War period, and many DeWitt County volunteers served under him.

General Dana filed on January 18 a detailed report from Indianola to Union Major General E.C. Ord in New Orleans. After suggesting in the report that the remaining Union cavalry located near Brownsville should ride across the country to join his forces near Victoria or Refugio, the General mentioned that he had no cavalry at his headquarters but that the Confederate forces under General Magruder had a large cavalry which he considered critical. The General closed the report with the resignation that he would await an increase in force with wagons and cavalry before moving inland from the coast.

This awaited increase in Union forces never came, and General Dana never moved toward Victoria or DeWitt County or Houston and Galveston. Confederate Colonel Duff reported to Brigadier General J.E. Slaughter on March 28, after entering on abandoned Indianola, "Citizens say they have gone to Louisiana to invade Texas from that direction." And so they had. General Banks had pulled his 15,000 troops and five general officers out of the Matagorda Bay area and redirected the 13th Corps back to Louisiana and up the Red River.

Two weeks after the report that General Banks had removed the Union's 13th Corps headquarters and thirty-three regiments from Indianola, the Union General was leading an even larger army with two Corps and 30,000 men up the Red River out of Alexandria, Louisiana enroute to Shreveport, the headquarters of General E. Kirby Smith, Commander of all Confederate troops west of the Mississippi. General Banks had with him the 4th Division and seven regiments that had been moved from Decrows Point. He also had replaced General Dana as Commander of the 13th Corps with General Thomas Ransom.

During the same two-week period between March 15 and the 1st of April, the DeWitt volunteer companies with their respective regiments had scrambled overland to the same destination, the Sabine Crossroads in the Red River Valley. General Scurry was one of the six Confederate Brigade Commanders under General Richard Taylor at Mansfield, the site of the first battle of the Red River Campaign. General Waul of Gonzales was Commander of the Brigade on Scurry's left flank. Colonel Buchel's 1st Texas Cavalry, Colonel Hardeman's 4th

Cavalry, Captain Wood's 36th Cavalry Battalion were all present and under the command of Major General Tom Green. The Battles of Mansfield and Pleasant Hill on April 8 and 9 decisively defeated General Banks and turned his forces around to return back down the Red River to Alexandria. General Banks had now lost three times — he had been embarrassed at Sabine Pass, bluffed by the Texas Cavalry at Indianola and militarily defeated on the Red River. No further attempts were made by Union forces to occupy Texas.

The war, however, was far from over for either the Texas infantry units under General William Scurry or the Texas cavalry units under Colonel August Buchel and General Tom Green. Colonel Buchel died on April 15 from wounds received during the Battle of Pleasant Hill. Both Generals were killed in battle within days after the Battle of Mansfield. General Green was killed four days after the battle by a canister while leading his cavalry troops against General Banks' retreating gunboats. General Scurry was killed at the Battle of Jenkins Ferry on April 30.

In General Waul's report from the Battle, the General from Clinton was referred to as the "gallant and daring Scurry." Gallant and daring the Clinton General was - he had been the lone commander of Confederate forces at Glorieta in New Mexico, the Commander of Confederate land forces during the daring and successful raid to retake Galveston on New Year's day and the Battalion Commander who General Richard Taylor selected to lead the initial charge at Mansfield. The State has erected a monument, a thirteen feet high marble obelisk, at the State Cemetery in Austin im memory of the Clinton General. Standing near is a second obelisk, this one erected by the State in the memory of "August Buchel - Colonel 1st Texas Cavalry - Brigadier General Confederate Army.

The two DeWitt County companies serving on the other side of the Mississippi in Northern Georgia during the Spring of 1864 were retreating with General Johnston toward Atlanta. The 24th Cavalry (dismounted) with numerous DeWitt County men had been consolidated into Granbury's Texas Brigade earlier that Spring and Terry's Texas Rangers were on the rampage with General Wheller while sometimes serving dismounted. The two units divided ways after the Battle of Atlanta in September. The Rangers followed and harrassed General Sherman on his march to Savannah, and Granbury's Brigade returned north with General Hood to Tennessee.

During the end of 1864 along the Rio Grande, some DeWitt County volunteers were still fighting the few Union forces in Texas then located near Brownsville. These skirmishes continued into the Spring of 1865 and finally provided the engagement generally recognized as the last battle of the Civil War. This action, the Battle of Palmito Hill, involved the Union forces at Brazos de Santiago and a Texas cavalry battalion that included DeWitt volunteers under the command of Major George Giddings. This last successful Confederate action occurred on the Texas coast on May 13 and provided an appropriate conclusion to the naval venture that the DeWitt Rifles and the Davis Guards helped initiate as the first Confederate action in Texas early in April, 1861.

During the war, once the early excitement had died away, DeWitt County faced the common problems of the day, and went about solving them in much the same manner her sister counties followed. On September 13, 1861, the commissioners court appropriated $150 for clothing and supplies for the Davis Guards, and appointed a committee to solicit clothes and supplies for the Confederate Army. A war tax was levied; and, in 1862, the number of "arms in DeWitt Co. fit for use in the service and number of persons left capable to bear arms, etc." was reported to the court. Sugar and coffee soon became scarce, and many substitutes were evolved. Cotton was carded, spun, and woven, and garments were made of the resulting cloth. Hair ropes were made to serve the purpose of grass ropes, and palmetto leaf hats became quite the vogue. In 1864, the citizens protested against the use of the courthouse for military or hospital purposes, probably because they wished to have nothing interfere with their custom of using the courthouse building as a place for public worship on

With the end of the war came the provisional government of the state, under A.J. Hamilton. This transition was noted in DeWitt County as follows: "Be it remembered that on Friday the 1st day of Sept. 1865, the Hon. Co. Court of DeWitt Co., under the Provisional Government of the State of Texas, (the officers thereof having been appointed and commissioned by His excellency A.J. Hamilton, Prov. Gov. Said State) met at the Court House in the town of Clinton, Texas, and was opened in the form of law. Officers Present: Hon. J.M. Baker, Chief Justice, J.F. Shannon and C. Cardwell, Co. Comm. Thos C. Smith, Clerk and Jacob A. Miller, Sheriff."

Immediately after the war was over Jayhawkers committed a series of robberies, but local committees of safety soon suppressed these activities; and the county gradually took up the same quiet existence it had lost with the opening of the war. In 1868 a gristmill and cotton gin were opened for business in Meyersville, and in 1869 a public ferry was established at Clinton. By 1872 the county was again bidding for the extension of a railroad from Victoria to Cuero, and the line was extended early in 1873. On April 23, Cuero became an incorporated town. In the same year, Rudolph Kleberg established the first newspaper in the county, The Cuero Star. On the first day's subscriptions he raised more than $1,000. Nash Institute, which later became Guadalupe Academy, was also opened in Cuero in 1873. Thus it may be seen that the period of Reconstruction was, in DeWitt County, as great a period of progress as any she had previously known.

With its establishment as the terminus of the county's only railroad, Cuero grew by leaps and bounds, and for a time had the reputation of being one of Texas' wildest frontier towns. Descriptions of the little town before "law and order"/came, sound almost as if they had been borrowed from a western story magazine. Restless cowboys drifted into saloons and engaged in intensely played poker games, where too many aces barely preceded the rattle of gunfire. Wagon trains and prairie schooners drawn by Mexican mules passed through the streets and camped outside the town, their faintly glowing campfires and the soft songs of the teamsters providing a strange contrast to the gaudy lights and boisterous noises of the town's saloons. Feuding parties chose the main street of the town as a place to settle their difficulties, while the business houses closed their doors. In 1874, however, the Home Protection Club was organized as a local militia unit, and issued a manifesto to the effect that any fighting to be started in the future would be started by them. Later the Texas Rangers were called in. The undesirable element was soon weeded out, and the growing pains were over.

In 1877 the county seat was transferred from Clinton to Cuero. The courthouse itself; fence and all, was removed from Clinton to its new site. This building burned in April 1894, and was replaced by the present three-story sandstone building in 1896. As described by the Texas Historical Records Survey Division in the 1930's, the DeWitt County Courthouse stands, "on the public square in the town of Cuero several blocks southeast of the main business district. The building is a three-story structure of light brown sandstone with facings of red sandstone. The steps are of rough pink granite. The tall clock tower rising above the front steps gives the entire building an air of dignity and stateliness."

By 1950 DeWitt County officials were finding their quarters crowded and outmoded. After discussion it was agreed, to the credit of DeWitt County citizens, to modernize rather than replace the old building which was structurally sound. Judge Stephen P. Hebert and the following County Commissioners, Joe B. Hunter, T.J. Ward, Joe R. Gras, and Fred D. DeDear, engaged the Guido Brothers Construction Company of San Antonio to renovate the building. The task was completed late in 1957 at a cost of $572,000.00. The present courthouse is unique; while maintaining the general appearance of the original structure the interior is distinctive, beautiful yet practical. Necessary space was added by excavating a basement to provide three modern floors and a basement. Central air conditioning, automatic elevators, handsome office furniture, soft decor, and well lighted offices and halls made the DeWitt County courthouse one of the most attractive official buildings in the state. The courthouse is listed in the National Register of Historic Sites in the United States.

DeWITT COUNTY AND THE CATTLE INDUSTRY

T13

The Years After the Civil War

The Civil War formally ended at Appomatox Court House on Easter Sunday, April 9, 1865. As usual the Texans were late getting the news and the last Confederate victory was at Palmetto Ranch, near Brownsville, in May, 1865.

Two major events occurred in DeWitt County in the next ten years. One was the development of the cattle industry; the other, the founding of Cuero. In this chapter the cattle industry will be explored. Future chapters will deal with the founding and growth of Cuero.

Following the war the southern states were left prostrate. An agricultural economy had been destroyed by four years of war and neglect. Farms had run down, vast areas had been devastated by the ferocity of battle, great armies had traveled back and forth across some of the Old South's most fertile lands with catastrophic results. The economy was bankrupt, there was no hard money, vast plantations were bereft of labor, the transportation system was destroyed, commerce had virtually ceased. To many it seemed an impossible task to resurrect the once prosperous states of the Confederacy.

Texas had, however, a great natural resource unavailable to the rest of the southern states — cattle. According to Dr. Walter Prescott Webb, there were in Texas in 1860 3,353,768 head of cattle. One investigator judged in 1880 that the number for 1860 should have been 4,758,400 head. In any event they multiplied rapidly during the war and represented economic salvation for Texas if Texas beef could only join up with Yankee dollars. As an added benefit to DeWitt County, the great bulk of this enormous herd of cattle was located in South Texas.

Although Texas had suffered the economic devastation of the war it had not suffered the physical damage of most of the south. Realistically Texas had scarcely been touched by Union armies. The Texans returning home were more easily able to pick up their ives and their occupations than were their brothers whose lands and cities had been fought over for four long years. There was, nevertheless, the galling presence of an occupying army and a carpetbagger government.

There had been attempts at marketing Texas cattle before the War Between the States although the greatest utilization of cattle had been for their hides and tallow. The marketing of beef had mainly consisted of the delivery of small herds to Indianola and Galveston for shipment by Gulf steamers to Cuba and New Orleans. A few Texas cattlemen had driven herds to St. Louis and an even smaller group had driven herds as far as Illinois and California. It was obvious, however, to the farsighted cattleman and trader that the real bonanza lay in trailing cattle to the railheads in Missouri and later Kansas for sale in the industrial north. Tough and unsavory the beef might be, but the worst of it was good enough for factory workers and the pick and shovel men of the railroads and too good for the reservation Indians under the corrupt regime of the Grant Republicans. The only question then: how to effect the union of Texas beef and northern appetites?

In the spring of 1866 Crockett Cardwell, a DeWitt County rancher and merchant, decided that the way to effect this was by driving a herd overland to St. Joseph, Missouri. Crockett Cardwell came to Texas in 1833, possibly was in Gonzales about that time. He was probably the first chain store operator in Texas as he had stores in Port Lavaca and Hallettsville. Following that, he bought the D.B. Friar store in the Cuero Creek area at the junction of the LaGrange-LaBahia and Victoria-Gonzales roads. He purchased the property in 1849 and operated it for the next 25 years in conjunction with a plantation and cattle business.

For the drive overland he assembled a herd of 1800 longhorn steers on Cardwell Flats, 4 miles north of present day Cuero. This herd was selected not for conformation or beauty but for stamina. It is a long walk from South Texas to St. Joseph, Mo. There were reds, whites, roans, duns, blue greys, black and whites, etc., each with a great spread of dagger pointed horns. Cardwell named Thornton Chisholm, a respected and capable cattleman from Clinton, as his trail boss. The herd was divided into two groups of 900 head each with Frank White and Dave Augustine as herd bosses. Each herd had a crew of 15 men. Peas Smith, a Negro, was the cook for the trip and evidently a good one because he made seven more trips up the trail. Some of the hands (they were not called cowboys) on the first drive were: Jack Lowe, Claude and Gene Guilminot, Leo and Eli Newman, Dock Augustine, G.M. (Tip) Alexander, Jim Hickey, Bigham White, Daly Davis, a Mr. Cruse, A. Kuykendall, Scrap Taylor, John Tumlinson, Jonas Mills, and Green Alexander.

On April 1, 1866, the first herd out of DeWitt County, and probably the first herd out of South Texas, was started for the railroad in Missouri. As nearly as can be determined they went by way of the present day towns of Gonzales, San Marcos, Austin, Round Rock, Georgetown, Glen Rose, Mineral Wells, Graham, Olney, Seymour, and Vernon, where they crossed the Red River at what was later to be known as Doans Crossing. After leaving the Red River, their route went by way of the present day Oklahoma towns of Frederick, Lawton, Anadarko, Chickasha, Blanchard, Norman, Oklahoma City, Chandler, Bristow, Sapulpa, Tulas, Collinsville, and Talala. From here they crossed into Kansas and headed northeast to St. Joseph, Missouri, where the herd was sold. The drive had taken seven months and ten days. Even though Crockett Cardwell lost money on the drive because of a large drop in the market, the way was now open. South Texas cattlemen knew they could get their herds to market. 260,000 head of Texas cattle went up the trail in 1866. Before the end of the trail, some 5,000,000 Texas cattle walked to the railroad in Missouri or Kansas or to the ranges of Wyoming and Montana. Texans returning with hard cash helped the state back on its feet and had as large an economic impact on the state, relatively, as the discovery of oil had in the early 1900's. The trail was the Spindletop of the 1860's and 70's.

The movement of cattle to northern markets became a major industry in DeWitt County throughout the late 1860's, 1870's, and into the 1880's. Many DeWitt Countians made the trip up the trail. No complete list of those who made the drive is available. Those who are known to have made one or more trips, other than those on the initial drive, are John R. Calhoun, Arthur Burns, Jim Bell, Dunn Houston, Harry Cunningham, John Charles Murphree, Joe Milligan (9 trips), Buck McCrabb, John T. Wofford, Will Sutton, Elisha Stevens, John B. Conner, Leo Tucker, John May, Joel Bennett, J.X. May, Bill Gentry, Dick May, A. May, Sam

Bennett and Vol Bennett, Louis Deloney, Jim Sumners. It is also known that members of the Sutton, Taylor, Tumlinson, White, Bell, and Burns families other than those whose names are listed here were pioneer trail drivers. It is of interest to note that Wes Hardin accompanied several herds from DeWitt County.

In assembling a herd for the trail it was customary for one man to buy several herds or for several cattleman to join together in order to form a herd large enough to make a profitable drive. Since all of these cattle had ordinarily been previously branded, what was known as a road brand was burned on the cattle to identify the trail herd to which they belonged. Once the drive was completed the trail boss collected the money for the cattle and delivered it to the owner or owners of the herd in Texas. Some of the road brands listed in the DeWitt County brand book are those of: Coppedge & Sutton, 3-27-1872; H.P. Eckhardt and H.E. Dahlman, 11-03-1882; C. Eckhardt & Sons, 5-26-1886; James Hickey, 4-05-1879; O.G. Hugo, 4-01-1882; R.A. Houston, 6-25-1887; John M. King, 7-03-1884; Marcos & McCutcheon, 7-31-1878; Pat May et al, 2-27-1880; Rutledge, Hooper, & Roeder, 4-05-1877; F.E. Rockfellow, 3-18-1887; Roeder & Rutledge, 11-03-1878; Leon Saldano, 7-05-1879; Mollie Taylor, 4-25-1874; J.T. Wofford, 1-14-1879; and Wofford & Stevens, 3-26-1880.

By the 1880's the trail days were about over. Cattle leaving Texas were mostly headed for Wyoming and Montana to stock the ranges of those territories. The proliferation of railroads throughout the west had made trail driving unprofitable. Tom Stell relates that he went with a herd to Wyoming, was hired by the rancher who bought the herd, and stayed in Wyoming for four years before returning home. Stell was later sheriff, tax assessor-collector, and treasurer of DeWitt County.

The end of the trail days is illustrated by a comment in Miss Nellie Murphree's History of DeWitt County. She relates that John T. Wofford and Jim Bell each had a herd of 3500 head outside Abilene, Kansas, in the fall of 1882. Because of a severe drop in the market, Wofford decided to hold his cattle over until spring. Bell, anxious to return home, sold his herd to Wofford at the depressed price and left for home. The winter of 1882-83 was the most severe ever experienced on the plains and in the spring of 1883 Wofford marketed 600 of the original 7,000 head. A final epitaph to the trail days may be found in an item in the Cuero paper the following year. It states "John Wofford, having quit the trail, is now busy breaking out and putting into cultivation some of his lands in the Lindenau area."

Although stock raising remained an important source of income for DeWitt County in the years following the end of the trail, the trend was toward farming. Many tracts, large and small, were broken out and put into cultivation. Cotton was the favored crop and even the largest of the cattlemen usually had some acreage in cultivation. Nearly all of the immigrants to DeWitt County following the Civil War were farmers and DeWitt County became primarily a farming area. Virtually every community had its gin and many a small community sprang up around a gin. The gins ran night and day during cotton season and it was by far the busiest time of the year. All merchants carried their customers from cotton crop to cotton crop. Although "King Cotton" reigned from the late 1880's until the 1930's when drought, depression, and low market prices

With the eradication and control of Texas tick fever in the late 1800's, South Texas cattlemen were able to bring in registered blood lines and start upgrading their herds. The end of the trail was not the end of the cattle industry in DeWitt County nor the end of its contribution to quality cattle state-wide. By the end of the 1940's DeWitt County was the largest shipping point for cattle on the Southern Pacific Railroad. The Cuero Livestock Commission Company, presently operated by Buddy and Johnny Blackwell, Jimmy Mudd and Burl Jones who purchased it from their uncle Finley and fathers Claude Blackwell, James Mudd and Burl Jones Sr. is the premier market in South Texas and injects millions of dollars a year into the DeWitt County and South Texas economies. In 1989 the company sold 85,000 head of cattle with an approximate value of $38,000,000 dollars. Cattle are marketed locally from as far as Zapata.

Obviously DeWitt County has come full circle. Once all cow country, it is practically all cow country again. What farming remains in the county today is primarily feed stuffs to maintain the county's beef and dairy herds. Throughout the years many fine herds have been developed and maintained by the old ranching interests. The Blackwells, Hamiltons, Friars, Peebles, Alexanders, Smiths, Roeders, and many others too numerous to mention have been active in the DeWitt County cattle industry for well over one hundred

Douglas Burns, son of trail boss Arthur Burns, was manager of the Pitchfork Ranch for over 25 years. His brother, John Burns, was professor of animal husbandry at Texas A&M, a much sought after judge at major livestock shows, a trustee and general manager of the 6666 Ranch, and a consultant to the largest ranching interests in the United States. The Roeder family established and still operates one of the outstanding herds of Hereford cattle in the country. J. Carter Thomas, son-in-law of Alfred Friar, developed and his widow, Ann Friar Thomas, still maintains a world-renowned herd of Brahman cattle.

Finally below is a report that indicates how the cattle business was operated in the days of the open range. It is a letter from a foreman to his boss.

Dear Sir:

We have branded 800 caves this roundup we have made sum hay potatoes is a fare crop. That feller yu lef in charge at the other camp got to fresh and we had to shot him, nothing much has hapened since yu lef.

Yurs truely.

THE DE WITT COUNTY FEUD

T14

William and Laura Sutton

Author's Prefatory Note

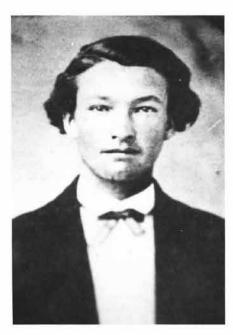

The conflict between the so-called Taylor Forces and Sutton Forces was deadly in the post Civil War era. The participants may have known what the primary causes were, but even this is debatable today. Why? Newspaper reporters and chroniclers during the time of the feud could not lay blame, or establish cause, or give a beginning . . . at least to the satisfaction of the 20th Century researcher. There were several brief "histories" of the feud printed in the newspapers of the 1870's. As early as 1880, Victor M. Rose wrote a history of the Texas Vendetta, but solid answers are elusive. The result of some years of studying this feud as well as, other aspects of 19th Century Texas history is that the definitive study of the feud is not yet written, and maybe historians will have to be satisfied with continuing to study and to look for answers, perhaps for ever.

A few questions which elude us are: Was the killing of Charles Taylor the real "immediate cause"? Rose wrote of the handling of wild cattle as a cause, and the social conditions of Texas following the defeat of the Confederacy. But most of Texas experienced those same conditions, and the feuds of other Texas counties pale in comparison. Today no one can say with positive authority if Charles Taylor was even a member of the DeWitt Taylor family. Would the feud have happened if Charles Taylor had been named James Smith or William Johnson?

Another important aspect to consider is the personality of William E. Sutton. His name has been linked to the feud since his death in early 1874. His brother James resided in an adjacent county, yet apparently took no part in the feud. This at a time when family ties were much stronger than today; this at a time when so many of the young men involved were related to one or both sides of the fighting forces. How did James Sutton stay uninvolved living so close to the violence? What was there about William E. Sutton that attracted so many followers willing to die in "his cause"?

James C. Taylor

If the feud began in 1868 following the death of Charles Taylor, as some accounts say, why do others claim that it had its origins back in Georgia and the Carolinas, as early as the 1840's? The fighting men were Texans. Yet most persistent stories have a grain of truth somewhere in their origins.

Whatever the cause, wherever the origins, even the ending is controversial. By rights the death of William Sutton should have ended the feud. Or, by rights the death of Jim Taylor should have ended the feud. But feelings of antagonism remained for some time after the deaths, long after the gunsmoke had cleared away from the streets of Clinton. Some criminal acts were committed no doubt, for personal vengeance, the perpetrators probably believing they would be blended in with the feuding activities so as to escape prosecution.

Someday these many questions and others may give up satisfactory answers. The following essay is just that - an "essay," or attempt to chronicle the events of the day which made up what is generally considered the Sutton-Taylor Feud. The sources have mainly been identified within the text, but besides court records of DeWitt County (which tragically are not complete), the following newspapers have been a goldmine: The Galveston Daily News, Weekly News, Austin Daily Democratic Statesman, Corpus Christi Weekly Gazette, San Antonio Daily Express and Daily Herald, and several others. The DeWitt County Feud

Victor M. Rose, the first serious historian of the Sutton-Taylor Feud, wrote the following in the opening paragraphs of his book, The Texas Vendetta, or The Sutton-Taylor Feud published in 1880: "Fourteen long and weary years have passed away since the terrible "Taylor-Sutton Feud" originated in DeWitt County, Texas. Fourteen years ago, with the extinction of one life, a cloud 'no larger than a man's hand' arose above the horizon of our political sky, already surcharged with the latent elements of a storm that was destined to sweep West Texas with a breath more potent for destruction than the besom of war itself."

Fourteen years prior to that would give a date of 1866 as the year of the opening salvos of the great feud. It was certainly the most notorious of the Texas feuds of the 19th century. Among the western conflicts of the post Civil War it stands out in relief. One could make a strong argument that it has received more attention than all other Texas feuds combined, that even among other western feuds it is the best known - better known than the Graham-Tewksbury range war of Arizona and the Johnson County War of Wyoming. Rose called it The Texas Vendetta, which seemingly would place any of the other feuds several rungs below in the ladder of feuding intensity. C.L. Sonnichsen, pre-eminent feud historian, entitled his study "Thirty Years of Feuding" declaring that no other feud had "covered so much ground, lasted so long, caused so many deaths, or left such a brand on the lives of so many people."

Rose was by profession a lawyer (after serving in the Army of the Confederacy) but spent most of his career as a newspaper editor and writer. He had been admitted to the bar in 1870 and became a local political leader. This is important as at least Victor M. Rose was a native of the general area in which the feud occurred, and was an educated man capable of writing a history, such as his book on the feud claimed to be.

According to Rose the vendetta was originally confined to a few individuals of the County of DeWitt but spread until "many hundreds of good men" were involuntarily involved in the "ghastly Saturnalia." Being willing to place a beginning date of the feud -1866 - Rose also was willing to identify a cause, its primal source being "the irregular manner in which the nomadic stock-raisers conducted their business . . . "The cause, in Rose's mind, was the institution of the free range and custom of branding beeves. The practice easily lent itself to abuse because of the geographical characteristics of the land, a vast expanse of country and prairie, woodland, dense chaparral with settlements often twenty to thirty miles apart. Brands were meant to identify the owner but brands could be easily altered in many ways. Cattle and horses as well were subject to the practice. A man with a horse and a branding iron could increase nothing to a manageable herd. The "recording of another man's brand was the speediest means of acquiring an independent fortune. Hence its popularity." Rose blamed the negligent manner in which the stock interest was conducted as the cause of this which was practiced in nearly all counties from the Guadalupe to the Rio Grande.

Besides the problem of the brand, Rose admitted the fact that the defeated Confederates were humiliated by the military authorities. The authority of Federal rule was challenged by a "rebel element" and it was the Taylor family who was most conspicuous. At the head of the family was Creed Taylor, a man who had joined a military company under Robert M. Coleman and John James Tumlinson. He earned much experience fighting Indians and Mexicans in the 1830's and 1840's. His sons were to get into trouble with the military authorities.

John Hays and Phillip Dubois or "Doboy" were the Taylor boys who according to history first felt the wrath of the Reconstruction government. They were sometimes referred to as The Taylor Party and sometimes as The Taylor Gang, the terms each having a definite connotation. Rose dismisses the actions of Hays and Doboy Taylor in a few short paragraphs, describing them as "naturally reckless and daring - a characteristic of the time, section of the country, and manner of life." He merely states their act of "punishment of a negro for some offense" caused the military authorities to outlaw them, and in the aftermath "many Federal troopers fell before their unerring aim." Major General J.J. Reynolds was the man commanding the military district of Texas. E.M. Pease, acting Governor of Texas, reported what was the true feelings of many Texans, and perhaps of the feelings of many of DeWitt County especially: ". . . a large majority of the white population, who participated in the late rebellion, are embittered against the government by their defeat in arms and loss of their slaves, and yield to it an unwilling obedience only because they feel that they have no means to resist its authority. None of this class has any affection for the government, and very few of them have any respect for it. They regard the legislation of Congress or the subject of reconstruction as unconstitutional and hostile to their interests, and consider the government now existing here, under the authority of the United States, as an usurpation upon their rights. They look upon the enfranchisement of their late slaves and the disfranchisement of a portion of their own class as an act of insult and oppression."

Hays Taylor was involved in a difficulty as early as April 15, 1867. In DeWitt County he shot William North through the thigh, the difficulty arising from some misunderstanding about a horse race. North did recover. His name here in this context may be significant as at the time he was a boarder in the home of one Nichols; the name of Lazarus Nichols would later appear in significant acts of the feud.

J.R. Polley of Floresville left a lengthy account of these two sons of Creed Taylor which was printed in the July, 1928 issue of Frontier Times magazine. According to Polley, who seemingly wrote much from his personal experience or observation, the Taylors were not in serious trouble with the military until the killing of Major Thompson in Mason County. Polley identified the killers as Hays and Doboy Taylor and one Jones. More accurately, the men were identified by the military as Hays Taylor, P.G. Taylor and one Spencer. The killing of Major Thompson occurred in Mason. November 14, 1867. The official report commented: "Major Thompson was murdered by the three desperadoes named while attempting to quell an altercation between them and a party of soldiers. The desperadoes escaped." It is believed the third man was W.A. Spencer, who married Hays and Doboy's sister Caroline Hephzibeth. Although this incident had seemingly no direct connection to the troubles in Dewitt County it placed the Taylors in the antiauthority camp. Polley claimed there was a $5000 reward for the capture of the trio; naturally there were men who would attempt to earn the reward.

One man who reportedly made the attempt was Captain John W. Littleton of Helena, Karnes County. Polley wrote "He was known to be brave, resolute and persistent, cunning and resourceful, and if he once entered upon the chase would move heaven and earth to accomplish his object..." The advantage the Taylors had was a network of spies which kept them informed of Littleton's movement. One early report of the killing appeared in the Galveston News of September 27, 1874. The following appeared in a lengthy article about the feud: "It is stated that the next two killed were Littleton and Stannard, who were shot in Wilson County, both friends of Sutton's. The supposition was that Taylor's friends committed the act." The end came on December 3, 1869, when Littleton and companion Stannard were ambushed and killed on the Old San Antonio-Gonzales road. Littleton was buried the following day with full Masonic honors. He had been elected sheriff of Karnes County on September 12, 1857, re-elected August 2, 1858 and served until April 3, 1860. He was again appointed sheriff on January 23, 1866 and served until June 25, 1866. Of interest is that in March of 1866 he had given shelter and care to a dying man in his home named Polk and Polk had been shot by a man named Charles Taylor.

Following the death of Littleton, Charles S. Bell received orders to eliminate the desperado element. To assist him in this endeavor he brought in a man whose name would become notorious among virtually all classes of Texans: Captain Jack Helm. The sons of Creed Taylor were two on the lawmen's list. On August 23, 1869 the Bell group caught up with Hays Taylor and killed him. Doboy was later corralled and killed by Sim Holstein in a confrontation having nothing to do with the troubles of the feud.

In early 1868 the name of Taylor again appeared, and for the first time the name was in opposition to the name of Sutton. Although there was but one Sutton involved his name is linked as leader of one of the factions. The incident first was reported in the Bastrop Advertiser. Apparently in March of 1868, a sizeable number of horses and cattle was stolen from DeWitt County ranchers. William E. Sutton joined a posse whose intentions were to capture or kill the thieves and to recover the stolen stock. Reportedly Sutton took part of the sheriff's party under his command; at Bastrop the group caught up with its object.

The Galveston News of April 7, 1868 reported in its "Texas Items" column as follows: "On the 25th ult., as we learn from the Advertiser, Bastrop was the scene of considerable excitement, caused by the appearance of a posse from Clinton, DeWitt County, armed with authority for the arrest of horse-thieves. Two of a gang of fourteen thieves had arrived in Bastrop a few days previously. The citizens from DeWitt seeing one of these on the street, called to him to surrender; but he tried to escape and was shot and killed. His name was Charles Taylor. James Sharp, another of the thieves, was arrested and taken to DeWitt County. Two Germans from the country, father and son, named Longee, were accidentally wounded during the firing — not dangerously, however. Another squad of citizens are in pursuit of other members of this gang of horse thieves." One contemporary report stated that Sutton and a Doctor White were charged with murder in Bastrop County of Charles Taylor and a German citizen ". . . and the wounding of another German in the town of Bastrop in 1868." The article further stated that Sutton and White "plundered Taylor of his clothes and fine saddle, and would have killed Mr. Sharp, but for the interference of the citizens. They then started with Sharp for DeWitt County, but killed him the first night near Mr. Elson's, in Caldwell County, and reported that he had tried to escape.'

The report that James Sharp never arrived in DeWitt was correct. Mr. Sutton was in command of a squad of eight citizens from DeWitt and headed home. Shortly after passing Lockhart, Caldwell County, the squad "riddled their prisoner with bullets, a short distance from that place, and left the body on the roadside." The citizens of Lockhart buried Sharp "soon after the act was committed." The act of murdering a prisoner and then claiming he was killed in attempting to escape would occur again and again. James Sharp's name does not appear other than on the death scene so we know nothing more about him.

Charles Taylor is also a mysterious figure. Victor Rose wrote that he was a distant relative of the family of Creed Taylor. As yet his precise connection to the Taylors — if there is anything other than the same surname — has not been established. Some historians claim he was related, others say he was not. One newspaper item, the Galveston Daily News of May 19, 1875, dated the origin of the feud as the fall of 1868, recording that there was a widow lady named Mrs. Thomas, residing upon Thompson's Creek, in DeWitt County, from whom Charles Taylor stole a number of cattle. William Sutton decided to avenge the wrong, as she was "a widow and without protection." It was this act that caused William Sutton to pursue and kill Charles Taylor.

It was at this time, according to Rose, that Captain Jack Helm entered into the picture. His orders came from General J.J. Reynolds and he quickly established himself as an authority figure. He quickly vowed to purge the State of Texas of all "bad characters." He was an individual who believed that what he was doing was right and for the best. He found it necessary with some frequency to communicate his feelings and intentions in the columns of the Texas newspapers. One such example appeared in the Victoria Advocate of September 23, 1868, and reprinted in Rose's history, it is worth presenting here in full.

"To The People of Texas:

"As there has been so much said by the people of the State regarding my operations, and as many know not of what they speak attributing to me motives that are false - I take this occasion of enlightening the law abiding citizens as to what I have done, and why I did it. About the first of June I was duly summoned by the military authorities, through Captain C.S. Bell, special officer, to assist in arresting desperadoes in Texas known as the 'Taylor party.' We found the party near the rancho of Mr. Creed Taylor, and attempted to arrest them. We succeeded in wounding one, Spencer by name, the other effecting an escape. I now proceeded in company with Bell to the city of Austin, where I received emphatic orders to arrest the party. On my return home I found that about forty had collected, in open defiance of the law, determined to resist the legal authorities of the State. I immediately proceeded to summon good citizens to assist me in the capture. The sheriff of DeWitt County, James Francis Blair, accompanied me, myself being deputy sheriff. Both our lives had been threatened by these desperadoes, as well as the lives of all those cooperating with me for their arrest. Mr. Jacobs, the sheriff of Goliad County, had just been killed by members of this same party. Finding that I was ready and determined on action, they divided, separating in squads of from five to fifteen. I proceeded in pursuit of the strongest of these bands, commanded by Jim Bell, a noted desperado of DeWitt County. I succeeded in capturing him and more, who were afterwards killed in attempting to escape from the

"About this time the Peaces — the murderers of Jacobs — were arrested, but subsequently effected an escape. One Stapp was killed in attempting to do so. The Peaces proceeded to the rancho of John Choate, in San Patricio County, stating to Choate that they were pursued by a 'vigilance committee,' and that they came to him for protection. John Choate now went to the rancho of Joe Tumlinson in DeWitt County, fifty or seventy-five miles from his home, and informed Captain Tumlinson that he had left the Peace boys at his house, and that he had loaned them one hundred and fifty dollars with which to effect an escape to Galveston. Choate insisted that Tumlinson should join him; said he had a band well fortified at his house, fully able to whip Jack Helm anywhere. Choate also avered that Helm was a d-d rascal, and had joined the Yankees for popularity, and that he could not raise over thirty men, and they only Dutch and Yankees. Tumlinson told Choate that he knew Helm to be a good man, acting under proper authority, and that he intended to co-operate with him; that he knew the Peaces to be murderers and thieves; that he had hunted them, and would do so again. Becoming convinced that Joe Tumlinson was not his man, Choate proceeded to the rancho of Creed Taylor, about fifty miles distant, where he remained about three days, when he came to the neighborhood of Yorktown, in company with four or five desperadoes, Hayes Taylor among the number. Choate now sent word to Tumlinson if he did not join him he would be killed, and that the Yankees had offered twelve hundred dollars reward for him, for the supposed killing of Stapp. Tumlinson replied that if he had done anything wrong he was willing to surrender to the proper authorities of his country, but would have nothing to do with Choate or any of his gang. Choate replied that Tumlinson must risk the consequences of his folly. Choate now went by the house of Jim Bell, and took the clothing and other effects of the Peace boys to his house in San Patricio County. Here he met the Peaces, Fulcord, the Broolans, Doughtys, Gormans, Perrys, and about forty two others, all known desperadoes, and many having indictments against them for thieving. Choate informed them that Jack Helm would be upon them, and that they must prepare for a fight. The house was fortified and put in condition for a regular siege, having loop-holes cut on all sides and secret passages connecting from room to room. They had one keg of powder, five hundred shotgun cartridges, two hundred Spencer rifle cartridges, preparations for receiving five hundred gallons of water, provisions, and all that was necessary for conducting a siege fifty days by fifty men. I had with me one hundred and twenty-five of the best citizens of the country. Arriving at Choate's a little after day, expecting to have to fight one hundred desperadoes, I immediately proceeded to carry the house by storm. I had one man killed and two wounded in the attack. Crockett and John Choates were killed, and two others wounded. Choate perfidiously attempted to shoot me after he had surrendered, and was killed by myself in defense of my life. I now made all necessary preparations for interring the dead, which was done. And right here let me nail to the counter those lies that allege that my men disturbed any of Mrs. Choate's property or the property of any one else. They did no such thing. I encamped in the neighborhood of San Patricio, and conferred with Captain Smith at Corpus Christi. I now proceeded to Yorktown, and sent a report to Helena. I was met at Yorktown by C.S. Bell, and disbanded my force until I could find out the whereabouts of the Taylors. Spent three days in this matter: collected my men about twenty-five, and proceeded to the forks of the San Antonio and Guadalupe rivers, where I succeeded in arresting the Hogans, who were members of the same party. I now sent the prisoners to Helena under charge of Tom Flemming and six others. I then proceeded in pursuit of the Taylors. At Yorktown I met Bell, and detailed fifteen men to accompany him, stating to the boys that Captain Bell was a good and true man, and would lead them. I remained in camp with the remainder of my men, to attract attention while Bell could operate. The next morning I took up the line of march for Creed Taylor's, followed by one hundred men. I proceeded by a circuitous route up the Sandies, arresting all persons that I suspicioned, and cutting off all means of escape. I arrived within seven miles of the house, when I received intelligence of the fight with the Taylors. I here disbanded my men. after complimenting them for their orderly conduct, gentlemanly bearing, and devotion to the laws of the country. Taking ten men, I proceeded to Helena, where I met Majors Crosland and Callahan, Lieutenant Thompson, and other gentlemen, who approved of all

"I and my men are ready at all times to act with the legal authorities of my country in the enforcement of law and suppression of crime. I am a citizen of DeWitt County — deputy sheriff — and am opposed to mob law; but I am ready to give assistance to the authorities, either civil or military, to arrest thieves and desperadoes who defy the laws, either in Texas or any other part of the United States, regardless of all threats, and the desperado my enemy, which is the only guaranty that I desire to know that I am right. Jack Helm."

This document is significant not only because it provides a version of the work of Jack Helm but because it brings together several names of individuals who would act predominantly in the feud. A newspaper reporter identified only as "A.H.B." provided a version of the vigilante work of the spring of 1869 which was printed in the San Antonio Daily Express. By reputation Choate entertained men at his ranch of "more than doubtful character" and Helm sent him word that "he would shelter whom he pleased" and if Helm did pay a visit "They would be warmly received." The result was that Helm and Company did pay the Choates a visit. Crockett Choate reportedly killed one of the vigilantes and wounded several before he himself was killed. Another Choate companion was Skidmore and he was seriously wounded. John Choate was willing to surrender if terms could be arranged and stepped onto the porch for that purpose, Mrs. Choate's arms around him. The talk turned to shooting but ". . . being encumbered by his wife's embrance he failed to draw in time. The clear shots from Helm and Tumlinson's pistols rang out and Mrs. Choate held nothing but her husband's corpse."

F.O. Skidmore, the visitor, also left an account of the bloody August 3rd. He described himself as an intimate friend of the family, relating how the Helm party charged the house at daybreak. One Kuykendall of the Helm party was shot by Crockett Choate. Helm informed Mrs. Choate that anyone who wished to surrender could and they would not be harmed. Skidmore claimed "I was shot seventeen times..." and when the raid was over both Crockett Choate and his fifty-one year old cousin were dead. Although Crockett defended himself in firing at the Helm party, John Choate's "sole aim appeared to be to save his life. He appealed to Captain Tumlinson, as a Mason, to save him." In contrast to Helm's own self-justification, historian Rose interpreted his actions as being of no set policy other than doing what he imagined would please Radicals. In the mind of Victor Rose, Helm acted for notoriety alone and possibly some spoils of war, that being "sufficient for his vainglory."

In December of that same year another incident occurred which resulted in bloodshed — and again William Sutton was involved, and again it was a Taylor's blood which spilled. Buck Taylor was how he was known. He was born William P. Taylor to William Riley and Elizabeth (Tumlinson) Taylor, November 1, 1837. On February 22, 1866 he married Mary Anderson, and one child was born to them, William Walter Taylor. On Christmas Eve, 1868, Buck Taylor was with his cousin Richard Chisholm. There was a dance at the Clinton courthouse when tragedy struck.

Jack Hays Day, a not always reliable historian of the Taylors, recorded that Buck Taylor had called William Sutton a horse thief. it was at this dance, or "concert" as Day called it, that William Sutton killed Buck Taylor. When Richard Chisholm investigated the shooting he too was killed. Day commented: "When we had fully investigated these murders, efforts were made to bring Sutton and his henchmen to trial, but ended in failure. It was apparent that Sutton was the ringleader of a rowdy clique willing to take human lives at the slightest provocation; that he was capable of intense hatred and fed on trouble." Although it may have been "apparent" when Jack Hayes Day wrote his memories, much of what he described was perhaps what he had been told by others. At the time of the Taylor-Chisholm killing he was but ten years old.

Lewis S. Delony also wrote of the double killing in his memories Forty Years A Peace Officer and he too was a youngster when the killing occurred. Born October 21, 1857 at Clinton, he was as old as Day. Among his early memories, were how his father returned home from the war in rags and how hard life had been in his father's absence. Delony, writing in the middle of the 1930's, recalled the night of the double killing. "When we came down the street, we heard some loud talking, and as we passed the first saloon we saw a crowd of armed men in there. We hurried to get to the steps, when a man ran out of a saloon just ahead of us and shot at someone coming out of the saloon back of us. We ran under the steps at the square and waited until the battle was over. Dick Chisholm, a young man about twenty years old who lived just across the street from our house was shot down and killed, within ten feet of us. I heard him say, 'My God I am killed.' Another man was killed close to us by the name of Buck Taylor. As soon as the shooting was over, we ran to the courthouse and up the stairs. Just as we got to the head of the stairs, someone asked me who was shot and I said Dick Chisholm is killed. I heard a scream and saw Mrs. Chisholm, his mother, fall in a faint . . .

Victor M. Rose recorded that a "dispute" arose between Buck Taylor and William Sutton. He pointed out Sutton was "one of the party engaged in the capture of the horsethieves." Thus Rose seemingly made a point that two Taylors and a kinsman had been killed by William E. Sutton. Sutton and —

White were tried for the killing but were acquitted. Rose doesn't provide a first name for White. C.L. Sonnichesen called him "a character from Clinton known as 'Doc' White who had been a member of the posse that killed Charley Taylor in 1868."

An early newspaper history of the feud printed in the Galveston News of September 27, 1874, also recounted the killings. The reporter must have talked to quite a number of people and recorded what was perhaps commonly believed — in 1874. He wrote that Charles Taylor was not a relative of the DeWitt County Taylors, but "came among them" when he and his friend Jim Sharp were accused of stealing horses. They fled to Bastrop County with William Sutton and a posse in pursuit. Later Buck Taylor and Chisholm "expressed their feelings so strongly regarding the killing" that Sutton and "a Mr. White" were offended. Taylor and Chisholm were killed.

William Sutton had by 1869 become the leader of a group which would be termed the Regulators. Rose called him the "spirit of the party." He was described as a young man in his early twenties, six feet tall, fair complexion with blue eyes and light curly hair." His manners were mild and gentlemanly, and his appearance altogether prepossessing. Had his lot been cast in more peaceful times, his life and destiny would have been far different." Sutton was born October 20, 1846, and was to die young, March 11, 1874. The statement of Rose would no doubt have been true of most of the men participating in the Sutton-Taylor Feud! By this time four men had died reputedly by William Sutton or men closely associated with him - Charles Taylor, his friend, James Sharp, William "Buck" Taylor and his cousin, Richard Chisholm. Victor Rose offers the family motto as the command to seek revenge: "Who sheds a Taylor's blood, by a Taylor's hand must fall." The shedding of blood would go on for years.

The force under Jack Helm (and unfortunately we have no roster listing his men) created a great turmoil as too frequently prisoners in their custody were killed, the "justification" being that they had attempted to escape and it was necessary to kill them to prevent it. During the next year Helm made attempts to correct that "erroneous impression" as he termed it. The issue of the Victoria Advocate of August 19 carried vet another "card" from Helm, the leader of the Regulators, in which he again claimed that he was acting under orders from Military Headquarters, the highest authority in the State. Jack Helm "seeks to molest no one. To the honest, law abiding citizens he offers protection. For those thieves who have been depredating upon the stock interests of the country with impunity, he had orders to arrest and bring them to justice. That this will be done, and effectually done, there is no doubt.'

Not long after this self-justification appeared, two more members of the Taylor family met their deaths. The press apparently paid little attention to the killing. Martin Luther Taylor, son of Rufus and Elizabeth (Lowe) Taylor and an older brother of Alfred P. and Rufus "Scrap" Taylor was born in 1843. On March 16, 1867, he married L.S. Morris, a daughter of W.B. "Dave" Morris. W.B. Morris and M.L. Taylor were to be killed on November 23, 1869 in McMullen County. Jack Hays Day wrote that Captain Tumlinson led several of the Sutton followers to where Morris ranched and captured him. They then went to Martin Luther Taylor's ranch, a quarter of a mile away, and captured him. The pair were taken from their house and shot down. Day erred in dating this as having occurred in April, 1870. According to Day the only reason for their deaths was that they were kin to William "Buck" Taylor.

1870 gave a new decade to Texas, and a new factor to be reckoned with for all those who claimed to be wanting justice and law and order. On July 1st of that year the State Police Bill went into effect. James Davidson was named Adjutant General and Chief of Police. He was met with the problem of selecting the best men to serve in the ranks of the force. Wrote Davidson: "In selecting these men, it was necessary to be assured of their courage and nerve. As you are well aware, in a State overrun with desperadoes and refugees from justice, these qualities are absolutely essential in a police officer; and, as many of the criminals in the State are persons of known desperate character, I have always, as far as possible, satisfied myself before recommending an applicant, that he was possessed of these qualities." Davidson selected as Captains of this force M.P. Hunnicutt, E.M. Alexander, L.H. McNelly and Jack Helm. Of this quartet little is known of Hunnicutt or Alexander. McNelly earned the respect of his contemporaries and later gained undying fame as a Captain in the Texas Rangers, commanding a force for a while in DeWitt County. History has been highly critical of Jack Helm.

Helm claimed that to select the men to serve under him he would go to the various counties of his district, interview respected "old citizens of known probity for information" and thus receive only qualified men. This was thoroughly explained in an interview with Helm conducted by the editor of the Gonzales Index and then reprinted in the San Antonio Daily Herald of July 27. He may have had the best of intentions. The most noted of the men who joined the Helm force were James Cox, Joseph Tumlinson, and William E. Sutton. These four men together have become, in the mind of history, the leading force of the so-called "Sutton Party." Their rivals - or anyone who was considered to be an enemy - gathered under the Taylor flag. In the press of the 1870's the two opposing forces were sometimes termed the Sutton-Tumlinson group opposed to the Taylor-Pridgen party, as Bolivar J. Pridgen, being a senator, commanded considerable influence and would soon be strongly anti-Jack Helm.

The four deserve separate attention. James W. Cox was born about 1824. His first wife, Arrena Wofford, died on his return trip from California to Texas. His second marriage on August 22, 1872 was to Laura (DeMoss) Hanks. Cox would live until May 15, 1873 when he would be killed with John W.S. Christman. Prior to the war Cox, on August 4, 1857, had petitioned the court to file charges against Bradford and Thornton Chisholm for a debt of $576.50. Bradford was a brother of Richard Chisholm, killed alongside Buck Taylor. Thornton was his father.

Joseph Tumlinson was born February 16, 1811, near Yorktown, and by the time of the feud had become respected if for no other reason than for his survival skills. His first wife had been Johanna Taylor, the daughter of Josiah and Hephsebeth Taylor, they having been married April, 1832. When she died is unknown but he married a second time to Elizabeth Newman on February 14, 1840. Of the leaders of the feuding parties he was the one who would die peacefully with his boots off, dying November 23, 1874.

William E. Sutton was born October 20, 1848 and learned of conflict first hand by serving in the Confederate Army. He had a brother James but he successfully avoided involvement in the feud. So far as known William E. was the only man with the Sutton name to figure in the feud.

Jack Helm has received the most negative criticism of all the Sutton group. Witness how Senator B.J. Pridgen described him in a letter of October 29, 1870, printed in the Daily Austin Republican of November 1st: "Helm is comparatively an ignorant man - knows nothing about the laws of the State, and less about the rights of its citizens. He is an unscrupulous liar, which, added to his recklessness and indiscretion, renders it extremely dangerous to the people of Western Texas for him to be clothed with the authority of captain of police. A majority of the policemen under him are not only ignorant, and can scarcely write their names, but stand charged with having shed the blood of human beings. Criminals, who for years have been refugees from the law and country, have lately returned from Mexico, and are now acting under Helm as policemen." What brought about a storm of indignation and ultimately Jack Helm's downfall was what would become known as "The Kelly Affair."

In mid-August the four Kelly brothers — William, Henry, Wiley and Eugene, with their families, attended an entertainment, or circus performance, at Sweet Home in Lavaca County. Something was not right with the performance; some say it was not a show suitable for family entertainment, and the Kelly men shot it up. On the other hand there is a version stating that the Kelly brothers were "young men who disturbed a circus performance, very disgracefully and dangerously, by noisy conduct, shooting off pistols, etc. . . ."

Captain Helm resolved to arrest the guilty parties. At first their identity was unknown. To solve that problem Helm arrested twentyfive or more persons who had been present at the performance and interrogated them, finally learning it was the Kelly brothers. It can not be determined if the Kellys were marked because of shooting up a circus performance of if Helm was looking for an excuse to arrest them because of who they were. They were of the Taylors, however, as Henry was married to Amanda Jane Taylor, daughter of Pitkin. William B. had married on October 4, 1869 Elizabeth Day Bennett Rivers, she being the daughter of Robert and Susan Day. Susan remarried Pitkin Taylor. Thus — was Helm after men who simply disturbed the peace in Sweet Home, or was he finding a reason to destroy more of the Taylor Party?

The Austin State Journal, very sympathetic to the State Police, reported the killing briefly, that William and Henry Kelly ". . . attempted to escape during the night of the twenty-fifth of August and were shot by the guard." It went on to report of others arrested by the State Police force — Wiley and Eugene Kelly, Alexander Cudd, John Criswell, Whit. Johnson. There had been fifty-four other arrests in Lavaca County. The Journal concluded its report: "The good citizens turned out unanimously to aid the police, which is fast becoming popular."

The testimony of the Kelly family members reveals that the two Kelly brothers were murdered. Senator Pridgen obtained sworn affidavits from several family members, made out before Justice of the Peace O.K. Tuton. The statements were from Amanda Kelly, wife of deceased Henry Kelly; Delilah Kelly, the mother of the brothers; Pitkin B. Taylor, father-inlaw of the Kellys; John W. Day, son of Robert and Susan Day, and F.K. Hawks. The statements were prepared October 13 and sworn to before Tuton two days later. According to Mrs. Amanda Kelly, three men rode up to their home, men she identified as "Doc" White, John Meader, and a man she later learned was one Simmons. Henry Kelly was informed that he was under arrest and that he would be taken to Hallettsville, some thirty-five miles away. At the same time William Sutton was arresting William Kelly at his home. The most damning portion of Amanda Kelly's eye-witness statement was as follows: "They had halted in an open place, surrounded by thick bushes and trees, and were engaged in conversation. Henry Kelly was sitting on his horse near Doc White and the stranger - Simmons - and William Kelly was sitting on his horse also, near William Sutton, and engaged in cutting up some tobacco with which to fill his pipe. He dismounted from his horse, and took out a match, and was squatting down with one knee on the ground, and in the act of striking the match on the bottom of his boot of the other leg, when William Sutton shot him! William Sutton was sitting on his horse at the time, and I saw him as he suddenly raised his gun, and pointing it downward in the direction of William Kelly, fired it off. William Kelly, in his doubled-up position, immediately fell to the ground. In another instant another gun was fired, and I saw Doc White with his gun up to his face, pointed in the direction of Henry Kelly, and smoke between them, and Henry Kelly instantly fell from his horse. A general firing of guns by the party at the bodies on the ground now occurred. Everything immediately became enveloped in smoke so as to completely shut out everything from my view. After the firing ceased, and while I was screaming and making toward the party, I saw the men escape in the brush. John Meader was not with the party when the killing took place. When I reached the bodies, Henry Kelly was motionless and lifeless. William Kelly showed signs of life, but did not speak . . . I was uneasy about the fate of my husband . . . from the fact that they were in the charge of men, two of whom, Sutton and White, were notorious for killing prisoners, and there was an improper feeling existing between Henry Kelly and these two men . .

The other sworn statements were very similar and corroborated that of Amanda Kelly. The statements were all printed in the Daily Austin Republican of November 1, 1870, along with a letter from B.J. Pridgen which contained a scathing denunciation of Jack Helm: "Even had they been killed in an effort to escape (which the laws of the State by no means justify), was it not the duty of properly disposed officers and men to have remained with and cared for the bodies, and have a legal inquest held over them? This they did not do; but abandoned them (as prisoners generally are who are killed by the notorious Jack Helm, or his crowd) to the mercy of buzzards, wolves, and hogs . . . Helm, himself keeps constantly in the saddle, swing to and fro through the country, apparently exulting in the manner in which he is terrifying the people."

The two other Kelly brothers were later delivered to Hallettsville where they were turned over to the civil authorities, stood trial and were aquitted. The press gave great coverage to this incident and to Captain Jack

Helm. The Victoria Advocate pointed out that "Killed in Attempting to escape" and "Killed While resisting arrest" were two expressions "fast coming to have a melancholy and terrible significance to the people of Western Texas." The Advocate stressed that murder by men sworn to uphold the law and to ensure security to society's members was murder ". . .mostfoul, strange and unnatural."

Other questionable acts of Helm were brought out when John R. Baylor's letter to the San Antonio Herald was printed in its issue of November 19. He reported that the citizens of Hallettsville had been taxed to pay for the expenses of Helm and his men while there. Those who refused to pay were threatened. Baylor fearlessly said ". . . it is time that the career of this man (Helm), who is a murderer and professional cut throat, should be stopped. It is the duty at least of every one to hold up to public gaze his infamous acts." The Herald of November 22, printed a statement of W.W. Boyce supporting the claim of Baylor. It was able to report having the pleasure of reporting that in Austin Helm had been given "a knockdown from an honest man's fist" and that the man doing the knocking down was none other than Bolivar Pridgen!

Nothing more severe than that happened to the men accused of murdering the Kelly brothers. They were allowed to testify on their own behalf — claiming that the Kellys were killed while attempting to escape from an officer of the law in the performance of his duty. The resulting publicity did cause Adjutant General Davidson to suspend and then discharge Jack Helm from the State Police force. He still had plenty of power, however, as he had, on December 3, 1879, been elected to the office of Sheriff of DeWitt County. General J.J. Reynolds reinforced that with his own Special Order #65. Helm would serve as an enemy of the Taylor force until mid-1873 when he met his demise at the hands of John Wesley Hardin and his friend James C. Taylor, the son of old Pitkin who had lost his sons-in-law, the Kelly broth-

Jack Helm had other concerns on his mind as well. On August 6, 1872, he was required to post a new bond, the reason being that the bond then on file had not been filed in the time as prescribed by law, thus inoperative and void. A new oath had to be administered as well. The bond was in the amount of ten thousand dollars. Besides the signature of Jack Helm on the surviving document are those of bondsmen and witnesses William Sutton, Joseph Tumlinson, R.B. Hudson, James P. Beck, J.W. Cox, R.W. Thomas, J.B. Tucker, and surprisingly, Jo. Taylor. One wonder why Joseph Taylor would have signed such a document . . . and one also wonders if the R.W. Thomas had any connection to the widow Thomas, the person whose cattle were allegedly stolen by Charles Taylor a few years before.

Supposedly Pitkin Taylor made a personal vow to somehow bring to justice the men who had killed the Kelly brothers. According to Jack Hays Day, his efforts so enraged Sutton and his friends that he was thus marked for death. Apparently the newspapers of the day missed out on this incident as no report of the shooting of Pitkin Taylor has been found in the contemporary press. The Taylor accounts state he was shot some six months before his actual death, having been lured out of his home during the night. His head stone in the Taylor-Bennett Cemetery gives no birth date, only March, 1873 as his date of death. If Day was correct the midnight ambush was about October of 1872.

Day claimed that Sutton and four of his men stole the bell off one of Pitkin's oxen in the night. Then one of them stole into a cornfield and rattled the bell to awaken Taylor. Naturally he came out to investigate and then was shot down. Amanda Jane Taylor Kelly, the widow of Henry and Pitkin's daughter, rushed out into the night, almost stepping on one of the assassins. She hurried to John Day's house to gather help. No one was ever formally charged with this shooting, but the Taylors blamed William Sutton and his men. John Wesley Hardin, who had not yet made a full commitment to the Taylor cause, believed the killing had happened thusly: "Some of the best men in the country had been murdered by this mob (Sutton, Helm, Cox and Tumlinson). Pipkin Taylor had been decoved by them at night from his house and shot down because he did not endorse the killing of his own sons-in-law, Henry and Will Kelly, by the brutal Helms' mob. Anyone who did not endorse their foul deeds or go with them on their raids incurred their hatred, and it meant death at their hands. They were about 200 strong at this time and were waging a war with the Taylors and their friends.'

At Pitkin's funeral in March of 1873, James C. Taylor vowed to avenge the death of his father. Again we have only Jack Hays Day's word for it but he very well may have been there and remembered it accurately. "It was a grim and tragic scene. The burial plot was near the river on a shaded knoll. Around the open grave the relatives of the murdered man were assembled. Among the mourners were young Jim Taylor, son of the deceased, and five other youthful kin of the slain man. In hideous contrast to this grief-stricken group, across the river, while the funeral services were being conducted, Bill Sutton assembled his cut throat gang in bold mockery. With raw drink and coarse jest and wild firing of guns they celebrated the death of Pipkin Taylor while he was being lowered into the grave . . .Jim's mother, who had borne up well under her grief, broke down and wept. If there had ever been a doubt in young Jim's mind what he should do about the slaying of his father, it was cleared up then. If ever a man was provoked into taking the law into his own hands, Jim Taylor was inspired by that reason." According to Day, Taylor and the other five young men vowed to wash their hands in Sutton's blood.

Almost symbolically the State Police force was terminated not long after the death of Pitkin B. Taylor. April 22, 1873, was its final day. As a whole the State Police force was unpopular at best, and hated at worst. By the time the State Police force was ended the Taylor clan could list the following as being victims of either Yankee rule or the State Police force: Hays and Doboy Taylor, Pitkin Taylor, William "Buck" Taylor, Martin Taylor, W.S. "Dave" Morris, Richard Chisholm, Charles Taylor, James Sharp, Will and Henry Kelly. William E. Sutton was directly involved in the deaths of at least half of them, giving the Taylors reasonable cause to place him at the head of their list of enemies. Along with the name of William E. Sutton, there were the names of his close associates, James W. Cox, Joseph Tumlinson, and Jack Helm.

Pitkin Taylor's headstone places his death at simply March, 1873, suggesting possibly it was erected sometime later and no one was positive as to the exact date. Whenever the last day was, James C. Taylor assumed leadership of the Taylor clan. Jim Taylor was born January 15, 1851, the son of Pitkin and Susan Day Taylor. His older half-siblings were John, William, and Elizabeth Day. His full sibling was Amanda Jane, the wife of Henry Kelly. On April 5, 1870 he was married, in DeWitt County, to Mary "Molly" Elizabeth Kelly, the younger sister of Henry and William who were killed by Sutton, White and C.C. Simmons. Jim Taylor did not waste much time in laying plans to kill Sutton.

On April Fool's Day of 1873, action was taken. William E. Sutton was in Banks Saloon and Billiard Hall in Cuero when someone shot at him, wounding him, but not too seriously. John Wesley Hardin wrote as if he knew positively that Jim Taylor was the trigger man. Jack Hays Day wrote that it was Jim Taylor and his nephew Alfred Day. He also wrote that Sutton filed charges against Alf. Day and R.P. "Scrap" Taylor. In an interview with C.L. Sonnichsen, he stated: "When Jim Taylor shot Bill Sutton in the arm in a Cuero saloon, Bill ran — and how — as it is well known and he made his escape. He was laid up in his home while his wound healed, guarded day and night by his gang." Rose quoted the Victoria Advocate's report, date not provided, as follows: "Attempted Assassination. — We learn that Mr. William Sutton was shot in Cuero last Friday night, by some party or parties unknown. Sutton was sitting in a billiard saloon when some one from the outside fired two shots at him in rapid succession, one of which took effect in his left arm and breast, inflicting a serious wound, shattering the arm badly."

Within two months Sutton was ready to utilize his legal options. He brought a charge against Rufus P. "Scrap" Taylor, a younger brother of Martin Luther Taylor who had died alongside W.B. Morris allegedly by the hand of William E. Sutton. Having been born May 20, 1854, the son of Rufus and Elizabeth Taylor, he was younger than John Wesley Hardin who would become more successful at killing enemies of the Taylors.

On June 16, 1873, William Sutton left home to attend the examination of "Scrap" Taylor. He was in the company of Horace French, Dr. White (again no first name provided), John Meador and Addison Patterson. Some one in Cuero the next day wrote a letter to the San Antonio Herald which included this report: "The Taylor party, seven in number, fired into the Sutton party on the road to Clinton, and killed French's horse and wounded two other horses, John Medor [sic] was slightly wounded in the leg. There is a great deal of excitement here today, while the examination is going on at Clinton. The people are out on a scout after the parties who did the shooting." According to Jack Hays Day the ambushing party consisted of Jim Taylor, Patrick Hayes "Bud" Dowlearn, "Scrap" Taylor, Alfred Day, William Taylor, and "one other." The latter is suspected to have been Day himself who may have feared some type of retaliation even at that late date! Jim Taylor, being the oldest one in the party — all of twenty-two years old - was acting as leader. Day wrote that they were "over anxious in their effort to wing him . . . and [Sutton] fled as the boys fired. Unable to ride horseback, he and one other man was in a buggy." Hardin also pointed out that Sutton was a hard man to kill. Besides the arm wound he had received in the Cuero saloon, Sutton ". . . had a horse killed under him in a fight on the prairie below Cuero and he had another killed while crossing the river below there. He was looked on as hard to catch, and I made futile efforts to get him myself. I had even gone down to his home at Victoria, but did not get him." The newspaper reporter wrote that there were seven in the attacking party. Day identifies but six. One wonders if Hardin himself was not also in the ambushing party!

John Wesley Hardin, by his own account, had never been in the DeWitt-Gonzales County area until 1871 when he had met for the first time his cousins the Clements brothers. That summer of 1871 he was hired to work with them taking cattle north to Kansas markets. He had already been involved in numerous gunfights, resulting in the death of several men. It has been suggested that at this time Hardin became a hired gunman for the Taylor force. This has not been supported by strong evidence. Hardin had by 1872 married into the Bowen family, aligned to the Clements family, aligned to the Tennille family. As well, he was a fugitive. Jack Helm was the sheriff; Cox, Sutton and Tumlinson were deputies. Seemingly if Hardin wanted to attempt to reside in that area he would have had to side with the Taylor force. By his own account Hardin did not meet up with Jack Helm until the spring of 1873. Hardin challenged Helm to arrest him but Helm refused, claiming he wanted to have some type of understanding with Hardin. The pair met but came to no agreement other than to meet again. Supposedly at the second meeting held at the house of Jim Cox, Hardin made his decision: that he had to join the Taylor side as his friends George Tennille and Mannen Clements were slated to be killed. Hardin wrote: "I told them that I would not swap work with them [meaning he would not be prosecuted for his criminal charges if he would kill certain 'enemies' of the Helm force], but that they would let me know if any danger threatened me, but swore eternal vengeance on the Taylors and their friends."

What is certain is that with Hardin's entry upon the scene, having established himself as a Taylor partisan, the death toll began to mount. On March 30, 1873, a man identified only as Jack Slade shot a man named Cooper. On April 1, 1873, John Morgan was killed in Cuero by one "Fred. Johnson." The sheriff who reported these acts did not know that J.B. Morgan had in reality been shot and killed by Hardin; in fact the mysterious "Jack Slade" could easily have been yet another alias of John Wesley Hardin. The Gonzales County sheriff reported that an unidentified man had been killed in March. Gonzales County authorities may not have had any idea as to the identity of the deceased, but they knew Hardin; on October 19, 1871 he had shot and killed State Policeman Green Paramoor and in the same gunfight wounded another policeman, John Lackey.

In early 1873 (Hardin dated it as April 23) Helm and a group of possibly fifty men came into the Hardin territory looking for him, Mannen Clements and George Tennille. The men were not to be found but the women who refused to say where their men were were insulted. Then the Hardin and Taylor forces began serious planning. Wrote Hardin: "There [at Mustang Mott] I met Jim, John, and Scrap Taylor, while Manning Clements, George Tennille and myself represented our side of the house. It was there agreed to fight mob law to the bitter end, as our lives and families were in danger." By mid-July they could claim one victory. In an ambush James W. Cox was killed along with his companion John W.S. Christman. The newspapers merely reported that the pair had been "waylaid and murdered near the edge of DeWitt county." Jack Hays Day wrote that the ambushing party consisted of Jim and Scrap Taylor, Alf. Day and Bud Dowlearn. Supposedly the two groups met by accident, with Cox, Tumlinson, "and three more of the Sutton outfit." These names have been variously given as Wells, J.L. Griffin, H. Ragland, and Joe Tumlinson. Victor Rose, citing an unidentified newspaper account, recorded: "Double Murder. - There was a shocking double murder committed last week between Helena and Yorktown. It appears that two men, Cox and Cresman [sic], were journeying between the towns named, when they were ambushed by unknown parties and killed. Cox was found with nineteen buckshot in his body, and his throat cut from ear to ear. He was with Helm in his Regulator depredations, and no doubt he was killed to avenge some injury inflicted then. The unfortunate Cresman was a stranger in this section, and not a party to the feud. Capt. Tumlinson and Ragland were riding a few yards to the rear when the volley emptied the saddles of their companions, and thus warned, saved themselves by a hasty retreat."

Hardin was perhaps there on the scene. He had this to say: "It was currently reported that I led the fight, but as I have never pleaded to that case, I will at this time have little to say, except to state that Jim Cox and Jake Chrisman [sic] met their deaths from the Taylor party about the 15th of May, 1873."

Some reports indicate that a few days later Hardin and Jim Taylor next killed Jack Helm. Since Hardin was there, his version needs to be considered. Supposedly he had earlier set up a meeting on May 17, at Albuquerque, a settlement now but a memory, in the far western portion of Gonzales County. Hardin took along a "trusty friend" - no one other than Jim Taylor. Hardin and Helm had their meeting, with Taylor strangely not included. (Perhaps he was aside covering Hardin.) Hardin and Helm could come to no agreement as to the feuding action. Apparently the Cox-Helm-Tumlinson force believed that some agreement could be worked out with Hardin. Hardin wrote that Jim Taylor asked to be introduced to Jack Helm, which is strange as one would certainly think that he would know an enemy such as Jack Helm! In a blacksmith shop in Albuquerque, Helm made a verbal attack on Hardin. "I looked around and saw Jack Helms [sic] advancing on Jim Taylor with a large knife in his hands. Some one hollered, 'Shoot the d-d scoundrel.' It appeared to me that Helms was the scoundrel, so I grabbed my shotgun and fired at Capt. Jack Helms as he was closing with Jim Taylor. I then threw my gun on the Helms crowd and told them not to draw a gun . . . In the meantime Jim Taylor had shot Helms repeatedly in the head, so thus did the leader of the vigilant committee, the sheriff of DeWitt, the terror of the country, whose name was a horror to all law-abiding citizens, meet his death. Many of the best citizens of Gonzales and DeWitt counties patted me on the back, and told me that was the best act of my life." Note that in this version Hardin wrote as to place himself in the role of defender that Helm was attacking and he had to kill Helm to save the life of Jim Taylor. Another version deserves attention here. R.R. Smith wrote on October 1, 1943, to C.L. Sonnichsen, that it was Taylor who started the fight. "He walked towards the blacksmith shop and started to shooting at Helms, who jumped up with a long knife in his hand. Green McCracken yelled, "Shoot the son-of-a-h.' Hardin switched his shotgun and pulled the trigger. The knife dropped and the arm that had held it fell. The boy closed in for closer shooting. He was Jim Taylor. Helms ran through the blacksmith shop and around it, Taylor following and shooting. He dropped almost at the point he started from." Smith was born in 1880 and had heard the tale from various community members who were probably there the day the killing took place. Of interest is that in the same 1943 letter Smith wrote that during the Civil War "Old Man Riddle," who was "northern in his sympathies" had refused to grind corn for the war widows whose husbands were in the Confederate armies. For this refusal, Pitkin Taylor hanged Riddle. In retaliation "Jack Helms and his men" killed "two boys of Pitkin Taylor's."

The date Hardin gave for the Helm killing was May 17, 1873. Victor M. Rose wrote that Helm, working on an agricultural implement he had invented, was in the blacksmith shop when "two young men, supposed to have been friends of the Taylor, rode up to the shop, and announced through the threats of their revolvers the implacable message of fate." The implement Helm was working on was a type of cotton worm destroyer. The United States Patent office shows Patent No. 13902 dated May 20, 1873, and application filed November 16, 1872. Helm and Charles Tim, assignor, were both of Hochheim, Dewitt County. There is no dispute over the slayers of Jack Helm but there has been considerable question as to the Jack Hays Day wrote that the killing was "about the first of March, 1873." Rose is vague, stating that it was "a little while afterwards" following his election as sheriff. A brief item in the Dallas Times Herald of August 2, 1873 states briefly: "The notorious Jack Helm, one of General Davis' State Police, was killed last week, near Seguin, by a man named Hardin.' The Houston Telegraph of July 30 reported: "Jack Helms, Davis' ex-State policeman, was shot to death, in DeWitt county, while riding along the highway." The San Antonio Daily Express of July 25, reported: "Jack Helm Killed. In DeWitt County a desperado by the name of Hardin with several others of the same stripe rode up to the blacksmith shop of Jack Helm, while he was engaged at his work and riddled him with bullets." These various reports, although they are not in agreement as to the exact details of Helm's death, do mark the death date as possible late July, instead of March as Jack Hays Day wrote, instead of May, as Hardin wrote, and much earlier than November when the coroner presented a bill of six dollars for the inquest on Helm's body. In the Civil Minutes Book of DeWitt County, cause #1279, is found, B.J. Pridgen vs J. Helm, Sheriff et al, "Death of Deft Helm suggested."

This bears the date of August 6, 1873. Whatever the exact date was by the half way mark of 1873 two key enemies of the Taylor force were dead — James W. Cox and Jack Helm.

It was at this point in the progress of the feud that the growing community of Cuero — soon to become the county seat of DeWitt County — became concerned for its reputation. An attitude of self-respect seemingly was asserting itself. Lawlessness would damage the reputation of the area; people would avoid transacting business. Thus the feud at this point took on overtones of a conflict with financial implications. A lengthy item from the Victoria Advocate was reprinted in the San Antonio Daily Express of August 12, headlined: Midnight Scouts on the Rampage — Mystic Riders Flitting in the Dark. "Bands of armed men have been seen during the past week hovering around the outskirts of town under the friendly darkness of the late evening or early morning. Several persons passing to and fro have been stopped and interrogated about quite a number of our citizens . . . This state of affairs is the sequel to the reign of terror with which this unhappy section was afflicted some three or four years ago, over which Jack Helm and C.S. Bell were the presiding spirits. We learn that the two parties - possibly numbering fifty men each - are upon the 'war path.' The shooting of Wm. Sutton in Cuero, some time since seems to have been the spark that rekindled the smouldering embers, and since then, Helm, Cox and Chrisman have fallen - the victims of revenge — whether just or not, it is not our province to determine. Their comrades, in all probability, will seek to avenge their death, and thus continue the bloody carnival, which if not checked, must continue, until heaven only knows when. This slaughtering of men on our highways, and in the very towns, is an infamous disgrace to our manhood and our civilization. It should be stopped at once. There is enough law-abiding citizens to do it, and they are ready and willing to respond to the Sheriff's call at any time for this purpose. It is the Sheriff's duty to arrest all violators of the law, and to protect the citizen in life, liberty and property, it is no excuse that there is fifty or a hundred men violating the laws - the more numerous, the greater necessity for their arrests. Let him vindicate the majesty of the law if it should take a posse comitatus of every man in the county to do it. If this cannot be done, we had better burn the court house, abolish law, and transform the State into a seething, hating, murderous hell, and be done with it. To that point we are hastening, unless Sheriffs can nerve themselves to full performance of duty."

Perhaps some lawmen took the message to heart. On the morning of August 12, Deputy Sheriff D.J. Blair summoned every able man from Cuero to suppress what the Cuero Star termed, a riot, some four miles west of Yorktown. The riot turned out to be some three dozen men under the leadership of John Wesley Hardin having surrounded the house of Captain Joe Tumlinson. The Sheriff's party found both groups "well armed and equipped." The Sheriff was informed that no public disturbance was intended by either party, that the whole affair was of a personal nature, that a compromise had been effected and that both wished to repair to the county seat to draw up papers to keep the peace, to which the sheriff agreed. Thereupon the whole party, consisting of about one hundred men reached Clinton about 4 o'clock p.m. All was peaceably settled. The parties then dispersed." The San Antonio Herald of August 20 briefly reported the incident, concluding the difficulty had been "amicably adjusted."

Further details were forthcoming. The San Antonio Daily Express of august 17, reported that Tumlinson had been besieged in his house with about twenty friends for over thirty-six hours. Some sixty men were in the besieging party. Commented the Express: "We know nothing of the merits or demerits of the parties to the guerilla warfare, but one thing we do know, and that is the state of affairs existing in DeWitt was unheard of until the State Police was abolished." The Houston Telegraph of August 20, presented a more factual report, reprinting an article from the Gonzales Enquirer. "Hardin had some three dozen well armed in his group which marched to the Tumlinson residence, surrounding it for two nights and one day. Tumlinson managed to dispatch a courier to Clinton to seek the aid of the Sheriff. The Sheriff with some fifty men responded and started for the "seat of war" and found Hardin's men "formed in line of battle." The Sheriff was an above average negotiator, as soon, the two parties had agreed to sign a treaty of peace. "The line of march" was at once taken up. Hardin's men leading the column, the Sheriff's posse following, and Tumlinson's party bringing up the rear. Arriving at Clinton, Hardin halted on one side of the town, and Tumlinson on the other, while the Sheriff's men marched directly into the town. After signing the documents and having the same recorded in the Clerk's Office, both parties quietly dispersed to the intense gratification of the law-abiding and peace-loving citizens." Hardin was more candid in revealing the brutality of the attacking party, recalling that he and his group had planned to attack the Tumlinson house at night, sneaking up close and firing into the men as they slept on the porches. . . This plan failed as the dogs of the vigilants announced the arrival of Hardin's group and aroused the Tumlinson force. Hardin expressed disappointment in the authorities coming to end the battle before it had begun, saying that things had begun "to get in shape for a good fight." Irregardless of how many men actually were involved in the siege, only forty-one men signed the treaty of peace. The original has been lost but a copy preserved by descendants of Joe Tumlinson allows one to see who did sign. It was signed in the presence of H.B. Boston, County Clerk on August 12. The introductory statement reads as follows: "Be it known by those persons whose names are hereto signed. that we severally recognize the fact that disputes and controversies of a nature likely to result in blood shed have existed between the undersigned. Those whose names are in the left column hereto of one party, and those whose names are in the right column of the opposite party, and for the purpose of promoting peace and quiet and order in this community, we each for himself, here promise on honor, to abstain from all hostile acts, or demonstration calculated to create a breach of peace or to induce any one to suppose that any violence is intended. And be it further more severally promised on honor that we will not connect ourselves with any organization of any armed character contrary to the spirit and meaning of above agreement. And we further promise and agree that should we or either of us at any time know of any organization being in existence for the purpose of doing violence to any man whose name is hereto signed, that we will, as soon as is our power, give notice of such organization to the party so threatened. To which we hereon sign our names, this the 12th day of August, A.D. 1873."

The following names were recorded in the left hand column: Joseph Tumlinson, A.F. Newman, C.C. Simmons, R.B. Busby, W.B. Belding, William Lechie, Ed Power, P.C. Tumlinson, J.W. Amment, J.W. Ferguson, C.V. Busby, W.N. Templeton, H. Ragland, William Peavy, R. Power, O.K. Tuton, H.H. Tuton, R.H. Brown, W.C. Wallace.

The following names were recorded in the opposing column: Lazarus Nichols, George C. Tennille, E.J. Glover, M. Clements, A.J. Allen, J.W. Hardin, Gibson Clements, John L. Reynolds, J.M. Taylor, P.H. Dowlearn, J.P. Beck, E.J. Heins, James Clements, J.H. Clements, M.O. Nichols, E.A. Kelly, A.C. Day, Y. Hawks, J.W. Shipworth, J.S. Howard, J.W. Brazzell, J.J. Coche. Possibly there were more men involved who just did not wish to sign such an instrument. One name absent is that of William E Sutton.

The next known killing related to the feud was the murder of Wiley W. Pridgen of Thomaston Station. He was at the Pridgen store when several horsemen rode up and shot him down, his body "perfectly riddled with buckshot" according to one account. One newspaper source dates the killing as "on the last day of December, 1873." John Wesley Hardin wrote of nothing "tragical happening until December 27th, 1873 when Wiley Prigon [sic] was attacked by four men and murdered in his store eight miles below Cuero. Prigon was a Taylor man and his murderers belonged to the Sutton gang. Thus was war stirred up between the two parties again." Jack Hays Day went so far as to identify the slayers. John Goens, Jim Mason alias Jim Long, William E. Sutton, Doc White and Jeff White. Day also claimed that later, Bolivar J. Pridgen was able to track John Goens down and killed him. DeWitt County Court records show that James E. Smith, Ad. Patterson, Edward Parkinson, William Meador and John Guyens were charged with the murder of Wiley Pridgen.

There are conflicting stories as to why Wiley Pridgen was killed. Mr. Zachary Taylor Pridgen, cousin and eye-witness, reported in the victoria Advocate that he (Wiley) was conversing with several men when five men rode up and dismounted. "They hitched their horses, and returned, presented their pistols at the breast of Pridgen, saying, 'D-n you, you haven't a minute to live!' and immediately fired, shooting him through the heart, and as Wiley fell back, exclaiming 'I'm a dead man,' he was shot again through the head and arm. Pridgen lived a few moments only, and died without knowing who killed him, and unconscious of having committed a crime that demanded his life in propitiation, for, as the party rode up, some one asked Wiley who they were, and he replied by saying that he did not know them." Wiley W. Pridgen was a brother of Bolivar whose name was occasionally linked to the feud as the "Taylor-Pridgen Party" against the "Sutton-Tumlinson Party."

Although the name of Pridgen would suggest this was feud related it is possible the killing had nothing to do with the hatreds of the feud proper. According to Nellie Murphree, early historian of DeWitt County: "The shooting was an act of revenge by the teenage son, Jim, of the Jim Brown whom Wiley W. Pridgen, Jr. had killed in Mission Valley about 1863 when the two men quarreled over a race horse transaction." This may indeed have been the case as it is supported by House Miscellaneous Document 127 of the 40th Congress, 2nd Session of May 11, 1868. The list of murders and assaults with intent to kill shows that on September 20, 1867, in Victoria County, Wiley Pridgen murdered Neill Brown. "Some words passed between the parties in regard to a horse, when Pridgen drew his sixshooter and shot Brown. killing him instantly." It seems strange that Wiley Pridgen, living in the midst of the feud in which his brother was directly involved, and who had killed a man only a few years before, would not be alert to the danger of the dead man having friends to avenge his death. Seemingly that still would be a part of his psyche as "late" as December, 1873. Yet it may have been a public act of a private feud.

By the end of 1873 the Sutton and the Taylor forces were ready for combat, each apparently believing that the treaty agreement of a few months before had been broken by the other party. On the last night of December, 1873, there was a skirmish in Cuero. Robert J. Clow was there and recorded in his diary for entry on January 1st, 1874: "The hostile forces had a 'skirmish' in suburbs of the town. No one hurt. Both parties stopped all night. One at B & Bros Hotel & other in Lumber Yard." In the entry of the next day Clow wrote: "Last night very quiet. Both war-parties still in town. The forces mustering. Hardin has arrived. Expect fight this evening . . . The hostile forces are still in town. Took possession of Brown's hotel [Gulf Hotel owned by D. Brown and W.S. Brown.]. . Dark. No fighting yet. Things look gloomy. Everybody complaining. Don't know what will be the result." The result of this was another treaty of peace. One correspondent recorded that on January 1st, 1874, William Sutton had entered Clinton to make "an affidavit against waylayers" when he was surrounded by eighteen members of the Taylor party. Apparently he wasn't alone as then the tide turned and the Taylor force was pursued to Cuero. The bloodless skirmish continued until a compromise was reached. Possibly Judge Henry Clay Pleasants convinced both groups of combatants that a peace treaty was desirable. This treaty was presented in full in the Galveston Daily News of May 19, 1875. The treaty was sworn and subscribed before Justice of the Peace, Precinct No. 1, O.K. Tuton, on January 3. This time the introductory paragraph was much briefer: "We, the undersigned, individually and collectively, do pledge ourselves and solemnly swear to keep the peace between each other and obey the laws of the county, now, henceforth and forever. Furthermore, we pledge ourselves never more to engage in any party organization against any of the signers of this agreement. The newspaper provided but a single list of names without distinguishing which names were of which party. The eighty-six names were as follows: Lazarus Nichols, A.J. Denmark, J.T. Bratton, O.H. Clements, W.W. Davis, James Clements, R.A. Randle, O.F. Pridgen, A. Tuggle, B.J. Pridgen, T. Duderstadt, A.P. Allen, J. Howard, L. Tuggle, M.V. King, F. Duderstadt, R. Anderson, George C. Tennille, J.H. Clements, Thomas Caffall, F. Hartkose, W.E. Ganden, J.M. Taylor, R. Myers, J. Irwin, William Sutton, J.M. Ferguson, F.F. McCrabb, Ed. Power, Joe F. Sitterle, John Pettit, J.C. Johnston, J.E. Smith, J. Brown, John Andrews, W.M. Murphy, Sam H. Wofford, Walton Scurry, J.J. Mudor (Meador?), Buck Power, James Floyd, William Locke, C.T. Hunter, W.R. Scurry, John H. Power, Addison Kilgore, H. Boston, Jr., Frank Cox, W.W. Peavy, Add. Patterson, L.C. Day, G.W. Harris, M. Nichols, J.C. Taylor, R.P. Taylor, A.C. Day, A.G. Flowers, W.R. Taylor, J.J. Sanders, James Robinson, James Goodrick, M.O. Harrison, J.H. Hines, F. Robson, Jesus Narteano Garsed, J.W. Glover, W.F. Petit, John J. Tumlinson, Ed. Parkinson, W.L. Meador, G.A. Peavy, John Gyns, James Kassen (Hasen?), W. Toureenton. W.C. Wallace, M.J. Ryan, John Newcourt, W.J. Ragland, Ed. Hayton, Joseph DeMoss, J.G. Berry, J.W. Mason, J.A. McCrabb, G.W. Slaughter, George Merz, D.J. Blair.

As Hardin described the situation: "They met this time at Cuero, each trying to get the drop on the other. Shooting was the order of the day, but finally friends of both parties undertook to pacify them and an armistice was agreed to, both parties again signing articles of peace." Since some of the names on this treaty appear no place else in the literature of the feud one is forced to wonder if the two opposing parties had by now gathered up men just to swell their numbers. With a second treaty of peace signed in such a brief time it is not surprising that DeWitt County and the surrounding area perhaps breathed a sigh of relief. The Cuero Weekly Star in its twentythird issue, dated January 16, 1874, announced in the local matters column: "All is quiet in Cuero tonight." Editor W.C. Bowen continued with more good news: "Order and peace are restored." Bowen had a right to be concerned. He believed that the bad name of Cuero "abroad" would be detrimental to local business. A week later this item appeared: "One thing is certain, Cuero has a much worse name abroad than she in fact deserves. For really she has done more to silence the clamor and clatter of rowdyism than any other community, in the county, and if our fellow citizens in the county will only acknowledge candidly, Cuero is a great acquisition, as well, pecuniarily, as morally to the tax-paying and law-abiding population of DeWitt."

Ironically in the issue of January 16, it was reported that a "stabbing affray" had taken place the previous Monday, January 12, in Clinton — just across the Guadalupe, between Charles Stratton and the freedman Armstead Johnson. The latter was instantly killed. Presumably this killing had nothing to do with the feud violence. The following week, in the issue of January 23, Editor Bowen had this to say, headlining the article with "Who Next Is To Be Killed?: Armstead Johnson, in Clinton, and McVea, in Cuero, were killed, and John Krohn, dangerously wounded, all during last week, all in a radius of three miles. At this rate we may well ask who next. The last killing was that of McVea by our Marshal, R. Brown, who committed the act in sheer self-defense." The inquest under Judge O.K. Tuton rendered a verdict of self defense. Reuben H. Brown had signed the earlier peace treaty. McVea was James Gladney McVea, a young former cowboy in his middle twenties. Although there is no contemporary indication linking this to the feud it is important to at least consider Jack Hays Day's report. According to Day, Gladden McVea was a "quiet and peaceful young representative of a respectable Gonzales County family" when he and a friend visited Cuero for a few drinks. The pair were jailed for being intoxicated. Upon their release McVea claimed that Marshal Brown had taken his money, about $100. McVea demanded his money and "The city marshall [sic], who was left handed, sprang to his feet, shoved McVea against the wall with his right hand, and with his left shot him down in cold blood." One can logically deduce from this contemporary reporting of a violent action, compared to the reminiscence of a half century later by a partisan, how the McVea killing could have become a "remembered incident" of the feud, when in reality it perhaps was an isolated incident of violence in an area without strong law enforcement.

Elsewhere the murderous John Wesley Hardin was supposedly visiting friends and family in far off Comanche County. He recalled that he had left his cattle business in the hands of his father-in-law Neill Bowen, taking James Monroe "Doc" Bockius with him. Supposedly the trip, the visit and some horse racing took up about six weeks. He reported his arrival back in Gonzales as around mid-February. He was not specific but pointed out that in the meantime ". . . the Sutton party had violated their pledges and on several occasions had turned our cattle loose." It is known that Hardin was in Cuero by mid-February. The weekly Star announced that on the evening of February 17, "Wesley Hardin visited our town, and created quite a sensation by his presence. We were told when he left next morning that he wore two six-shooters and a Spencer rifle, and that our Marshal (R.H. Brown) failed to see the arms about Hardin. We hope our Marshal will keep a better look out the next time . . .

It appears certain that the Hardin visit to Comanche had a direct bearing on the next fatal act of the feud. No hard evidence exists but Hardin indicates that his brother Joseph G. Hardin and Aleck Barrickman had come to Gonzales to return the visit. During the visit Hardin persuaded brother Joe and cousin Barrickman to go to Indianola - shipping point for cattle - to see if it could be learned when Bill Sutton would be there. It was believed that while Sutton would send his herds north he himself would take a land route to Kansas, leaving Indianola to sail to New Orleans. If Hardin is to be believed, his brother Joe and Barrickman went to Indianola and while attending to some cattle interests actually became acquainted with Sutton. The latter's plans were learned as to when he intended to leave Texas. . . the 11th of March on the steamer Clinton.

The word was quickly delivered to Jim Taylor, who was eager to avenge the death of his father, Pitkin, irregardless of treaties of peace. Jim Taylor and cousin William R. Taylor quickly made their own plans. Joe Hardin arranged for two fast horses to be close to the dock for them to make their getaway. Supposedly there were a half dozen or more "brave men ready there who stood in with the play."

Victor M. Rose, writing but six years after the fact, gave nearly a page over to the death of William Sutton and the young man who happened to be with him on that day, Gabriel Webster Slaughter. He has frequently been described as an innocent bystander but he did sign the treaty of peace of January 1874, as a Sutton sympathizer. Rose described briefly how the January treaty had been drawn up, that men then dispersed to their homes . . "But, alas! the hopes born of this compromise were short-lived, for Mr. Sutton, in pursuance of his intention to leave the State, had started his herds on the trail to Kansas, and with his young wife set out for Indianola, at which port he would ship for New Orleans on one of the Morgan Line steamers. But the lynx eyes of the Taylors never lost sight of him. Jim and Bill Taylor, implacable as fate, followed him to Indianola. Sutton's noble little wife suspicioned their intentions, and so assiduous was her solicitude for her husband that she remained at his side, and thus shielded him from the murderous lead already molded and consecrated to his destruction. Sutton, with his wife on his arm, entered the steamer Hewes [sic]. He was accompanied by a young friend, Gabriel Slaughter, descended from a good Kentucky family. Jim and Bill Taylor followed the devoted little party. Several shots in rapid succession are heard. The Taylors retrace their steps to the wharf, from the wharf to the city, from the city to the boundless prairie. Officers, spectators line the way; no attempt is made to prevent the assassination or the escape. The first witnesses upon the fatal scene behold the heroine girl-wife weeping over the lifeless form of her murdered husband, and Gabriel Slaughter, the generous young stranger who raised a hand to defend his friend, lying near, cold in death."

The Taylors made a clean escape from the scene. Perhaps the surprise and audacity of the act prevented anyone from trying to prevent their escape. And perhaps it was this factor of surprise which prevented Slaughter or Sutton from making some type of defensive action. And perhaps the half dozen or so of Hardin's men placed nearby made some motion to discourage any type of interference. Jim Taylor now had, at least symbolically, "washed his hands in Bill Sutton's blood." Jack Hays Day recorded that on the following day the Taylor boys stopped at Senator Pridgen's residence and participated in a celebration. "It was an occasion for great rejoicing . . . a lavish meal was prepared. Needless to say everyone had a good time." It also reminds the reader of the celebration which allegedly was held opposite the funeral rites of Pitkin Taylor, across the Guadalupe, back in 1873.

A reward of $500 for each of the Taylors was offered by Governor Richard Coke. After their successful deed they quickly joined up with John Wesley Hardin who was preparing herds for the Kansas markets. But before the escape was complete, the Cuero City Marshal had arrested Bill Taylor. As the Weekly Star reported it, Brown arrested Taylor for carrying a pistol on April 3. He was ready to give bail when someone handed Marshal Brown the Governor's proclamation offering a reward for Taylor's arrest. Marshal Brown called citizens to assist him. The next morning Taylor was sent down to Indianola on the train. Taylor was first placed in the Calhoun County jail, and then moved to Galveston which had a more secure facility. Ironically it was on the steamer Clinton. Taylor would not rest in jail for long. In mid-September he was back in Indianola waiting his trial. A storm came up on September 15, and increased in strength until a good portion of the town was destroyed. District Attorney W.H. Crain released the prisoners to prevent them from being drowned in the high waters. Feud historian Sonnichsen recorded that Taylor and another prisoner actually saved about one hundred people from death by their heroic actions. But the prisoners also took advantage of the opportunity. The Victoria Advocate of September 24, 1875, in an extra, told how Bill Taylor and the others found freedom: "During the violence of the storm the jail became filled with water, and the prisoners, Bill Taylor (charged with the murder of Sutton), George Blackburn (charged with rape), and the two Ruschaus (theft of cattle) were removed to a place of safety and placed under guard. On Monday night (September 20) they effected their escape by knocking down the guard and are now at large."

Π

With the death of William E. Sutton the historian of over a century later should be able to point to that killing as marking the end of the feud. He was the only man with that name involved. But William E. Sutton had many friends and followers, many of whom had signed the same treaty of peace. They would not rest until Sutton's death was avenged. The turmoil of the later sixties and the early seventies would continue as many young men in DeWitt County and the surrounding area now had scores to settle.

Following Sutton's death, if we believe Hardin's account, the days were spent getting the herds ready for the trail north to Kansas. Cousin Joe Clements was placed in charge of one herd directed to Wichita. Brother Joe Hardin and Aleck. Barrickman went home to Comanche, taking Hardin's wife and baby along to visit the Hardin parents. John Wesley planned to follow quickly and visit them before going on to Kansas as well. At this point Jim Taylor joined up with Hardin, along with Ed. Glover and the three remaining Clements brothers. Within two weeks another herd of a thousand head was ready. This was placed in charge of Dr. J.M. Bockius with instructions to go by Hamilton, Hamilton County.

Hardin and Taylor arrived in Comanche toward the latter part of April. There was no rush to get to Kansas: if there had been great tragedy would have been averted. As it was it made Hardin such a hunted man he had to leave the state; many of his friends and relatives were killed by mobs in the following weeks. Hardin and Taylor were both wanted men. On May 26, 1874, the day Hardin turned twenty-one, there was a celebration in Comanche. Hardin participated heavily in the gambling, horse racing, as well as, the drinking. Whether there was truth in the rumor or not will never be known but Hardin claimed a deputy from neighboring Brown County, Charles S. Webb, had friends there purposely to arrest the fugitive pair for the rewards. Charles Webb left no version of his actions. Hardin claimed Webb had sworn to get them "before the sun went down." As Hardin explained it to posterity, the Webb plan had been to kill Hardin first, then capture Taylor. Of the gunfight which took place on the dusty Comanche street it was Hardin who left history an account. He recalled that Webb actually had his pistol out before Hardin drew his, making Hardin's action sure self-defense. Hardin wrote: ". . . as I turned around, I saw Charles Webb drawing his pistol. He was in the act of presenting it when I jumped to one side, drew my pistol, and fired. In the meantime, Webb had fired, hitting me in the side, cutting the length of it, inflicting an ugly and painful wound. My aim was good and a bullet hole in the left cheek did the work. He fell against the wall, and as he fell he fired a second shot, which went into the air." As Webb fell Jim Taylor and cousin Bud Dixon fired bullets into him as well "not knowing that I had killed him."

Only indirectly do we have a version of one of the others involved in that fatal shooting. Thomas M. Stell, long time resident of DeWitt County, left a brief account of the feud. He was eleven years old "when it started in 1867" and was nineteen "when it ended in 1875." Stell was respected and was elected County Sheriff November 8, 1892, re-elected six terms and served until November 6, 1906. Just when he wrote his feud essay is not known but it was between the death of Captain Creed Taylor which occurred on December 19, 1906, and his own death, July 3, 1939. According to Stell, who learned of the Hardin-Webb gunfight from Jim Taylor, Hardin provoked Webb and both drew their pistols. "Taylor claimed afterwards that he fired once, shooting Webb through the pistol-arm, and but for that, Webb might have killed Hardin. As it was, Webb fell with Hardin's first shot, his arm useless. Webb could not shoot, and Hardin shot him twice more after he had fallen." Jim Taylor had tried to prevent the gunplay by getting away from the "drinking, boisterous crowd, but to no avail." It was this killing which brought such dire results to the Hardin-Taylor connection. In the aftermath of the Webb killing mob law took control. Although Comanche was many miles northwest of DeWitt County, the aftermath included actions which are properly a part of the Sutton-Taylor Feud.

Ironically, on May 26, the day of the Webb killing, back in DeWitt County, the Buchanan family was mourning the loss of their Billy. The San Antonio Daily Express in its issue of May 26, reported: "A man named Bill Buchanan was killed by unknown parties near Cuero a few days ago." This killing even received attention out of state as the New Orleans Daily Picayune in its issue of June 5, reported: "Bill Buchanan was killed recently in DeWitt County." Reportedly Buchanan had attempted to lead some of the Taylors into an ambush. The definite family connection to the feud was that his uncle, Thompson Brown, had married Lucinda E. Pridgen. Supposedly it was Bolivar J. Pridgen who did this killing as well.

But back in Comanche, Hardin and Jim Taylor were on the run staying out of the grasp of Comanche posses or men of Texas Ranger Captain John R. Waller's command. Joseph G. Hardin, William A. "Bud" and Thomas K. "Tom" Dixon were jailed, partly because of Bud Dixon's role in the Webb slaying, but more than likely to prevent them from being of any assistance to Hardin and Taylor. On the night of June 7, the mob acted. Among the first reports of the deed was this appearing in the Austin Daily Democratic Statesman of June 11, reprinted from the Comanche Chief. "Last night (Sunday), a body of armed men came into town about twelve o'clock, overpowered the guards and took the above named parties (Jo. G. Hardin, W.A. and T.K. Dixon), who were under arrest as the accomplices of John Wesley Hardin, carried them about two miles west of the town and hung them. The citizens of our town, we are confident, had nothing to do with this affair, nor do we think any one living in the county took part in it. The parties were disguised, and none of them recognized by the guard or those present at the time. The guard, which was composed of but few men, and those present, were taken off and strictly guarded for some time after the prisoners had been removed. This is a plain and true statement of the case, as observed by the writer, who was himself placed under arrest with the guard. Four other prisoners - James Anderson, Thomas Jefferson Waldron [sic, Waldrip], William Green and Dr. Brockless (Bockius) were in the room at the time, arrested under suspicion, but were not harmed."

A later report in the Statesman of June 17, told of the lynching, calling Hardin "the notorious murderer who has killed twenty-eight men, is but twenty years old and the son of a preacher...He and his party of seven or eight (including Jim Taylor) fought forty men all day. Last Tuesday (June 9) ten miles from Comanche on Leon bottom he had his horse killed from under him. He is a fearless man, and I expect he will kill some more before he is taken. The authorities have his wife and child with his father, the preacher, in jail at Comanche."

But the lynching of brother Joe and the Dixon brothers was not the end of the tragedy. On June 9, two more of Hardin's cousins were killed. A group of Waller's rangers caught up with Hamilton Anderson and Aleck. Barrickman and they were shot to death. The rangers then arrested seven men who were guarding Hardin's herd. Besides "Doc" Bockius there was James White, G.W. Parks, J. Elder, Thomas Bass, A. "Kute" Tuggle and Rufus P. "Scrap" Taylor. Sergeant J.V. Atkinson was ordered to deliver the prisoners to the custody of the DeWitt County Sheriff. They were placed in jail but on the night of June 21, a mob stormed the jail. Whether or not the charges of cattle stealing were true would not be determined. The mob took out Bockius, Taylor, Tuggle and White. Bockius managed to escape because of the bravery of Joseph Sunday taking him up behind him on his horse. The other three were lynched. A Galveston News special reported to Texas and the world that they were hung by the Sutton party ". . . as they have an old feud with the Taylor crowd, and one of the prisoners who were hung was named Taylor." The same special reported that the group which delivered the prisoners to the Clinton jail had stayed there thirty-six hours and did not leave until they believed the prisoners were safe from violence. The Sheriff had twenty men to help protect them. Jack Hays Day identified several others who narrowly escaped being mobbed: Alfred Day, Ples Johnson, and Pink Burns. According to Day, R.B. Hudson had charged them with stealing cattle, a charge which Day claimed was false. Continued Day: "The Sheriff (William Wieseger) knew that they were innocent boys hired to drive the cattle; also, that one of them was a stranger in that part of the country. He had hired to Jim Taylor to work. Kute Tuggle had never carried a gun and at no time had had anything to do with the feud. Jim White, also a stranger, had just come over from Mississippi and hired to Taylor."

However innocent the boys may have been the fact remained that A. Tuggle and R.P. Taylor had signed the January 3, 1874 treaty of peace. This would place them in the camp of the Taylors, opposed to Sutton, hence an enemy. The Cuero Weekly Star reported: "On Sunday night last, about 1 o'clock a.m., Taylor, White and Tuggle were taken from the Sheriff's guard by a large body of disguised men, and hung near the Clinton grave yard. The corpses of the three men hung until next morning when they were taken down by their relatives and interred. The above parties (Taylor, White and Tuggle) had been brought to this county by a detachment of Capt. Waller's Ranger Company, with four other prisoners from Brown and Comanche Counties, where all of them had been arrested. As the jail was already full, the prisoners were guarded by the Sheriff, and a citizen's guard in the Courthouse, where they were held to prepare for an examining trial. Justice Tuton released the other prisoners on Monday morning as no complaints had been made against them. It is said that the parties who were lynched, were accused of theft and of having been accomplices in the murder of Webb, in Comanche county; and while public opinion condemns the manner of their execution, it does not deplore their fate." The San Antonio Herald of July 1, 1874, summarized an eye-witness description of the lynching, stating that the ". . . deed was accomplished by about 35 men, and that one of the men constantly protested he was innocent. None of the parties hung had participated in the steamboat murder, as had been reported."

The violence seemingly was escalating. Whereas a reign of terror may have existed at the turning years of the sixties to seventies decade — early 1874 witnessed an increase in killings. The January peace treaty may have promised the best of intentions but six months later the violence was still continuing. The most significant result of the June violence was that Adjutant General William Steele was sent to DeWitt County to investigate the reports which had by now attracted state wide attention. Another company of rangers was being formed from Washington County, and its leader was none other than the former State Police Captain — Leander H. McNelly.

Within weeks of the death of Sutton his widow had arranged for rewards to be paid to the man who could bring Jim Taylor inside the jail house door. The earliest notice yet found of this important reward — and one of the rare instances where a widow offered a reward — was the notice appearing in the Victoria Advocate. The notice itself was dated May 21, 1874, just five days before the Webb killing which brought death to so many of her enemies. The notice, printed here in its entirity, is perhaps what solidified the attention at the highest state level to send in troops to DeWitt County.

"On the 11th of March last, Wm. Sutton, my husband and Gabriel Slaughter, while engaged in getting their tickets for Galveston, on board the steamer Clinton, at Indianola, were murdered by James and Bill Taylor, in my presence without any warning or notice, James Taylor shooting my husband in the back with two six shooters. One of the murderers, Bill Taylor, has since been arrested by Marshal Brown, of Cuero, and is now in Galveston jail. James Taylor, the murderer of my husband, is still at large, and I offer to any one who will arrest and deliver him inside jail of Calhoun County, Texas, one thousand dollars in addition to the reward of $500 offered by the Governor of Texas. Marshal Brown, of Cuero, can say whether the Governor's has been promptly paid, as he is the man that arrested the murderer Bill Taylor. As to my ability to pay the $1000, I refer to Brownson's Bank, Victoria, Texas.

"Description of James Taylor, age 23 years; weight, 165 or 170 pounds, very heavy set; height, 5 feet and 10 inches; complexion dark; dark hair; round features; usually shaves clean about once a week; wears no whiskers, beard rather heavy, talks very little, has a low dull tone, and very quiet in his manners. Mrs. Laura Sutton, Victoria, May 21, 1874."

It is impossible to determine just when the reports of violence in DeWitt County caused Governor Richard Coke to give serious attention to the troubled area. He himself was accustomed to violence and controversy, having risen to the rank of Captain in the late war. In 1873 he had defeated Edmund J. Davis for the governor's chair, but had it not been for the interference of President Grant his taking control might have been accomplished only with violence. A major concern for 1874 would be to establish law and order in Texas.

On May 2, 1874, the Frontier Battalion was placed under the command of Captain John B. Jones. A smaller "Special Force" was placed under the command of Captain L.H. McNelly, and his first assignment was to settle the war in DeWitt. Possibly the original idea may have been to destroy the raiding taking place on the Rio Grande, but pressure was frequently exerted to solve the DeWitt County affair. A Stock Journal article described a "regular battle" between the Taylor and Sutton parties at Cuero, on Sunday, June 7. Upon the battlefield were six dead horses in view Monday morning. If there had been men killed or wounded they had been removed. Commented the Stock Journal: "This is a lovely picture of society, and it is thought that many valuable citizens will be drawn from the county by it. Can't our friend, Governor Coke, do something in the matter?' Elsewhere in the same issue it was reported that Coke had sent Adjutant General William Steele to DeWitt County to "inquire into the (Tuggle, White, Taylor) lynching there, and to take steps to suppress the lawlessness.

But in Cuero the citizenry had already organized a "Home Protection Club." This was in existence as early as April. On May 19, a committee of three had been selected to decide where to hang the alarm bell. It was described as one of the finest bells in the country and could be heard seven miles.

The Cuero Weekly Star frequently reported notices of meetings for citizens who wanted to do something. But seemingly there were problems from within as well. City Marshal Reuben H. Brown failed to qualify properly and thus tendered his resignation June 8. He had accomplished the notable deed of arresting Bill Taylor, but Jim Taylor was still at large.

The coverage given the feud was extraordinary by now. The San Antonio Daily Express of June 14, headlined its review of matters with: War In DeWitt County and told of how "parties of armed men" had been "swarming through the country in pursuit of each other," how "a fatal collision is expected every hour, and rumors of skirmishes are rife through the county. Old family feuds are the cause of this pending drama, and it is said that good men have enlisted on both sides, for deadly combat . ." The citizens' mass meeting of June 20, elected Henry Clay Pleasants, Lazarus Nichols, W. Wofford, Mont. Blackwell and William R. Friend to draft resolutions expressing a purpose. The five resolutions appeared in the Cuero Weekly Star as follows:

"That we deprecate the fact that a portion of our community is arrayed in arms against another portion, and that deadly hostility exists between the contending parties.

"That it is the duty of every good citizen to use all his influence to induce these parties to lay down their arms and appeal to the law for protection and a redress of any wrongs they may have suffered.

"That we will do what is in our power to have all parties now in arms and seeking each others lives arrested and prosecuted for the offenses they may be about to commit, and which they have committed.

"That we will watch with a jealous eye the conduct of all officials, and in every case of omission of duty we will endeavor to have them indicted and broken of their offices if they have been negligent, or amiss in their duty.

"That we distinctly declare that we are not parties to the unhappy feud now existing in this county; that we are determined, so far as in our power, to uphold and vindicate the majesty of the law against all offenders, from the assassin down to him who wears his pistol in violation of law."

At the same time editor W.C. Bowen of the Weekly Star expressed feelings approaching joy — that troops would soon be on the scene. A company was to be formed in Washington County to assist civil officers in DeWitt. The editor wrote: "The presence of troops will prejudice no good man, and will nerve the officers of the law to arrest notorious outlaws and bring them to justice, give the good citizens of this county a nucleus of justice, around which they may rally, and law and order will soon be restored. Witnesses and jurors must have a tangible support to fall back on. Let us have a little legal vim instead of so much moral suasion."

Adjutant General Steele arrived at Cuero on July 2 and began interviewing citizens. He was to also visit Clinton, Victoria and Indianola to learn from public opinion the best course to follow. It was the Star's opinion that a mounted military company was needed, to be stationed in either Clinton or Cuero, whose duty would be to disarm every man in the county and to arrest all offenders and bring them to justice. Steele was back in Austin by July 10 and reported "unfavorably on the position of affairs in DeWitt County. The Taylor faction is hiding in the brush, but may gather head and avenge themselves on the Sutton party."

By early August, McNelly and his company had arrived in San Antonio Daily Express commented he had been an "excellent" State Police officer under Governor Davis. The coming of the rangers was not soon enough for the senior fighter of the faction, George Culver Tennille. Why Tennille was marked for death by the Sutton forces and then pursued by Gonzales County lawmen is as yet undetermined. Born December 29, 1825, he could have played a father figure to most of the feuding men. Possibly he acted more as an advisor to the young warriors. Hardin spoke of him as a trusted friend and noted the last time he saw him in this life. We only have Gonzales County Sheriff Green DeWitt's version of the final battle of the old warrior: "Holding writs from Bexar county for the arrest of George C. Tennel [sic], and learning of his whereabouts, on the morning of July 8th, (I) summoned a posse of nine men, and at 11 o'clock, a.m. started from the town of Gonzales. With this posse, I proceeded in the direction of Salt Creek, and between two and three o'clock reached John Runnell's house, distant some fourteen miles from the town of Gonzales. One half of my force advanced from one side of the house, and the other half from the other. As the party who were on the front side rode up, and while at a distance of some one hundred and fifty yards, George Tennel, with gun in hand, ran out of the house, jumped a fence into a cornfield and made for the lower end of the corn-field toward the woods. The field was quickly surrounded, and near the lower end of it Tennell was discovered lying behind a brush fence. Repeated summons were made upon him to give himself up, but without making reply, he continued trying to fire at the advancing party. His gun failed to fire, as when we got possession of it one cartridge was found lying by his side and having four or five indentures on it where the hammer had hit. This cartridge failed to fire, Tennel had pulled it out and substituted another, and was again in the act of attempting to fire when he was fired upon McNelly had arrived by August 1st with his company — a group of young men properly termed the Washington County Volunteer Militia Company "A." Victor Rose utilized appropriate military terminology in his description:

and killed. Every effort was made to get Tennell to surrender, and only after all such effort was found useless was he fired on."

"In conformity to the provisions of the law, Captain McNally [sic], formerly a policeman under the Davis regime, organized a company of soldiers, repaired to the distracted kingdom of DeWitt, where the houses of York and Lancaster were struggling for the supremacy."

Within the week McNelly saw action — and realized perhaps just how deadly the situation was. John M. Taylor was to be a witness in the William Taylor murder trial. McNelly detailed Sergeant C.M. Middleton and privates J.T. Irvin, J.F. Turner and John W. Chalk to escort him from Yorktown back to the ranger camp at Clinton. About eight miles from camp some dozen or more men challenged the rangers with gunfire. As McNelly described it in his August 7 report to Steele: "[My men] were suddenly met in the road by about fifteen armed men who demanded 'Who are you.' The Sargt. replied 'Who are you' [and] they immediately reported 'Que Dow' (look out) here they are boys, give em hell' and immediately fired a volley from their rifles . . . "For some fifteen minutes the battle raged — McNelly against Joe Tumlinson. He summed up the early report: "they are all alike, Taylor & sutton equally turbulent, treacherous and reckless." During the fight John Taylor ran off, Private Chalk was wounded and several ranger horses were hit, two of which were hit mortally. Taylor was recaptured the following morning.

Rose reprinted an item from an undated Victoria Advocate: "McNally's [sic] men have already had an engagement with the chevaliers d'Encinal, in which it appears that the soldiers came out second best. Call up the reserve!" When the smoke had cleared, Tumlinson apologized to McNelly, claiming that he thought the group were Taylors, and offered to replace the dead horses of McNelly's men.

Tumlinson was described by McNelly as a man who had "always righted his own wrongs and he tells me that the only way for this county to have peace is to allow him to kill off the Taylor party . . . "McNelly anticipated the Tumlinson group to resist surrendering their weapons. He also complained about not having enough men - "fifty men cannot over awe these people; they have been in the habit of overriding the officers of the law so long that it will require more force than I have . . . "To the San Antonio Daily Express the lack of immediate results was worthy of public complaint: "The Sutton-Taylor War in DeWitt County continues with unabated fury. We have just learned that Capt. McNelly, with his small company of Coke's State Police, finds himself powerless to quell the insurrection, or to give any relief to the county. His company consisted, at first, of forty men, but five of them have deserted him, others are still leaving, and he is unable to cope with the difficulties of the situation. He has called upon Gov. Coke to reinforce him with a hundred men. The Taylor party, we learned, have come into Capt. McNelly's camp, and remain there. We suppose that, finding themselves in danger of being overpowered by the Sutton party, they have sought McNelly's camp more for protection than anything else. Of course, however, they can be made prisoners, and be turned over to the civil authorities whenever Capt. McNelly chooses, or whenever he is able to assure their protection while in the hands of the civil officers. The Sutton party are still defiant and triumphant. They are banded together to the number of forty men, well armed and mounted, and led by old man Tumlinson, an experienced and daring leader, who is well acquainted with the country. They doubtless have a reserve force at their homes which, in an emergency, could be mustered, and greatly increase the strength of their party."

McNelly was "reasonably certain" that Hardin and Jim Taylor were to be back in the area in early September. He vowed if he saw them he would capture them even if it cost him all his horses in doing so. "The capture of Hardin and Taylor would go a long way to quiet things in this County and I feel quite sanguine of success in my contemplated effort at their capture." McNelly left a long report prepared for General Steele which is in part reprinted here. It was dated August 31, one month after the arrival of the ranger company.

"On arrival here about 1st inst a perfect reign of terror existed in this and adjoining counties, armed bands of men were making predatory excursions through the country, overawing the law abiding Citizens, while the civil authorities were unable, or unwilling to enforce the laws framed for their protection. The lives of peaceful citizens who had given no cause of offense to either party, were in jeopardy, as neutrals were considered obnoxious to both factions. From the facility with which treaties of peace and compromises had been broken, confidence in each other's respective promises, was a thing unknown. The Sutton party on my arrival numbered about 100 men (they claimed 150) and were defiant and triumphant. The strength of the opposing Taylor faction could not at that time be definitely ascertained as their main strength lay in the adjoining counties of Gonzales and Lavaca and they kept up no regularly organized force. They can at this time bring into the field about 100 well armed men.

"The District Court commenced here on the 3rd inst., and on the night of the 5th, three men of the Taylor party came into my camp and claimed protection (they being Lodwick Tuggle, brother of 'Kute' Tuggle, Martin King, and John M. Taylor).

"On the night of the 8th, I sent out 3 men under command of a Sergeant for the purpose of bringing before the Grand Jury an important witness in a case of murder involving some of the Sutton Party; they were fired into on the public highway by about 25 men led by Capt. Joe Tumlinson, wounding one man and disabling 3 horses. The attack was made for the purpose of destroying the witness, whose evidence was to be dreaded by some of them; had he not sought safety in flight his life would have been taken as the small force of my men would have been unable to protect him. The favorite manner of destroying testimony is to kill the individual by whom that testimony is to be given, and has been in vogue here for some time.

"The Tumlinson organization were in camp near the county seat, during court term, and subsistence furnished them by the Sheriff under the plea of being prisoners, but they were never disarmed. No effort was made by the Judge of the District or the Attorney for the state to have them dispersed or disarmed, although I told them that orders to that effect would be gladly received & promptly executed. An armed guard was necessary for the protection of witnesses before the Jury from day to day, yet no steps were taken by those in authority to render such guard unnecessary by disarming the Suttons. In a country of such strong prejudices much has been accomplished by the good conduct of the State troops, which has been most exemplary. No sympathy with, or favoritism to either party has been shown by the men of this command, and our presence here is favorably looked on by all peaceful citizens and is considered by them to be an absolute necessity for their protection and for the welfare of the country. Many men, whose lives have hitherto been insecure, have been unable to attend to their usual avocations in peace, although boasts have been made that our withdrawal will be the signal for a renewal of hostilities. The duty of guarding so many houses has been rather onerous, but I think will be less so, as these parties are beginning to learn that it is the purpose of the Governor of the State to protect its citizens at all hazards. Scouting parties have been sent out from time to time, as the men could be spared, in pursuit of notorious criminals (Hardin and Taylor no doubt). The County prison has been rendered more secure by sentinels whose duty consisted in preventing a repetition of the effects of mob law, such as were exhibited here a few months ago under the eyes of the guardian of the public peace. Several arrests have been made and the accused parties imprisoned here, or delivered to officers from other counties. Long and arduous trips have been made, often without success, but showing to the people of this section the utmost willingness to suppress disorder wherever it might exist. Several commencements of the old vendetta have been successfully quelled without bloodshed. Security to person and property has been rendered much greater, and the state of affairs found on our arrival materially changed, for the better. Though guards have attended members of one party in all their movements, the giving offense in the slightest degree to their opposers has been studiously avoided. The strictest orders have been given & obeyed by the men of this command, to avoid giving cause of offense to members of any party whatsoever. By the most vindictive of the Sutton party our presence here is simply tolerated and but for fear of immediate consequences, we would have been attacked by them, in fact Tumlinson has avowed his intention of attacking an ex-senator of this section on his return to the country, if not guarded in the camp of the state forces. (This is a reference to Bolivar J. Pridgen, whose son Oscar F. Pridgen was at that time a member of McNelly's company.) On one occasion one of my non-commissioned officers was compelled to use force in ejecting one of the Sutton party from a car on the Indianola R.R. into which he attempted to force an entrance for the purpose of raising a difficulty with one of the Taylors, who was being guarded to and from the trial of his nephew.

"To show to what length they will go, a party of the Suttons came to my camp on the 3rd ult., and reported that they were fired on by concealed assassins, the leader showing his clothes perforated by bullets, which by personal inspection, I am satisfied was done by himself, merely for effect, and he pretended to be highly indignant at my having so expressed myself. The Sutton party regards ex-Senator Pridgen as the prime mover of all wickedness perpetrated by the Taylors. Capt. Joe Tumlinson is supposed to be the originator of the deeds of the Suttons. Several men have been compelled to leave the country, but can now return with the assurance of protection as long as we remain here.

"The action of the District Judge and States Attorney, or rather their inaction, has been the cause of trouble which might otherwise have been nipped in the bud, and I am satisfied that if a Judge and attorney of probity, ability, and nerve, were sent down to hold court in December, they could effectually prevent a continuation of disgraceful scenes in and out of the halls of Justice. With the present incumbents there is no hope; fearful of giving offense they have passed over in silence infringements on the law which have transpired under their immediate observation, and have given just cause for bringing the majesty of the law into contempt among a class of men who at best have but a slight regard for it.

'A system of espionage kept upon the leading spirits in this feud becomes the means of my having a knowledge of their plans and they can make no plot of which I will be ignorant, and the scouting parties which are kept continually on the move prevent any gathering of these people for unlawful purpose. The leaders are men long accustomed to doing as they please regardless of consequences and have never experienced restraint upon their movements until now. To the law abiding, the presence of the State forces has been of incalculable value, the intimidation of the weak by armed bodies of lawless men has ceased and a feeling of security unknown until recently, prevails. Numbers of both factions would willingly witness a renewal of hostilities as peace leaves them out of employment. These have nothing to lose and everything to gain by a return to open warfare and will do all in their power to promote discord. A strict watch is kept upon these characters and they are beginning to learn that they can no longer persist in their lawless course with impunity.

"The next Session of Court commences in December when both parties will be here in full force and a difficulty between them may be expected, but if prudence & circumstances can prevent it, shall not occur; but if it does take place you may rest assured that I will have my men in such a position as you will render the escape of the survivors impossible, and they will be held to answer on account for their offenses."

One of McNelly's men left a valuable record of his experiences in DeWitt County during the feud. Lieutenant T.C. Robinson was his name and his contribution to the feud literature was in the form of a number of letters which were printed in the Austin Daily Democratic Statesman. He signed his communications as "Pidge" but no doubt most everyone knew his true identity. He described the Sutton leader in a letter of August 28: "Tomlinson [sic] goes about like Robinson Cruso with a gun on each shoulder and two Smith & Wesson's (No. 3) in his belt. I had the pleasure of seeing this gentleman a few days since; he has the frosts of sixty winters on his head, and green spectacles on his nose, and, it is said, can see with his naked eye farther than any hawk this side of the Rio Grande; when he gets on his spectacles there is no telling what he can see, as he magnified half of the company who were traveling the road into an ambuscade of the Taylor party . . . Of John Milam Taylor, the uncle of William Taylor, he wrote: ". . . when on foot, reminds one strongly of an old sundried bucket about to fall to pieces; when on horseback his powers of endurance are almost incredible.'

"Pidge" had heard of John Wesley Hardin before coming to Texas and wrote: "He kills men just to see them kick, and on one occasion charged Cuero alone with a yell of 'rats to your holes!' and such a shutting up of shops has not been seen since the panic! He can take two sixshooters and turn them like wheels in his hands and fire a shot from each at every revolution. There is a reward of eighteen hundred dollars for him, and it will be well earned when he is captured. He is said to have killed thirty men and is a dead shot."

Reuben H. Brown reappeared on the scene at this time. On September 25, he and some of the Tumlinson party attempted to board the train to kill John Taylor. McNelly wrote ". . as Corporal Ellis was bringing John Taylor from Indianola, some of the Tumlinson party (headed by Rube Brown) threatened to kill Taylor and were only prevented from doing so by my guards drawing their pistols and threatening to shoot any one that attempted to come into the cabooses that my men occupied by my order. They have apologized for it and said they were drunk but I constantly fear a recounter [sic, "recontre"] under just some like circumstances."

The October 13, letter of "Pidge" contained this interesting social comment: "That evening I attended church in Clinton, and listened to a very good minister from Cuero, who took issue against skepticism; he fought with doubts and mosquitos for an hour and a half in a most able manner. One thing was deserving of notice—not an old man was seen in church, not a silverhead could be observed, and I suppose that old people are never seen in DeWitt. If they are not killed they hide out in a country above here called 'the brush,' where the words of the gospel will never reach them unless used as wads for a double-barreled shotgun."

By early November McNelly was anticipating receiving writs issued from the United States Commissioner's Court in Galveston many of which were for Tumlinson and associates. McNelly wrote: "I am inclined to think if they get Tomlinson in the clutches of the U.S. Court at Galveston, they will at least break him up if they don't penitentiary most of them. Their papers are issued in the case of that old negro they "hung gutted" and I am satisfied the thing is being managed by Ball (Bolivar) Pridgen who is in Galveston. He came over to Indianola on Thursday's steamer and the Tomlinsons run him out of town that night and reshipped for Galveston next day." The reference to the "old negro" is to "Uncle Abraham," an ex-slave of Pridgen who remained with the family after emancipation. McNelly uses the expression "hung gutted." Jack Hays Day described how Abraham had been tortured and then disemboweled and his corpse weighted down and thrown in the river. This was because he had refused to tell the "Sutton gang" where Pridgen could be found. Day claimed that some of Abraham's children still lived on the Pridgen farm as late as the 1930's. Robert C. Sutton, Jr., identified the man as Abraham Pickens. McNelly concluded his report with a comment on Tumlinson: ". . . old 'Joe' has just joined church and I think must be meditating on the death of some preacher or some kindred amusement. I have been more on the alert than ever."

The leader of the Sutton force did not have long left. The Cuero Weekly Star of November 24 reported: "The ranks of the old Texas veterans and pioneers have again been thinned by the loss of the fearless old Capt. Joe Tomlinson. He had received baptism only a few days previous to his death, and met death with the same calmness with which he had so often faced it in battle with the treacherous Indian and Mexican. He was buried to-day with Masonic honors; mourned by his family and his many friends, to whom his aged arm was still a strong protection."

By the end of 1874, Cox, Helm, Sutton and Tumlinson of the Sutton party were dead. R.H. Brown assumed the mantle of leader. Bill Taylor was in custody, Jim Taylor and Wes Hardin were still free but hunted men. These two were reported to be together in San Antonio in mid-December, stopping to visit a fandango for a few hours. Also, the end of 1874 saw the rangers leave DeWitt. There were events of international dimensions happening on the Rio Grande which caused his superior to send the force there. Looking on McNelly's four months in DeWitt County one gets the feeling that they were there to gain experience for the war against the cattle raiders on the Rio Grande. As far as known the ranger troop killed or wounded not a single man in the violent feud center. On the border the opposite was true as he had orders to treat Mexican cattle thieves as Major Jones had treated Indians on the western frontier - that is, to kill and to take no prisoners. McNelly's fame in Texas history was a result not of his experience in DeWitt County but of his following orders to destroy the raiders on the Rio Grande frontier . even if he had to invade Mexico to do it.

The year 1875 saw fewer acts resulting in bloodshed, and the beginning of the court system having some power. Bill Taylor was to be in jail much of 1875, escaping during the September hurricane which nearly destroyed the town of Indianola. Before he left the feud troubles he would play one more violent role. With the death of Captain Joe, the ex-Senator had to turn to other enemies. He succeeded in having twenty-two men indicted as Klansmen. Their trial was moved to Galveston before the United States Court. The Galveston Daily News attempted to explain why these twentytwo men had been indicted as "Kuklux," stating that the movement which resulted in the arrest and appearance of the men "had its birth in the enmity long existing between the Sutton and Taylor-Pridgen parties." The Daily News thereupon provided a brief history of the feud, identifying 1868 as the starting year when allegedly Charles Taylor "stole a number of cattle" from the widow Thomas. William Sutton's desire to avenge this act brought about the feud. The most important aspect of this lengthy history of the feud is the printing of the January 3, 1874 treaty of peace with all eightysix signers identified. The men who were identified as "Kuklux" were also listed, with their home address: Joseph Sitterle, Victoria; Addison Kilgore, Clinton; John J. Meador, Cuero; W.C. Wallace, Clinton; Joseph DeMoss, Cuero; Buck and John Powers, Mission Valley; Peter Tumlinson, Yorktown; Zan and W.W. Peavy, Clinton; Andrew Jordan, Cuero; William Cox, Clinton; Andrew Newman, Karnes County; W.D. Meador, Cuero; William Pettit, Clinton; Gus Tumlinson, Harrisburg; Addison Patterson, Karnes County; Charles Lips, Goliad; James Mason, Clinton; Jeff. White, Cuero; J.W. Ferguson, Clinton; John Tumlinson, Atascosa. Reportedly when it was learned Marshal DeWees was in the DeWitt County area for the arrest of these men, "each one of the number immediately surrendered."

What is not stated in this important Galveston Daily News article is the charge against these men. The DeWitt County court records show these same men, as well as Joseph Tumlinson, James Smith, Ted Parkinson, Christopher Taylor "Kit" Hunter, David Haldeman and W.H. Leckie (Lackey?), as being charged with the murder of Abram Bryant on August 18, 1874. It is believed that Abram Bryant was the man who has also been identified as Abraham Pickens. The murder motivated B.J. Pridgen to bring charges of KuKlux Klanism against them for the murder of his former slave. This legal move finally was quashed and it was all for nought.

Bill Taylor was in custody of the law until his break during the hurricane. His months of imprisonment did not cause him to lead a more peaceful life. He did stay out of the limelight for a while however, but traditionally he sent word to ex-City Marshal Reuben H. Brown that he would kill him. Whether Brown took any precautions against Taylor is not known, but the end came at Cuero on the night of November 17, 1875. The first reports stated that Brown was sitting in the Merchant's Exchange Saloon when five men entered and started shooting. Brown and one Thomas Freeman were killed and others wounded. The special from Harwood dated November 18, concluded its report: "The general supposition is that it was Bill Taylor's crowd, as Brown was the officer who arrested him previous to his escape at Indianola during the flood, and it is stated Taylor sent Brown word he would kill him." The coroner's jury rendered its verdict that Brown and Freeman came to their deaths from pistol wounds, "delivered by parties unknown to them."

Great excitement prevailed and the Home Protection Club reorganized and placed guards out every night. Rumors, probably, were out that three of the Taylor party were killed and one Bennett was badly wounded. This killing brought nation wide attention to the feuding in DeWitt County. Many Texas newspapers reported it and even the New York Times of November 19 gave it page one coverage, headlining the article Two Men Murdered in Texas. The article reads as follows: "Galveston dispatches report a terrible tragedy which took place at Cuero this morning. A party of five men entered Ryan's saloon and killed Reuben Brown, City Marshal, who was formerly a member of the Sutton party. His body was riddled with balls. The saloon was crowded with men, both black and white. One negro, named Tom Freeman, received two shots and was instantly killed, while another was wounded in the face. Marshal Brown was the man who arrested Taylor for the murder of Sutton. Taylor escaped from the Indianola jail during the September cyclone. It is supposed his party did the shooting. Alarm bells were rung and a guard was placed over the town. No arrests have yet been made."

Other reports brought out additional details. It was generally agreed that the negro Tom Freeman, and the other seriously wounded man were shot by accident. Brown being the sole target. One of the men stated when it was over that they "got their man." Brown had been playing cards, some reports say dealing monte. "when a man walked in, took a drink at the bar, took a look at Brown, and walked out, when immediately five persons came in and commenced firing at Brown. They then dragged him outside and shot him again." Victor M. Rose had identified Brown as the head of the Sutton party after the death of William Sutton. He described Brown as "a young man, liberally educated, and almost a perfect specimen of physical manhood. But, after a brief reign, he too 'was got away with.' "Rose made the statement that three masked men had entered the barroom "and without further introduction commenced emptying Colt's revolvers into his body. After the death of Brown probably the clan had no recognized chieftain."

Jack Hays Day wrote that Jim Taylor "was accused" of killing Brown and that of the three men who entered the saloon "only one did the shooting." Supposedly Jim Taylor had wanted to be the trigger man, requesting that others "keep the dogs off and I'll do the rest." It was within hours following the Brown shooting that the Taylors were ambushed by Sutton men, Bill Taylor and Joseph Bennett being the only two wounded. A doctor was sought and, still according to Day, obtained. The Taylor party guarded him through the entire trip but were not molested again that night. If indeed there was a doctor who cared for the wounded it could have been Aaron Chapman White. Murphree recorded this statement: "The leaders of the Feud held a meeting and decided that Dr. White would be granted permission to doctor patients of either side without molestation or interference by any one of the opposing R.H. Brown's death could have marked another ending of the great feud. If history could do this then the winning side would be the Taylors. Jim Taylor was alive and well. His enemies — Cox, Helm, Tumlinson, Sutton and now Brown were all dead. Bill Taylor was — at least until September — in the hands of the law and relatively safe. He would live through his legal battles and would ultimately emerge victorious.

Whatever feelings Jim Taylor may have contemplating the death of his enemies it was to be short lived. He had a $1,500 reward on his head for the Sutton killing and he certainly knew there were plenty of men eager to earn the money. Jack Hays Day wrote that at this time Taylor wanted to use the law for protection, that Taylor even met with the noted attorney T.T. Teel to discuss trial arrangements. Day may have been involved, or it may have been his memory clouding the issues after more than half a century, but he wrote: "Then he proceeded to Clinton . . . to make arrangements with Judge (Henry Clay) Pleasants to have rangers come for his protection if he surrendered . . . He didn't apprehend any danger of the Sutton gang as long as he had his gun on; but if he surrendered he was supposed to go unarmed. If unarmed he would be at the gang's mercy like his friends, who had been taken out and hanged."

Lewis Delony wrote at length of the final day of Jim Taylor, stating that it was the belief of Sheriff Weisiger that Taylor and his friends had come to town to burn down the courthouse. Delony wrote of Taylor having "forty armed men (who) took possession of the town."

It is known for certain that on December 27, 1875, James Creed Taylor and two companions whose names had not before appeared in the feud records were in Clinton . . . for a reason which now cannot be determined. His companions were Mason Arnold, known also as "Winchester Smith," and A.R. Hendricks. Arnold may have been distantly related to the Kelly family and thus had reason to side with the Taylors. Hendricks came to DeWitt County as a Texas Ranger, a sergeant under Captain L.H. McNelly! He found love amidst the feuding families and on September 23, 1875, married Mrs. Elizabeth Jane Kelly, the widow of William Kelly killed back in 1870. The trio may have had with them Martin King, his son Mark and one of the Tuggle brothers. The battle received considerable coverage by the Texas press. The Corpus Christi Daily Gazette's report of January 6, 1876 is perhaps the most complete. It was headlined, Fatal Feud.

"A private letter from a reliable source gives the Galveston News an account of another bloody affair at Cuero, between the Taylor and Sutton parties, in which the former was badly worsted. The writer says: 'Since Sunday night Jim Taylor, with two or three men, has been in and about Clinton, walking through the streets with two six-shooters on each; and, as our Sheriff was at home and remained there, no arrest was made. The party had, in conversation with Martin King, sent Dick Hudson word that they would come and kill him unless he left the county within 24 hours.

"Dick could not exactly see the point, and together with six or seven of the Sutton boys, went to Clinton Monday, Dec. 27th, to offer his services to the Sheriff. As they reached there and dismounted, the Taylors (five men) at once got their guns, and commenced firing and retreating through a field, the Suttons after them, and after hard running and much shooting Jim Taylor, Winchester Smith (the man who is now recognized as having given Rube Brown the first shot when he was killed), and Hendricks (one of the Capt. McNelly command, who married into the Taylor family) were killed. Mark King and young Tuggles threw up their hands and surrendered, and were, therefore, not hurt. I am in hopes that this will have a good effect.

"The writer hopes this affair will be the last of the kind arising out of these old feuds."

The San Antonio Express, the Herald, the Austin Daily Democratic Statesman, and perhaps many many other newspapers printed this report with little variation. Day stated unequivocally that the trio had been betrayed by Martin King, comparing the blacksmithlivery stableman to Judas himself. Delony claimed that Captain Weisiger had "framed up" with King to lock up the Taylor horses to prevent their escape. In exchange, King's son, Tom, and adopted son Edd Davis, riding with the Taylors, were to be spared. Thomas Stell made no mention of a betrayal, simply stating that Taylor had appeared in Clinton with his brother-in-law Hendricks and Arnold when "the Sutton party immediately surrounded them and shot to death all three of them."

The trio — Taylor, Hendricks and Arnold, were all buried side by side in the Taylor-Bennett cemetery a short distance from modern day Cuero, on the banks of the Guadalupe River.

The "Sutton party" who were involved in the triple killing later stood trial for murder. On June 28, 1877, R.B. Hudson, D.J. "Jeff" White, Henry J. White, Christopher Taylor "Kit" Hunter and W.C. "Curry" Wallace were tried. After two days of examining witnesses and hearing arguments the jury spent all of ten minutes to determine its verdict of not guilty. The charge of murdering Hendricks and Arnold was struck off the docket. No doubt the fact that the survivors were under the orders of the Sheriff had a great deal to do with the legal decision. Of interest is that Delony identified Hudson, Wallace, Meador, Hunter, Buck and John McCrabb, Frank and Bill Cox, Jake Ryan and the two Sitterle brothers, Joe and Ed, as also being in the group who killed Taylor.

Bill Taylor could have planned to gain vengeance on the men who had killed his cousin and friends but had his own problems of survival to consider. For all practical purposes the death of Jim Taylor marked the end of the feud. Thomas Stell, who certainly was in a position to know, wrote in his essay: "Thus ended the notorious feud. (Since) the leaders, Sutton and Taylor, were now dead there was no disposition on either side to continue the feud. Of the participants not one of the Sutton party is now living and only two of the other side. Some of the descendants of each party live here today in perfect peace and harmony, and they know so little of the history of that quarrel that they frequently come to me for information relative to the same."

R.B. Hudson left no real account of the feud, but did make a small contribution to the literature worthy of inclusion here. It appeared in the form of an article in the Austin Daily Democratic Statesman of May 5, 1877. ". . . the people were once annoyed by horse thieves and outlaws of other states and counties, but it soon got too hot for them in DeWitt County. You speak of the Taylor and Sutton feud, that has been raging in this county, as having subsided. That is true, to some extent. The Suttons are all here yet, sir. That never was anything but the honest working men against a band of thieves, who overrun the country and stole thousands of head of cattle and murdered whom they pleased. It takes the name of the Sutton party because Bill Sutton was the first man to resist the thieves in this county. The leaders of the thieves were the notorious Jim Taylor and West. [sic] Hardin. They killed Sutton at Indianola on the steamer Clinton in 1874, and returned to this county and gathered two large herds of cattle under the muzzle of the Winchester and six-shooter. One of the herds was captured in Hamilton County, and Jim Taylor and West. Hardin killed Deputy Sheriff Webb, of Brown County. They then returned to this county to renew their thefts and murder, but Jim Taylor and two of his associates were killed, and West. Hardin and others left the country and we have not been troubled with outlaws since; but we are under no obligation to anyone but the good citizens or the so-called Sutton party for getting rid of them; but indebted to Capt. L.H. McNelly's company for many recruits to the thieving party."

Numerous acts of violence occurring in this time frame have been considered feud related. On March 3, 1876 Dewitt County Sheriff Captain Weisiger summoned a posse of sixty men to arrest parties who had shot and killed deputy J.E. Lampley. The reports contain names of men who were definitely involved in the feud - the four Clements brothers, John Sharp, one Day, Joseph Allen, two Callison brothers. The main complaint of the law officers was that there was a group of a dozen men who found enjoyment in breaking up social gatherings "by shooting out the lights and other similar acts." In one report of the law's movements deputies J.E. Lampley was killed and deputy Joseph Agee was wounded, perhaps by their fellow possemen.

A lengthy report from Cuero dated March 4, stated that Bill Taylor had been recognized riding a gray horse but no intimation made that the spring campaign against lawlessness had any real links to the Sutton-Taylor Feud. A "special correspondence" from Gonzales to the Galveston News dated March 21, stated: ".

. . the Taylor-Sutton feud of DeWitt had nothing directly to do with the late reported excitement in this county, though several of the young men (actors) are said to belong to the Taylor party."

Bill Taylor's name continued to appear in the press in connection with Sutton. In May of 1878 he was tried at Texana, Jackson County, and acquitted of the Sutton slaying. His bondsmen had been R.S. Flourney and three others — John Milam Taylor, Eugene Kelly, and Bolivar Pridgen. In 1880, Taylor was in the DeWitt County jail having been arrested by McNelly's successor Captain J.L. Hall. He wasn't there long as by the following year Captain D.W. Roberts of the Frontier Battalion complained of his "raising cain" in Kimble County. Bill Taylor's fate is clouded in mystery.

One other violent act deserves consideration, mainly because it has been treated as an act of the feud and because so many men who were directly involved in the feud were also linked to the double killing. On the night of September 19, 1876, Dr. Philip Brassell and his son George were taken from their home and murdered. Historians of the feud have been unable to explain why Dr. Brassell was killed, although his son James W. was listed on the Texas Rangers List of Fugitives from Justice as being wanted in DeWitt County for a "threat to take human life," being indicted April 11, 1876, after what some consider the end of the feud. He was a physician like his father. Of interest, however, is that a J.W. Brazzell signed the August 12, 1873, treaty of peace.

On September 20, warrants were issued for Dave Augustine, Jim Hester, William Cox, William Meador and Jake Ryan . . . all men whose names had figured prominently in the feud. Later the names of Frank Hester and Charles Heisig were added to the list. Captain J.L. Hall with sixteen rangers arrested the men at the wedding dance of Melissa Cox, daughter of Captain Jim, and Joseph Sitterle, a Sutton follower, the night of December 22. The arrest of these men was the initial act of legal battles that were to last for years. The final decision in the legal matters was made on October 30, 1899, when Dave Augustine, accused and convicted of Dr. Brassell's murder, was pardoned by Governor Joseph D. Sayers.

Eminent feud historian C.L. Sonnichsen devoted a chapter to the DeWitt County War in his first feud book I'll Die Before I'll Run – The Story of the Great Feuds of Texas. The chapter was entitled "Thirty Years A-Feuding." The length of the actual feud may be debated, and some of the violent acts of DeWitt County and surrounding area may be argued as to whether they were indeed feud related. But the fact remains that the DeWitt County vendetta was the longest and most deadly of all the many feuds of Texas.

DE WITT COUNTY 1890'S

The 1890's found DeWitt County busy and prosperous. Cotton was "King." Railroads were easily available for shipping or bringing in products. The Cotton Oil Mill, South Texas Ice Plant, Cuero Cotton Factory, Guadalupe Valley Cotton Mill, and Cotton Compresses all had their beginnings about this time. Yorktown, Cuero, and Nordheim had busy cotton gins, some with four or five operating. Most small communities also had gins. All farm work still required a large labor force plus mules, horses and oxen. Dairying was a growing business. Yoakum was a busy railroad center with a large "round house" to repair engines and other railroad equipment, providing many jobs. The town merchants enjoyed active and busy customer trade.

An 1896 Cuero Record gave an account of Green's Brigade Reunion of Civil War Veterans held in Cuero. Many DeWitt County men served under General Tom Green. A Texan, Green served in the Texas Army at San Jacinto, in the Indian campaigns of the 1830's and 1840's and in the Mexican War. Thus he was well known to the people of this area. Many DeWitt County men served in the 4th and 5th Texas Cavalry or 2nd Texas Infantry and were part of Green's Brigade which saw service in New Mexico at the Battle of Val Verde, with the Trans-Mississippi Departments, in the recapture of Galveston against General Banks, and in Louisiana in the battles of Mansfield and Pleasant Hill.

The old veterans and their families gathered from all over the state. Many railroads gave special rates to the men to make the trip possible. One of the events was a parade. Among the dignitaries on the reviewing stand was an invited guest — a former veteran of the Union Army, the popular W.H. Graham, long time DeWitt County Tax Collector.

1897. Some members of the planning committee were D.C. Proctor, A.B. Petticolas, C.C. Linn and A.B. Fields. The reunion concluded with a large reception held at Turner Hall (Turnverein c. 1870's) that evening. The veterans, ladies and general public attended and according to the reporter there was a large and most enthusiastic audience.

The program opened with the singing of Dixie' followed by other musical entertainment and readings. At the conclusion of the program chairs were removed and the dancing began. The Record described it thus: "The grand march was led by 'Old Gotch' and Miss Kirk, daughter of the Brigade. Many an old soldier with his fair escort followed the leader, whom he had followed many times before on the battlefields, to the sweet music. The old soldiers had a big time and enjoyed the hospitality of the town."

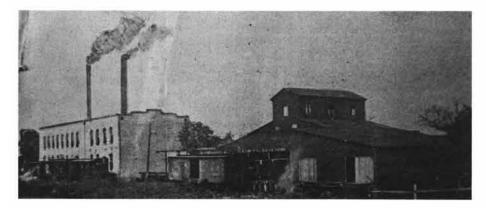

This was a period of home construction. Many one and two story houses occupied today were built in the 1890's as was our DeWitt County Courthouse in 1895. Business places were remodeled and rebuilt of brick. The Buchel dam on the Guadalupe was completed by 1898 with plans to provide electricity for Cuero and irrigation of nearby land.

DE WITT COUNTY 1900-1920

At the turn of the century DeWitt County was enjoying a period of economic and cultural growth. The Spanish-American War declared in April, 1898 had been successfully concluded and a period of peaceful development was being enjoyed that lasted for fourteen years, before the affairs of the county would be dominated by military and national commitments of World War I.

Texas got off to an economic fast start in 1901 with Spindletop and the rapid development of oil fields in east Texas near Beaumont. Although the repercussion of the first oil boom would not be felt immediately and directly in DeWitt County, the impact of the petroleum industry on the county during that period and the ensuing decades was significant. During the early years of the two-decade period, cotton was the most important agricultural export crop with an estimated 60 per cent sent to Europe by 1914. The local economy was also directly affected by the decision to extend the Southern Pacific rail line from Cuero through DeWitt County to San Antonio in the early 1900's connecting through Westhoff in 1906.

One of the dominant political issues voted on by the county during the early decades of the Twentieth Century was prohibition. This was not a new issue for the State and the county. The Texas Legislature in 1876 first enacted a local option law allowing each county to vote whether to be "wet" or "dry." But it was not until 1911 that the legislature acted to authorize a statewide vote on a statewide ban prohibiting the sale of liquor. The ban was narrowly defeated statewide at that time. But DeWitt County overwhelmingly voted in opposition to any such restriction, casting only 530 votes in favor and 2,285 against. The neighboring counties of Victoria and Gonzales also opposed the proposal, but not as decisively. Victoria cast 415 votes in favor of prohibition and 1,799 opposed; Gonzales voted in a closer decision 1,558 for and 1,720 against. The statewide vote on the prohibition issue cast twenty-four years earlier, in 1887, reflected a similarly overwhelming vote against the proposition.

The prohibition issue was raised again in connection with the patriotic movement associated with World War I and the need for grain for food. By June, 1918 Texas had closed all saloons, and by the summer of 1919 a federal statute blocked the sale of liquor. The vote in DeWitt County was 1,437 against, 788 for. By early 1920 the federal constitution had been amended sealing the fate, for a while, of the "wets."

A second major political issue that confronted the male voters of the county late during the period was whether to allow women to vote. The statewide referendum on the issue was held in May, 1919 with the men successfully refusing to permit women to exercise the right to vote. The DeWitt County vote was not even close, 1706 against to 689 for. However, with the favorable vote of the Texas Legislature, the Federal Constitution was amended the following summer and women were thereafter permitted to vote.

The community and the young men and women of DeWitt County responded enthusiastically to the call to arms in April, 1917, during the first days of World War I, as they had during the Civil War. The community organized in support of the war effort in an even more aggressive manner under the State Council of Defense. The county offered monetary help with liberty loan drives and savings stamp campaigns, food assistance with the National Food Administration and emergency help from local community and branch chapters of the Red Cross.

The Texas Council of Defense was composed of 240 local county councils, each with seven members. The membership of the first DeWitt County Council appointed by County Judge R.J. Waldeck, consisted of Philip Welhausen (Yoakum), J.F. Elder (Cheapside), M.G. Eckhart (Yorktown), Alex Hamilton (Cuero), D.B. McManus (Thompston), Walter Reiffert (Cuero), and C.G. Breeden (Cuero). Other supporting committees were also designated including a DeWitt Women's Council, a Medical Advisory Board, a Legal Advisory Board, and the county branch of the National Food Administration.

During the war, about 200,000 Texans served mostly in Texas units. The servicemen from DeWitt County joined units of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps. They served at sea on the battleship "Arizona" and in naval aviation; they fought with the 13th Regiment of the Marine Corps and in the 36th and 90th Infantry Divisions. There were no training fields or bases in DeWitt County, but Kelly Field near San Antonio opened in 1917.

A total of nine hundred and seventy-eight men and women served in the armed forces from DeWitt County during World War I. For the first time, a number of women entered the service from DeWitt County, and their names are included in the Roll of Honor. As mentioned earlier, the women volunteers were not permitted to vote until after the war and the Women's Suffrage Amendment to the federal constitution had been adopted in 1920.

Two hundred and fifty-eight of the total served in separate African American military units but all fought for the same cause and under the same Commander and Chief. There were family names on the World War I Roll of Honor that had appeared previously on the DeWitt County rolls during the Mexican War and Civil War — including Buchel, Friar, Pridgen, and Reuss. And there were many Spanish names — Benito Amador to Emilio, Francisco and Manuel Perez. And there were German names on the roll again — from Otto Arndt to Otto Zengerle.

Many who served did not return. Families lost more than one son — three sons of Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Bohne died while in service. Many men who died never made it to the battlefield in Europe. A number were killed in action in France — including Vincent Blakeslee, Burns Partain, Max Schiwetz, Earl S. McCullough, F.J. Range, H.O. Duke, Ben Hildebrant, Steve Danysch, John Christiansen, Alfred J. Stolleis, Paul W. Schroeder, B. Edgar Cook, and Hy Goode.

The following is the list of men who died in World War I: William A. Dinter, Jesse James Bohne, Joseph Lawrence Bohne, Charles W. Bohne, Vincent Blakeslee, Burns Partain, Max G. Schiwetz, Earl G. McCullough, William A. Cunningham, Steve Warwas, F.J. Range, Otto Cain, John Fawcett, H.O. Duke, Willie Thieme, Willie Beckermann, Henry Koehler, Theodore Wallney, Ben W.Q. After the close of the war, the American Legion Post III was established in DeWitt County and was named for William A. Dinter, the first young man to die in World War I from Dewitt County.

We owe a debt of gratitude to the DeWitt County American Red Cross Chapter which was organized on May 1st, 1917. This debt is not only for the service they rendered, but for publishing a booklet after the World War I which gave a brief history of the activities of the Red Cross Chapter, the names of all DeWitt County men who served in World War I and pictures of most of the young men who gave their lives during the conflict.

This Red Cross Chapter encompassed the entire county and was supported by all of the people as it was their opportunity to assist in the war effort. The following served as officers or department heads and workers: Mmes. Goe. J. Schleicher, R.E. Kleas, J.S. Day, F.P. Games, A.S. Bush, I.N. Mitchell, F.W. Kunetka, Henry Wilson, L.A. Carter, Herbert Leonardt, Bettie Peavy, John Welch, J.W. Russell, W.W. McCormick, G.M. Duckworth, W.D. McManus, E.R. Grosse, A.S. Kellog, and Ms. Lena Strieber.

The following men also served: Willie Frobese, Walter Reiffert, Rev. J.W. Allbritten, Rev. A.A. Hahn, C.A. Gramann, Weldon Crisp, Judge Grimes, Joe Sheridan, F.W. Jaeggli, F.P. Games, L.A. Though in DeWitt County 1,437 men to 788 men voted their opposition to Prohibition and 1,706 to 689 opposed allowing women to vote in a county wide election held 24 May 1919, the 18th and 19th United States Constitutional Amendments did not agree with the local vote.

The passing of the prohibition amendment produced a new county industry — that of making bootleg whiskey and there were plenty of customers. This business prospered until after the repeal of the Prohibition 21st Amendment in 1933. The 19th Amendment now permitted women to vote, but they would not be allowed to serve on a grand jury or act as a jury member for about 30 years in Texas.

Automobiles were prevalent in the 1920's but the county roads and bridges were still better equipped for wagons or buggies than cars.

the early 20's. A 1923 Cuero Record reported a "Monster K.K.K. initiation that was held on the road between Yoakum and Cuero." Candidates had come from surrounding communities as far away as 75 miles. Not only were the Klan members in attendance but many curious onlookers were also there. All went well with a large circle of cars enclosing a huge fiery cross burning against the night sky, the Klansmen in their white robes and a speaker from San Antonio addressing the group. The approach of an electrical storm caused an exodus of the crowd. However, a surprise awaited them someone had scattered thousands of one inch roofing tacks for miles along the roads during the meeting. The drive home included fixing tires that night and for several days. No one ever knew who did this but the Record suspected that opponents of the organization placed the tacks there!

The weather was capricious during the middle 20's. A record cold in the county in 1924 with sleet and snow caused some cattle to freeze in unprotected areas. Also periods of little rain fall resulted in poor crops. Though the '29' crash on Wall Street seemed remote and far away, by 1933 the failure of several county banks, resulting in loss of lifetime savings, had a severe impact on life in the county. Jobs were non existent. Many unemployed young men took advantage of such government programs as the Civilian Conservation Corps (C.C.C.). The enlistees were furnished clothing, medical care, room and board, and received $30 per month in wages. Of this $30, $8 was retained by enrollee and $22 was sent home to the boy's family. These young people worked on public parks, forest, rivers, and other state and federal projects. The W.P.A. (Workers Progress Administration) was also a program to provide work. The county still has legacies of many of these Depression and New Deal Projects — roads, bridges, streets, flood control, sidewalks, centennial markers, Cuero's Municipal Park, its clubhouse, lake, golf course, swimming pool, baseball field and old high school stadium. The N.Y.A. (National Youth Administration) building contained the dormitory, cafeteria, shop to train young people for jobs, and provided their living quarters.

Through these difficult times Yoakum had its "Tom Tom" celebrations, Yorktown its "Little Worlds Fair" and Cuero its "Turkey Trot." The state celebrated its 100th birthday with some county people going to the big party in Dallas by special trains. Our county still has some distinctive 1936 granite markers that were placed to honor county events, sites, and people that had contributed to its history. The inscriptions on these markers were so well researched that they are as relevant today as they were in 1936.

Slowly life was changing — farm tractors and machinery were replacing the old methods of farming; many community schools were beginning to consolidate with the larger schools. The long awaited R.E.A. (Rural Electrification Administration) lines were in place on some of the county farms and life in the country was changed forever.

Turkeys settling down for the night.

According to Roger Babson the financial outlook for the first half of 1940 would be the best ever. That certainly looked true in Cuero. President Roosevelt had given final approval for the funds to build a new athletic stadium and football field! Oh, yes, football was king then too. In November 1,000 fans came by train from Victoria to see the long awaited game between the Gobblers and Stingerees. The Stingerees won 19-13 and would advance to play Kenedy. Moonshine liquor was still plentiful and the oil boom started at Thomaston with Humble oil crews moving in.

Cuero had two movie theaters down town, the Rialto and the Trot, with first run movies featured at both. "Gone With the Wind" opened at the Rialto on May 11, 1940. There were two showings daily, with reserved tickets sold.

A grant of $6,000 was made to the city to retire existing debts and expand the facilities at the Municipal Park by NYA workers. The expansion would include tennis courts, a wading pool, and children's playground known as Lion's Park. There was also a $32,952 WPA grant for water works improvements which would benefit all areas of the city. The REA planned a new $35,000 building that would also include a ladies' lounge. There was a grant received by the NYA of $41,000 to build dorms and a dining room for the proposed industrial workshop.

On March 17, 1940, the city of Cuero took over the electric system, making the electric, water, and sewage systems all municipally owned. After a bitter dispute and two bond elections LCRA won control of the distribution system from CPL. CPL took their case to the Texas Supreme Court where it was ruled that the elections were legal. LCRA still bought electricity from the CPL dam, but the city now owned the two transmission lines from there to the town.

Prices were way low, but so were salaries. The 75 cents per hour minimum wage law wasn't passed until 1949. Bass' Shoe Store advertised boots on sale for $4.95, regularly $7.45, with children's for $2.89. Keds sold for 98 cents to $3.50. Koehler's had ladies' good dresses priced from $2.95-$10.95 and men's suits from $14.95-$21.50. Stower's had a Philco radio and phono console for $100. McClungs sold Scott tissue 3 rolls for 22 cents, 10 pounds sugar for 47 cents, Admiration coffee for 25 cents a pound and salmon 2 cans for 29 cents. The three Red & White stores advertised veal roast at 19 cents pound, spare ribs for 12 cents, pan sausage for 10 cents, and bacon for 25 cents a pound. J.C. Penney sold sheets for 74 cents, towels for 15 cents and wash clothes for 3 cents. Bleached winter unions sold for 79 cents and good print fabric for 71/2 cents a yard. Wagner's sold a baked ham sandwich and creamy ice cream soda for 20 cents. A year's subscription to the daily Cuero Record was $3.50.

J.T. Newman defeated H.F. Sheppard for mayor with 1422 votes cast. S.P. Hebert was reelected county judge, W. Lee O'Daniel was governor, and Franklin Roosevelt defeated Wendel Wilke in a landslide for his third term as president. The Lulacs netted $156.51 at a dinner and dance and the Cross the 'Ransus fund for poor children reached $213.48 plus toys, books, and clothes to be distributed Christmas.

Even though the United States had not become actively involved in the European war, the Draft Board opened on October 16, 1940. Local board members were John Seekamp, Werner Fischer, and J.J. Fischer. Young men between the ages of 21 and 35 had to register that day. The first two in line were Coot and Dick Coppedge with Bill Stockton next. 827 registered in Cuero with 2,652 in the county.

The first number drawn in Washington was 158. Draft number 158 in DeWitt County was Arnold Leonhardt, a young married man from Westhoff.

The first volunteers from DeWitt County were Jesse Manning, Charles Morgan, and Tom Peavy from Cuero; Edwin Williams, Yoakum; and Melvin Noster, Frank Zamazal, and Charles Zamazal, Yorktown. Next were Henry Menke and Daniel Boone.

On November 22, the first five men left by train for Fort Sam Houston for basic training. Jesse Manning, C.E. Morgan, Jr., Brinkley Peavy from Cuero; Edwin Williams, Yoakum; and Melvin Noster, Yorktown marched through town to the railway station. Downtown stores closed from 11:30-12:00 that morning so the townsmen could accompany them. The group was led by the colors and Cuero Municipal Band. Mayor J.T. Newman, a member of the first contingent of W.W. I, Rev. A.A. Hahn, who also spoke 23 years earlier to that group, and Dr. W.A. McLeod all made rousing talks at the station.

The July census showed that Cuero was the second largest small town in South Texas with a population of 5,481. Beeville was listed as largest. DeWitt population was down from 27,447 to 24,972. There were 250 aliens registered that year.

The city was flooded after 12.4 inches of rain in July, with water all downtown. Damages reached $150,000. Three floods were recorded that year due to the poor drainage system in Keyes Carson of Cheapside was Cuero's Ambassador. The Aggie hitchhiker traveled 12,000 miles through 35 states and Alaska promoting our city. At Thanksgiving, he presented a turkey to President Franklin Roosevelt, which was accepted by a member of his staff. During W.W. II Carson quit the highways for the jungle trails of New Guinea where he vowed to get him 30 Japs.

Roger Babson predicted that 1941 would be the best business year in U.S. history. That seemed likely in Cuero too. Mayor Newman and Sherrod Harris, Chamber of Commerce President, heard that the U.S. government was going to five contracts to civilians who would establish flying schools and they wanted one for Cuero. After the city purchased 500 acres from Kos Morgan and Frank Kunetka, they contacted Clyde E. Brayton and told him the city would put up $50,000 if he would come

The actual construction of Brayton Field began January 13, 1941. The airport was formally dedicated April 27 and remained open until August, 1945. During the peak of operation there were 550 employees with a payroll of over $1 million. 175 aircraft were in operation with as much as 1,000 hours of instruction in a single day. The firm built five landing fields and trained 6,611 pilots while in operation. There were 150 flight instructors and 150 mechanics helping. Brayton was one of the first to use women mechanics during W.W. II. New classes of cadets required ground school, 65 hours flying time, and physical education.

The first man in was Pvt. Eddie Jennings from Randolph Field on April 14. The classes were expanded to a maximum of 325 men per class. There were upper and lower classes as the war effort increased making a total of 650 cadets at a time.

On May 1, 1941 U.S. Savings Bonds and Stamps went on sale at local banks and the post office, but sales were slow. On May 9, work began on the NYA Center. This would be one of the largest in Texas with four buildings, including dorms, constructed at a cost of $61,000. One hundred boys would be employed and trained in the workshops and 40 girls in the food service. They remained in operation until June 1, 1943.

Amateur radio operators Ray Faulk, B.B. Thorn, and Rees Shannon were called on to aid the War Department in case of hostilities. The Cuero Home Guard was also activated with Ashton Hesse as captain.

From 1942-1945, the Texas State Guard D 45th Battalion was active. In 1943, it had 75 members. The guard was made up of men too old to serve, men in essential occupations, or physically unfit, and boys too young to serve. Its real intent was morale — to give a sense of purpose and security to civilians who were not directly involved in the war. They were called on for traffic control which was rarely necessary because no one had gas or tires. Jim Angerstein was selected Captain, Reiffert Blackwell, 1st Lieutenant, B.B. Thorn 2nd Lt. At first they met once a week at the City Hall, but after having weapons and ammunition rounds issued they moved to the old CPL building so they could be kept in the vault. Occasionally they would spend the weekend at Camp Bullis.

In 1949, a permit for $31,556 was issued to build a new National Guard Armory to be located east of the Cuero Municipal Park on Highway 87.

In 1940, the Texas Legislature finally voted to get with most of the states and change to a 12 year school system. This was gradually phased in and most of those who finished school during this decade actually went only 11 years. After taking a comprehensive academic test many students "skipped" a grade to make the transition smoother.

Sports were always big here. Football, baseball, tennis, track, and golf were all on the scene. During war times when the schools thought they would have to discontinue out of town games, loyal fans pooled their gas coupons and Mr. O.A. Zimmerman (coach, principal, superintendent, teacher, and friend), along with some parents, took the boys in their cars to competition.

As late was 1946 the Cuero Gobblers and Victoria Stingerees played a big game the Wednesday night before Thanksgiving. (Victoria won that year 25-0.) Yorktown, Kenedy, Yoakum, Edna, Goliad, and Gonzales were all competitors.

During the war years there were few male teachers in the schools and many retired female teachers went back to school. Many of the young men volunteered for the service instead of staying in school. When the war ended, these same young men came back to school and completed their education. Others came back to school and took refresher courses before entering college under the G.I. Bill.

In 1946, Cuero school registration was 1,191. High School had 338; Junior High, 326; French, 180; West End, 70; and Daule, 277. There were 35 schools listed in the county then.

By 1949 Cuero had an enrollment of 2,500 students. The start of school was pushed back to Sept. 6 that year so that water lines could be completed to two new campuses. The new Daule school was built on land donated by Willis Barfield and was open until full integration in the 60s. A new elementary school was built for the Victory Addition on land donated by J.T. Newman. This school was later named Oak View and remained in operation until a larger central school was built. Both were very modern buildings. Daule had a music building and gym in addition to adequate classrooms.

Turkeys were big business in the 40s. In November, 1940, 30,000 turkeys were shipped to market with hens selling for 12 cents a pound and toms 10 cents. Altogether, 60 cars carrying 85,400 turkeys weighing 1,200,000 pounds at a market value of $144,000 were shipped that year.

After a long debate, it was decided to stage the world famous Turkey Trot November 9-11, 1940. Bill Combs served as general chairman with many civic leaders working hard to make the affair a big success. Car caravans went all around south Texas to promote the affair. Basil Bell was crowned Sultan Yekrut IX, and Elizabeth Alexander was Sultana Oreuc. Murray Tarkington and Donna Faye Barfield were junior attendants. It was estimated that 40,000 people viewed the big parade and all but $465 was recouped by investors.

The first tribute to turkeys after the war was held at the Municipal Club House on Nov. 15, 1946. Birds were exhibited for judging and free turkeys were given away during the day. There were concerts presented by the Turkey Trot and Cuero High School bands. Food booths were sponsored by local church women, and the American Legion brought in a carnival. One of the highlights of the day was a Turkey Hat Contest. There were 14 entries and the winning hat was made by Mrs. V.E. Couch. All of the hats were later exhibited by Joske's in San Antonio.

In 1947, Beverly Bell was named Miss Turkey Trot. She traveled to surrounding towns wearing a turkey feather dress. The dress was made of 11/2 pounds of turkey feather tips, and 1 pound of down at a cost of $7. The foundation material cost $2.97, and the dress was made by Mrs. Ione Bell, Mrs. J.D. Bramlette, Mrs. V.E. Couch, and Mrs. George Trowell. The beautiful and unusual garment was written about in Ripley's "Believe It Or Not" on August 4, 1947.

That year the Turkey Trot Coronation and Parade was renewed in a big way. J.D. Bramlette was chief executive. It was said he had about 500 helpers! J.S. "Dote" Edgar, Jr. was crowned Sultan Yekrut X by General Jonathan Wainwright, Ret. and Mary Helen Burns was Sultanna Oreuc X. This ceremony took place before a Texas-Baylor B team football game at Gobbler Stadium. Henry King and his big band played for the ball held at the old Brayton Field. 7,000 turkeys (rented at a cost of 35-50 cents each), seven royal floats and bands from Lockhart, Yoakum, Edna, Yorktown, Beeville, Hallettsville, Kenedy, Floresville, Gonzales, Cuero, and the Turkey Trot Band all participated in the big parade. The event cost $5066 and was underwritten by local merchants.

During W.W. II the U.S. government began a system of rationing of goods deemed essential to the war effort. Every person was issued a certain number of stamps for a given amount of time. In 1943 Ration Book No. 2 was issued to 7,7171 persons — a 30% gain over book No. 1. No. 3 was issued to 7,330 and didn't include the "floating population." Red stamps were needed to purchase sugar, coffee, meat, butter, shortening, lard, canned milk, cheese, and processed meats. Blue stamps were needed for shoes. Gasoline and tires were restricted by the stamp on your car. The A stamp was for 5 gallons of gas a month per family, the B stamp was for a bit more. The C stamp was good for an ample supply of gasoline for farmers or businesses related to the war effort. There were also some T stamps for large trucks. Tires were even harder to come by. Only doctors, firemen, and policemen could buy spares. Everyone walked - to school, to work, to the Doll House, to the park, to church, to town - everywhere. Most families in the county also planted victory gardens to supplement rationed foods.

The old Mohawk Club was used for a U.S.O. There were dances there every Saturday night for the young men at Brayton Field. Mrs. Jeanette Woodworth organized a group of unmarried girls to go by bus to the field on Friday nights for parties. This organization was called "The Liberty Bells."

When the "Blood Mobile" came, people flocked to give blood to be made into plasma for our servicemen. Many people had black-out curtains in case of a raid. When air-raid drills were sounded these curtains were pulled. Thank goodness, we never had a real raid in the continental United States.

In 1943, the "Cozy Nook" opened in downtown Cuero, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Edgerton opened a privately owned airport by the Municipal Park. 15,000 bales of cotton were baled, but there was a huge labor shortage that caused the cut-back.

In September of 1943 it was declared unlawful to own frozen turkeys and they had to be sold to the Army. There were few frozen turkeys in the county then anyway because it was July of 1944 before Holmes and Wood opened a 500 locker frozen food plant. In 1946 I. Stein's Feather Processing Plant was opened to further the million dollar turkey industry.

The stores in Cuero closed for a big bond rally in September, 1943. The slogan for the drive was "Back the Attack With Bonds and Stamps" and the goal was $100,000. Chill Wills and three Hollywood starlets were in town for the big promotion. They were Helen Gilbert, Betty Wells, and Gale Storm who later starred as "My Little Margie" on TV.

Yorktown and Meyersville were the new oil hot spots that year. Italy surrendered September 8 and the first draft call of fathers was in October of 1943.

Scrap metal drives were held and the W.W. I cannon from the park was donated. Large wire bins were set up by the railway station to pitch in tin cans. One high school student even had to rescue his old jalopy for the scrap heap at the school!

In 1943 the biggest payroll was Brayton Flying Service, followed by Guadalupe Valley Mills, Cudahy Packing, Cuero Cotton Oil & Manufacturing Company, and the Cuero Livestock Commission. 31 other businesses were listed with payrolls exceeding $30,000 per

On D-Day, June 6, 1944, the towns in the county closed to offer prayers for the Allied boys - and for a quick victory.

DeWitt County had six newspapers in the 40s. The Cuero Record, a daily publication with weekly county edition and The Standard were in Cuero. Yoakum had The Times, established in 1892, and the Herald, established in 1897 merged in 1943 to become the Times-Herald; Nordheim had DeWitt County View and Yorktown published The Yorktown News.

On January 1, 1946 an auto-train crash killed five and injured three members of the Otis Leggett family as they turned into the family lane between Cuero and Thomaston.

A city bus service was begun by Belcher and York of Victoria on February 2, 1946 and continued until January, 1948. The fare was 5 cents and 10 cents and it had a 20 minute

The first bikinis appeared on French beaches! Meanwhile, back on the home front, the Guadalupe Valley Baseball League was organized with Dr. F.W. Miller president. Teams from Cuero, Victoria, Edna, Gonzales, and Yoakum made up the league. Baseball had always been popular in this area with amateur and semi-pro teams at different times. Six hundred fans attended the first night baseball game at the Cuero field on April 15, 1948. Mayor J.J. Fischer threw out the first ball and Cuero defeated Yorktown 6-2. The Beaumont Exporters, a Yankee farm club, came to Cuero for spring training several years starting in 1946. Several major league stars of the 50s started their professional career here. They stayed at the Muti Hotel and worked out at our splendid baseball field.

The Cuero Youth Recreation program began in June of '47. The first year's drive collected $3,319.58 and had $1,624.81 left at the end of the summer. Swimming, ping-pong, archery, dancing, tennis, and miniature golf (you had to furnish your own clubs) were all offered for

On August 14, 1947, a $30,000 fire swept thru Arneckeville. Destroyed by the blaze were Dr. C.A.H. Arnecke's office, the drug store, the post office, and Walter Wolf's General Store.

Turkey Trot Downs opened September 7, 1947 with 7,000 racing fans there the first week-end. Mae West and Miss Princess were the favorites in the main race. When the dust settled it was Miss Princess, first, and Blondie, second. Mae West didn't prove to be as "fast" as her namesake. Speaking of Blondie, Cookie Bumstead was born in the 40s.

The House Un-American Activities committee was formed and started its infamous "Red-Hunt" in 1947.

In 1948, the war having ended and Brayton Flying Service having returned Brayton Field to the City, the City was searching for an appropriate industrial development of the site. S.M. Patterson, manager of the Cuero Chamber of Commerce, made contact with Earl S. Tupper of Worchester, Massachusetts. Tupper was a young entrepreneur convinced that there was a great future for plastics. He was looking for a site near the source of the petrochemical raw materials needed for plastics manufacture. He looked over Brayton Field and liked the looks of the field and its buildings. He negotiated a contract to purchase the field and make it the site of his manufacturing efforts. A city election was held on July 20, 1948, to secure the approval of the voters for the transfer of the property to the new manufacturer. The election carried by a vote of 807 to 20 and a contract was entered into between the City and Tupper. Tupper-Texas, Inc., was chartered as a Texas business corporation and Tupper installed expensive machinery in the old hangars. A dispute arose between the City and Cuero Flyers, Inc., the previous lessees of the field, which culminated in a lawsuit. Relations between the City and Tupper became strained and series of law suits were initiated between the parties. Despite the efforts of a series of plant managers sent to Cuero from Massachusetts, Tupper-Texas, Inc. never succeeded in getting the plant into operation. After several years plans for a Cuero plant were abandoned and Tupper moved his operations to Florida. "Tupperware" in its Florida headquarters became known nation-wide, but was never again associated with Cuero.

Interestingly, Tupper's chief attorney at the time was Stephen A. Mitchell of Chicago, who later was appointed by Adlai Stevenson as National Chairman of the Democratic Party. Mitchell made many visits to Cuero in the course of the contract negotiations and of the litigation which later resulted.

Cuero grew 60% in 9 years and the population was estimated to be 8,791. In addition to annual Cuero High School FFA stock show, in 1949 the Southwest Texas Livestock Show, Inc. was created and produced shows for several years.

The city started spraying with DDT after a big rise in typhoid; the Lions Club donated $1800 for a machine to use. Free immunization clinics were set up. Polio was also on the rage with cases reported all over the county.

There were nine new car dealerships in Cuero in 1949. They were: McLarty Buick, Smith Chevrolet, Probst Dodge, Weber Ford, Ray Smith Kaiser-Frazir, Edu Mugge Mobil Motors (Oldsmobile), Harrison-Richter Plymouth and Chrysler, McGlothlin Pontiac, and Gay Implement (Studebaker).

The farmers were very unhappy over cotton allotments that were ordered by the government to control cotton production and prices. They threatened to march to Washington to protest.

The United States water situation was declared serious and conservation was urged while we could still preserve our resources.

In August of 1948, the temperature hit 107 degrees. Six months later on January 31, 1949, it was 2 degrees, a difference of 105 degrees! There was also three inches of snow on the ground.

The Cuero Record was raising its price to $5.00 per year.

Practically every DeWitt home had one or more boys and/or girls in military service. Citizens knew that war was inevitable and many enlisted before the draft called. On December 7, 1941 the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor. Forty three minutes after President Roosevelt addressed Congress war was declared on December 8. Three days later, Germany and Italy declared war on the U.S., but Russia pledged to aid the Allies. John Tate of Cheapside was aboard the U.S.S. Arizona and was unofficially our first casualty. Brantley Block, a Yorktown native was listed the second. The U.S. lost six warships and 2,730 men that day. On December 31, Roger Babson predicted a long war.

Harold Thigpen Green, U.S. Navy, was DeWitt's first war casualty. He went down with his ship April 26, 1942. His brother, Bill Green, was also killed in Pacific action later in the war. Second killed was Joseph Peter Zaiontz on Aug. 23, 1942. He was followed by Randolph Goebel, Meyersville; Lt. Henry Dick Morisse, Nordheim; and James Huff. Cuero.

Leonard Harmon of Cuero received the Navy Cross and was the first black to have a ship named after him. Harmon gave his own life to save a shipmate and at least two officers on the U.S.S. San Francisco on August 1, 1943. A destroyer escort was named the U.S.S. Harmon after him and was christened by his mother, Mrs. Naunita Harmon Carroll. The destroyer escort carried his name until it was scrapped in 1967 and got three battle stars for service. The Harmon Hall Bachelor Enlisted Quarters barracks building 783 was named for him in 1975, the American Legion Post 917, Harmon Post, and finally Leonard Harmon Drive in his home town of Cuero.

The first women to join the marines were Oleta Edgton and Margaret Cook in 1943. Callie Jamison was a daring young black woman in 1941 when she joined the WACS. She trained as a nurse and served overseas. After her discharge she was hired as a nurse for Roy Rogers' young son, Dusty, who later lost his life in Vietnam. Her friendship with the Rogers family continued through the years.

The highest ranking officer in W.W. II from DeWitt County was Major General James Kerr Crain. He served in the European Theater as Ordinance Chief.

Texans always seem to be able to find a light side to dark happenings. The War Department printed a mandate put out by 54 Texans at an air base operated by the N.W. African Air Force. DeWitt boys at the base included Sgt. Mertes Koenig and Cpl. Bernie Arnold, Cuero; Pvt. Edwin Frers, Lindenau; Sgt. Walter Kneten, Yorktown; and Cpl. Helmuth Luddeke, Yoakum. They were among those indoctrinating Arabs and other natives to the effect that:

- 1. Texas is the United States. The other 47 are merely satellite territories.
- 2. Satellites have banded together and are helping Texas in winning the war.
- 3. The National Anthem is "Deep In the Heart of Texas."
- 4. The capital of the United States is Austin, Texas.

5. The most beautiful girls in the world live in Texas. The sun always shines. The crops never fail. Oil and other riches abound. It is a happy land.

Lee Ryan was the first local casualty on the second day of the Normandy invasion. Lt. Charles Grunder, Jr. and Sgt. A.A. Schaffner were reported missing and later declared dead. Capt. Floyd Buchel was declared missing in the Philippines May 7, 1942, and officially declared dead February 13, 1946.

On October 26, 1947 the families of 1st Lt. John Edgar, Sgt. James Elkins, Pvt. George Kubala, Pvt. Felix Schorlemer were notified that their bodies had arrived in New York and they would be sent home for burial. On January 14, 1948, the body of Charles Lee Ryan, our third war dead, was returned.

June 6, 1944, was D-Day in Europe. War there ended on May 7 and was officially signed by the Allied and Axis powers on May 8, 1944. The United States had decided when first drawn into war to concentrate on ending hostilities with Germany and Italy first and then finish Japan. On August 6, 1945, the atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima and Japan signed the surrender August 14, 1945. The war was officially declared over on September 2, 1945, nearly four years after Pearl Harbor.

Eighty four from DeWitt County gave their lives fighting during W.W. II. In 1949 the DeWitt County Chapter of American Gold Star Mothers erected a monument where the names of all who gave their lives in four wars are listed.

The inscription on the monument located at the DeWitt County Courthouse reads: "To keep forever living the freedom for which they died, this symbol of our dead is dedicated. The following names are listed from W.W. II: Alfred H. Afflerbach, Otto C. Afflerbach, Edward R. Aguero, Carl A. Autrey, Richard B. Bednorz, Frank Biemer, Leo A. Blakeslee, Robert R. The monument also carries the names of the dead from the Korean War (1951-1953) and Vietnam (1964-1975). Even though this history does not cover those decades we feel their names should be listed. The Korean War: Julius W. Gohmert, Donald R. Harryman, William J. Kenigseder, Cecil E. Newman, Jr., Herbert Rice, and Frederick Zentner. From Vietnam War: Franklin D. Audilet, Wallace S. Dworzczyk, Jesse E. Herrera, Fernando A. Hinojosa, Adrian J. Ibrom, Robert E. Ragland, James L. Slade, Jr., and Salvador P. Triana.

We do not have a complete list of all of the POWs from this county. In the annual edition of the Cuero Record issued November 11, 1943, the following names were listed as either Japanese POWs or assumed to have been captured: Lt. Floyd Buchel, Herbert Tieken, Charles Tolbert, Arvon Carruthers, Denton Hoefling, Denton Hasdorff, Antonio Villa, Roland K. Towery, Joe Chilek, Edward French, Jake Gallia, Albert Williams, and Lt. Col. John Atkinson.

Louis Bailey and Elliott Bailey, brothers of Mrs. Jesse Parks of Cuero, were also listed.

Survivors from POW camps who currently reside in DeWitt County and are known include Herbert Frels, Jim Stone, W.F. Luthy, Warren Elder, Simon Richards, Charles Jurene, Gail E. Waites, Will Friedell, Garcia Petugib.

E.M. Mueller of Cuero was an "internee" in Switzerland after his plane went down there. He was not actually a POW, but he wasn't allowed to leave the country.

Many of those who were taken prisoner died while in camp or on enforced marches to places of interment. We truly regret if we have not listed someone who should have been. Every effort has been made to find information, but many have died after returning home, or they and their families have moved away.

An article from February, 1946, related that the Eighth Army sentenced Cp. Naraichi Chihara, a Japanese prison camp guard, to six years of hard labor for beating POW Charles Tolbert who was captured when Corregidor fell in 1942. Tolbert was still in the hospital then, but eventually returned to his family and lived many more years.

DeWITT COUNTY RAILROADS

Of all the political, economic, and social events which shaped the development of DeWitt County and all of South Texas, the advent of the railroad was probably the most dramatic.

Horse," we must picture the rudiments of transportation as it existed during the days of Texas' history as a Mexican state and then as a republic. Rude trails were used by pedestrians and horseback riders, while rutted dirt roads served the wagons and stagecoaches pulled by oxen or mules or horses. Freight shipment were limited both by the capacity of the wagons and carts and by the strength of the draft animals.

Curiously, the first railroad into DeWitt County was initiated by a steamship tycoon from New York City. Before the Civil War Charles Morgan had expanded his profitable Atlantic Coast shipping business into the Gulf of Mexico. Through a keen business acumen, he had won a virtual domination of the Gulf trade and had established several major ports of call, including New Orleans, Galveston, and Indianola.

Indianola's inland trade territory lay in the area west and south of the Colorado River, and its major inland shipping point was San Antonio. After 1865 this pattern became threatened by railroads probing southwestward from Galveston and Houston toward the Indianola hinterland. Morgan's response to this competitive threat was to build his own railroad. In 1870 he purchased the San Antonio and Mexican Gulf Railway Company, which had been chartered to build from Port Lavaca to San Antonio and had already laid its rails over the twenty-eight miles from Port Lavaca to Victoria. In 1871 Morgan and a partner, Henry S. McComb of Wilmington, Delaware, acquired the Indianola Railroad and combined it with the S.A. & M.G. to form a new company named the Gulf, Western Texas, and Pacific Railroad. In May of 1871 the new company laid track to connect Port Lavaca with Morgan's major steamship terminus at Indianola.

As indicated by its name, the ultimate objective of the new railroad was to extend westward to the Pacific coast, with connections at both San Antonio and Austin. Construction beyond Victoria was begun in March, 1872, and reached the DeWitt County boundary early in that year. General H.E. McCulloch was manager of the project, and Colonel Gustav Schleicher was the chief surveyor. In the spring of that year the road established its first DeWitt County station at Thomaston, named for Colonel Nathan Thomas, who sold part of the Refugio Amadore Surrey for a townsite. The Thomaston station was in operation until 1929, with a full-time agent and telegraph operator on duty.

Construction continued in a northwesterly direction, and in the late summer of 1872 a second station was established six miles from Thomaston at Burns Station, named for Arthur Burns and his family, who were the first settlers in the area. Unlike the other terminals, Burns Station did not develop into a fullfledged townsite, and in the early 1900's the name of the station was changed to Verhelle.

The route of the G.W.T. & P. followed a public road which had been laid out from Victoria to Gonzales in 1841. In January, 1873, the construction crew completed the last five miles to the terminus which was to become the city of Cuero, located near the Guadalupe River in central DeWitt County on a 640-acre tract of the Jose San Antonio Gonzales Valdez league. The first passenger train rolled into Cuero on March 4, 1873, with a crew consisting of Conductor Gould, Engineer Pat P. Smith, Fireman James Mooney, and Brakeman Festus Farnsworth. Among the passengers were Mr. and Mrs. C.C. Howerton and their children, Jim and Miss Lelia.

Henry Sheppard, a captain on the Morgan steamship line, was named president of the G.W.T. & P. Railroad in 1876, a position he held until his death in 1879.

Except for Burns Station, the impact of the railroad upon its terminal sites was immediate and dramatic. Thomaston developed into a thriving little town with good schools and churches and several business establishments. Cuero's population grew rapidly with a variety of businesses, churches, schools, residential areas, and a newspaper, the Cuero Weekly Star edited by Rudolph Kleberg, who went on to become a United States congressman.

As an inducement to the G.W.T. & P. to route its line through Cuero, the Cuero Land & Immigration Company had deeded 100 acres of its land in the J.A.V. y Gonzales League to the railroad. This property, known as "Morgantown," was subdivided and developed as Cuero's first residential area. Within a week after completion of the railroad's survey, the Land & Immigration Company had sold most of its lots in the business section to buyers including Nicholas Fuchs, Qualls & Kent, C.C. Howerton, Tom Womack, and H. Runge & Company. The Cuero post office was moved to the new town from its former location in the Friar-Cardwell store four miles to the north. The DeWitt county seat was moved to Cuero from Clinton in 1876.

The first excursion train to Cuero ran from Victoria on July 4, 1873. The excursion train was composed of four flat cars equipped with benches nailed to the floors and sideboards for passenger safety, several stock cars with canvas covers, a caboose, and a regular coach. The fare from Victoria to Cuero was $3, and from Indianola to Cuero $4.

Cuero Train Station (Freight)

In 1887 the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railroad constructed DeWitt County's second rail line, crossing the county from northeast to southwest. The S.A.A.P. entered the county at Yoakum and established stations at Edgar, Cuero, Yorktown, and Nordheim on its run to San Antonio. A major locomotive repair depot was established at Yoakum.

By 1906 the Southern Pacific had taken over the Gulf, Western Texas, and Pacific line; and another of its branches, the Galveston, Harrisburg, and San Antonio Railroad extended a road southeast to northwest to Stockdale, where it joined an existing line from Stockdale to San Antonio. This line crossed the Guadalupe just west of Cuero and established stations at Lindenau and the settlement of Bello. These two lines — the S.A.A.P. and the G.H. & S.A. — operated independently until 1925 when the Southern Pacific Company became the owner of both railroads and operated them jointly as the Texas and New Orleans lines.

With the advent of motor trucks, buses, and private automobiles, the railroad passenger routes faded into oblivion. The last passenger service through Yoakum and Victoria was cancelled on November 15, 1950, and today rail service to DeWitt County consists of freight service only. However, the impact of the coming of the locomotive to the DeWitt County frontier still persists, through the towns and cities which it sired throughout the county.

DeWitt County is drained by the Guadalupe River, which crosses the county from north to south, and its tributaries. Along the river and its tributaries the soils are rich loam covered with heavy brush. Trees native to the country are live oak, walnut, hackberry, hickory, cottonwood, pecan, cypress, and elm. The prairie sections have black and sandy soils; the sandy ridges are covered with post oak, black jack, mesquite, weesatche and retama. Some areas of the county produce grain, corn, and other feed stuff; however, a large portion of the county is pasture land for production of livestock. Oil, gas, sand, gravel, and pecans are produced commercially.

POST OFFICES AND POSTMASTERS

No United States Post Office in Texas can boast a date of establishment more than just a few months earlier than the Cuero Office which was authorized in May, 1846. This first DeWitt County Post Office was located in the home of Daniel Boone Friar which was used as a stage stopover from Victoria, Gonzales, Goliad, and La Grange. Friar sold the property in September, 1849, after serving as postmaster for three years. Crockett Cardwell then purchased and maintained the post office in combination with a store, stage-stop, and tavern for nearly a quarter century. Letters were postmarked Cuero DeWitt County.

Of the many United States post offices established in DeWitt County, five of these — Cuero, Yorktown, Meyersville, Hochheim and Thomaston offices — have been receiving and sending out mail for more than a century. The post office at Nordheim has had its 93rd anniversary and that at Westhoff, its 83rd. Yoakum and Cheapside Post Offices are located in Lavaca and Gonzales Counties.

DeWITT COUNTY CREEKS AND STREAMS

DeWitt County Creeks East of the Guadalupe River

McCoy Creek is in the Hochheim-Concrete area of northeastern DeWitt County; there are several branches in the upper course. The general direction of its flow is southeasterly, and it unites with the Guadalupe River a few miles south of the town of Concrete. This creek crosses the John McCoy headright league on which he and his family settled in 1827. It was named for these McCoys, especially to honor the son Jesse who was slain in the Alamo in 1836. It is definitely known that it had its name as early as 1840.

Live Oak Creek is a short tributary of McCoy Creek that runs by the town of Concrete. It gets its name from the huge live oak trees in this area. Because the Old Concrete Cemetery is nearby, it is sometimes locally called Graveyard Creek. It is without water except in rainy seasons. There are many Texas creeks named Live Oak; however, this one has the distinction of being the shortest — about three miles — before entering the McCoy Creek.

Cuero Creek runs into the Guadalupe River about four miles north of Cuero. Word has been handed down that prior to the time of the Spanish possession of Texas, the Indians called this stream Skin Creek — most likely because they got many skins from animals killed along its banks. On a map made by Spaniards in the 1700's they translated the work skin into Spanish and used the name Cuero Creek on their map. James Norman Smith taught the DeWitt County area's first school in a log house called Upper Cuero Creek Settlement on McCoy Creek near the present town of Concrete, beginning in May, 1840. Soon Sunday School and occasional church services began to be held in this school house, and the area's first church organization was effected there in June, 1842 by the Cumberland Presbyterians. This Upper Cuero Creek Settlement played an important part in the section's worthwhile development during the time of the Texas Republic and the early years of Texas statehood.

Friar Branch was so named because much of the land that drains into it has been in the possession of Friars since Sidney Friar bought it in 1891. It is in the area about three miles south of Cuero and has a dry bed except in rainy times when much water is carried along its westerly course to empty into the Guadalupe River.

Bonner Hollow was named for Nelson and Julia Burns Bonner who in 1880 settled on the land that drains into this hollow. It unites with the Guadalupe River several miles above the mouth of Irish Creek.

Irish Creek rises in the central part of eastern DeWitt County not far from the town of Edgar; it flows in a general southwesterly course to empty into the Guadalupe River near the location of Old Burns Station, or about midway between Cuero and Thomaston. In 1826 about two miles from the mouth of this creek and near its southern bank the Arthur Burns family settled on his headright league in the first home ever built in the entire area that later became DeWitt County. In its upper course the creek runs through some rugged country and when heavy rains come it can really become a raging torrent. Arthur Burns was of Irish descent and it is said when it was on the rampage, the early settlers joked him about his creek's "having its Irish up" and that in time this led to its being called Irish Creek. In dry seasons much of its course is without water, but because of the violence of its flash floods the bridges across are high and strong.

Reed Branch is about three miles below Irish Creek. It forms the northern boundary of land purchased by Dan Reed in 1865. Though most of the time it is a dry ravine, in rainy seasons it flows with a swift current to join the Guadalupe River.

Spring Branch runs across land of the Charles Lockhart headright land in the Thomaston vicinity and unites with the Guadalupe River. In the deed for 1094 acres that Charles Lockhart sold to Orlando Jones on November 10, 1845 Spring Branch is given as a boundary of the tract. It usually has a dry bed.

Price's Creek rises about five miles northeast of Thomaston, flows in a general southwesterly direction, and empties into the Guadalupe River two miles below the DeWitt-Victoria County boundary line. it drains some rugged country, and in places has cut out a rather wide and deep bed and in times of heavy rains it becomes a really deep and swiftly flowing stream. In dry seasons much of its course is without water. In the lower part there are some deep, permanent, spring-fed pools in which there are perch and trout. Legend attributes the naming of the creek to have been for an early settler, but no definite knowledge has been obtained of a Price family's ever having lived along its course.

Big Brushy rises in the extreme northeastern section of DeWitt County and flows across that area and on into Lavaca County where it unites with the Lavaca River. In early years much of the land along its course was covered with thick brush and that accounts for its name by which it was called as early as 1850.

Little Brushy is a tributary of Big Brushy; it rises in the central eastern part of DeWitt County and flows in a southeasterly course. In early days Charles Hume had a saw mill on Little Brushy.

Thiele Creek is a prong of Big Brushy in its upper course and is so named because it crosses land owned by a Thiele family.

Tonqua Creek is in the Stratton area and is tributary to Little Brushy. Though it has a different spelling Tonqua Creek was named in long-ago days for the Tonkawa Indian tribe that roamed and hunted along its course.

Chicolete Creek is in southeastern DeWitt County. It has two branches in its upper course. It is said this creek was named for Chicolete Indians who were a division of the Cherokee tribes. This is an intermittent stream.

Bear Creek is in southeastern DeWitt County very near the Lavaca County boundary. From statements made in "Texas Camel Tales" by Chris Emmett there seems some evidence that in days of yore there were black bears in the area around Victoria. This is not far from Bear Creek, so there may also have been some bears along its course and this may account for the name.

Creeks of DeWitt County West of the Guadalupe River

Denton Creek rises in Gonzales County and flows across into DeWitt County where it empties into the Guadalupe River. There were several early-day families bearing the Denton name who lived in the locality through which this creek flows, and it was named for them.

Fisher Creek starts in northern DeWitt County near the Gonzales County boundary and flows in a general southeasterly course into the Guadalupe River. Research has yielded no reason for its name.

Fulcher Creek rises in northern DeWitt County almost on the Gonzales County line, flows southeast across the Churchill Fulcher league that was granted him as a headright in 1831, and empties into the Guadalupe River about five miles downstream from the mouth of Fisher Creek. Early settlers named this creek for Churchill Fulcher.

Boggie Creek is in the northern part of DeWitt County and its source is near the DeWitt-Gonzales County boundary. It runs in a southwesterly course to join the Sandies some three miles above where Clear Creek flows into it on the opposite side. Boggie Creek derives its name from the fact that it has quicksand in its bed and from earliest times on down to the present many cattle have "bogged down" in it. It is risky for a horseman to attempt to ride across its bed even when it is entirely dry.

Bird Creek is a tributary of the Sandies and runs along the outskirts of Westhoff which is very near DeWitt County's northwestern boundary. This creek is located on the James Bird survey — hence the name.

Thomas Creek is near Westhoff and is crossed by U.S. Highway 87. It is named for the Thomas family who live in the vicinity.

Sandies has quite a long course and may be counted as a permanently flowing stream. Its source and much of its course is through sandy land, and this accounts for the name, Sandies. It rises in the central western part of Gonzales County and runs on across the northwestern boundary of DeWitt County where after a meandering course in which at times it flows south, east, west, and finally southeast it joins the Guadalupe River in the central part of the county across from the Cuero area. It has such a large watershed that in times of heavy rains it really goes on the rampage and pours such a large volume of raging water into the river that it has no small part in bringing it up to flood stage.

Chisholm Creek is near Clinton and flows into the Guadalupe River. The Richard Chisholm family of four took up their abode in January 1829, on his headright league across which this stream runs and it soon came to be called Chisholm Creek in his honor. Except for pools from springs near its source, this is a dry creek bed most of the time.

Cattail Creek joins the Guadalupe River several miles below Clinton. It got its name quite early from the cattail bushes that then grew and blossomed along its banks. It seldom has water in it in the present time.

Carlisle Creek (also spelled Carlyle in some deed records) is mentioned in a DeWitt County deed record dated September 30, 1859. It is reputed to have been named for Henry Carlisle (not sure which spelling) who in early years lived in his home about 200 yards from the stream. It is located in southern DeWitt County and has two branches. One flows in a southeasterly course and crosses the southern end of the Green DeWitt survey; the other branch runs northwest and is partly on the Quinn league; they join a short distance from where the creek unites with the Guadalupe River.

Clear Creek rises in the area near Nopal in northwestern DeWitt County where it has several branches. It flows in a general southeast course on into the central part of the county and hence drains quite a large area and is more or less a permanent stream. It flows into the Sandies about midway from where that creek crosses the DeWitt County border and its confluence with the Guadalupe River. Pioneer settlers gave Clear Creek its name because, even though at that time it was quite deep, its waters were so unusually clear that its sandy, pebble-covered bed could be seen clearly.

Deer Creek rises a little west of the center of DeWitt County, flows ina general easterly course, and empties into the Sandies near Lindenau about two miles from its mouth. This stream was called Deer Creek by the pioneers because of the many deer in the locality.

Lost Creek starts about two miles west of the mouth of the Sandies. It flows south for several miles then makes an abrupt turn to flow east about a mile before it empties into the Guadalupe River near Schleicher Bridge. The real source of the stream is underground springs from which in former years waters bubbled up to the surface to form pools and then sink out of sight for some distance before reappearing to form a running creek. This accounts for the name of Lost Creek which was given to it prior to 1850. Because of the early-day graveyard near its bank, in later years this creek was sometimes called Graveyard Creek.

Quinn Branch was named for James Quin across whose headright league its usually dry bed goes in a northeasterly course to join the Guadalupe River a short distance below the mouth of Carlisle Creek. Locally this is sometimes spoken of as Queen Creek, but this is merely a mispronunciation of the correct name Quinn Creek.

McCrabb Creek rises on the southern boundary of the Miguel Ortiz survey almost on the Victoria-DeWitt County boundary; it flows northeast across to the northern border of the Ortiz survey and on into the John McCrabb quarter-league where it makes a decided bend and flows southeast back into the Ortiz survey and on a short distance to empty into the Guadalupe River. It was named for John McCrabb who came as DeWitt's colonist in 1829 and was granted his quarter-league on the west bank of the Guadalupe River. This is usually just a dry arroyo.

Coleto or Coletto Creeks. There are four streams in DeWitt and another one in Goliad County that bear the name Coleto. Just why and when they came to be called this has not been ascertained. However, Texas history records that Fannin's surrender in 1836 took place near Coleto Creek. After Yorktown was located on the main Coleto, in order to designate it more definitely, it was for a time spoken of as Yorktown Creek. Likewise the Coleto on which Meyersville was located was sometimes called Cottonwood; in its upper course some cottonwood trees grew along its banks. Cottonwood Creek is mentioned in a deed for land on this stream in the Yorktown vicinity; this deed is dated August 12, 1899. When Clinton became county seat of DeWitt County in 1850, the Coleto Creeks were definitely designated and these names continue to the present time. They were called the Three-Mile, the Five-Mile, the Twelve-Mile, the Fifteen-Mile, and the Eighteen Mile Coletos; these mileage figures are the distances from the courthouse door at Clinton to the respective creeks. The Three-Mile joins Five-Mile which forks with Twelve-Mile about three miles from the Victoria County border; the Twelve-Mile runs into the Fifteen-Mile after they cross into Victoria County; the Eighteen-Mile also joins the Fifteen-Mile which then goes on to unite with the Guadalupe River a few miles below the town of Victoria which is county seat of Victoria County.

The Fifteen-Mile, or main Coleto, forms part of the boundary between DeWitt and Goliad Counties; it has an unusually large watershed and during times of heavy rains even in recent years has become a raging torrent with exceedingly swift current.

Boggy Creek in central DeWitt County is a tributary of the Five-Mile Coletto. Often times portions of its bed are very boggy. At one point in its course there is a deep lake or pool with a mott of trees close by. In early years numbers of alligators lived there, so this place was given the name "Alligator Mott." The American Crocodiles have long since been killed out, but the mott and pool are still called Alligator Mott.

Manahuilla Creek rises in southwest DeWitt County and flows on into Goliad County where it unites with the San Antonio River about five miles below Goliad. According to legend it was named for an Indian girl, probably in years when the Indians roamed along its banks.

Jane Creek is located in western DeWitt County in the area between Yorktown and Nordheim. It runs in a southeasterly direction and is a tributary of Smith Creek. Intensive research failed to discover a reason for its being named Jane Creek.

Smith Creek rises in northwest DeWitt County; there are two branches in its upper course; one is called the East Fork; the other the West Fork. Smith Creek flows in a general southeasterly direction to join the Fifteen-Mile Coleto about three miles before it crosses the Goliad County border. It seems reasonable to say it was named for Smith, but just which one has not been ascertained.

Salt Creek is a tributary of Smith Creek in the northern part of its course and is located in the Davy area. It was given the name of Salt Creek because in early years there were salt deposits along its course. Pioneers obtained supplies of salt from these deposits.

Cabeza Creek rises in northwestern DeWitt County and flows on south very near the Karnes County eastern boundary until it finally crosses over into Karnes County. In an account of the battle with Indians on the Escondida Creek near Karnes City when Captain John York was killed in 1848, one of the participants says, "We camped for the night on Cabeza Creek." The word Cabeza is Spanish meaning head, but that does not indicate why the creek was so named. Can it be that earlyday Spaniards gave the stream that name to honor Cabeza de Vaca who is reputed to have been the first Spaniard to travel about in Texas and who may have passed somewhere near this locality in his trek across Texas.

Mustang Creek flows in a southwesterly course across the extreme northwest corner of DeWitt County and on into Karnes County. It was given that name by early settlers because many wild mustang ponies roamed over that locality.

Volume B of the DeWitt County Commissioners' Court Records gives the report of the fixing of boundaries for school districts by the Court on April 17, 1854. In this the following creeks are mentioned: Clear Creek, Deer Creek, Five-Mile Coleto, Twelve-Mile Coleto, Lost Creek, Sandies, McCoy Creek, Big Brushy, Chicolete, Irish Creek, Cuero Creek, and Price's Creek.

Bridges Over the Guadalupe River

DeWitt County is one of the best watered counties in Texas with at least fifteen creeks and the Guadalupe River. The Guadalupe twists and turns as it meanders across DeWitt County. The river is beneficial and can also cause havoc.

Schleicher Bridge

The first bridge built across the Guadalupe River near Cuero, was a wooden truss bridge called the "Schleicher Bridge." It got the name "Schleicher" from Gustave Schleicher. It was located about two and a half miles southwest of Cuero where the Old Cuero-San Antonio road crosses the river. It was built in September, 1873 and was replaced by Cuero's second iron bridge for which the contract was let May 21, 1887. It was completed in 1887. The old iron bridge had served for many years, but the need for a bridge to replace it and to take some of the traffic from the "New River Bridge" arose. Bridges on roads that are not state or federal highways are called "off-system bridges." To build the new Schleicher Bridge would cost $1,500,000.00 total. DeWitt County and the City of Cuero paid $300,000.00; $212,000.00 came from county funds and $88,000.00 from city funds. The city bought the necessary land or right-of-way in the city limits and the county bought necessary land or right-of-way in the county to build the road to the new bridge. The new Schleicher Bridge was completed in 1983, thanks to DeWitt County, the City of Cuero, the Texas Highway Department, and the Federal Road System.

Clinton and the New River Bridge

Several years before Clinton was established in 1846, Richard Chisolm began operating a ferry boat across the river near where the Clinton town site was located and three miles below where the Sandies Creek flows into the river. On April 12, 1886, a contract was let for an iron bridge to replace the ferry and pontoon bridge built across the Guadalupe River in the vicinity of Cuero. It was completed August 13, 1886. By 1934 it was decided that a longer and higher bridge near Cuero was needed, so the bridge was built. This bridge was built a mile up the river from the Clinton Bridge. We now call this bridge the "New River Bridge," though it was completed in 1938. It is used in traveling both the Goliad and San Antonio Highways from Cuero.

Heard Bridge

Heard Ferry began operating across the Guadalupe River several miles below the Chisolm Ferry. The "Heard Bridge" is located three and a half miles south of Cuero and the contract for this fourth iron bridge in DeWitt County was let February 1889. This iron bridge was used until the most recent "Heard Bridge" was completed September 1965 on FM 236. This bridge was named for the nearby Heard family.

Hochheim Bridge

This bridge is named for the early settlement of Hochheim (Hoch Home) which got its name from Valentine Hoch, who had built a two-story home of rock quarried from nearby hills. A stage stop was in Hochheim and Lip's Ferry crossed the river in this area. About 1889, an iron bridge replaced the ferry. This iron bridge was used until 1956 when the present modern bridge was constructed across the river on Hwy. 183 from Cuero to Gonzales.

Thomaston Bridge

In February 1893 a petition was made for a wire suspension bridge to be built over the Guadalupe River near Thomaston. The contract was let to the Lone Star Suspension Bridge Company in May, 1893. The bridge was complete in the summer and used until the fall of 1913, when the flood washed it away. A contract was let to Missouri Bridge Iron Company to build a bridge in place of the suspension bridge. It was located three miles southwest of Thomaston. The "Thomaston Bridge" was accepted by the Commissioners' Court on August 20, 1914. It was closed in 1983 because it was considered dangerous. The new "Thomaston Bridge" was completed sometime in 1984. It was paid for by county and federal funds.

"Hells Gate" Bridge

Over the years many people have wondered how "Hells Gate" got its name. For a number of years before the building of the bridge, there had been a "Hells Gate" ferry operated there. In the early days, the section of the Guadalupe River northwest of Cuero was considered dangerous because of treacherous deep holes and jutting rocks. At one place, two rocks extended out from the bank into the river with a passage way or entrance between them. This was given the name, "Hells Gate." In 1898, Buchel Dam was constructed across the river about two miles downstream from there. This caused these rocks to be under water and hidden from view, but the name continues. The iron bridge that spanned the river near where these rocks were was called "Hells Gate Bridge." it was about three miles northwest of Cuero and was completed and accepted September 4, 1889. After using the iron bridge for many years, a new bridge was constructed in May, 1958 on FM 766. The Captain George T. Lord homeplace was west of the river. Approaching the bridge from the east, the road had beautiful moss-covered trees and flowering shrubs and was called "Lovers' Lane." So some Cueroites still speak of going "Down the Dam Road, through Lovers' Lane, across the Hells Gate Bridge, over the Devil's Backbone, and into the Lord's Pasture."

You will notice that four iron bridges were built in DeWitt County in the 1880's and it is rather interesting that two new bridges were constructed in DeWitt County in the 1980's. Will they, too, last almost 100 years?

In the Diary of Miles Bennet, the following advertisement appeared:

Valentinock Ferry, 1850

A new ferry boat at Bennets' old landing four miles below Concrete. Teamsters are reminded that by leaving the Victoria road on the east side of the river at Mr. Stevens' and crossing here, the distance to Gonzales is much shorter and the mud of Peach Creek avoided.

Dec. 22, 1850 Miles Squire Bennet

There were probably many more ferries across the river than we found information about, and certainly there were many places the river could be forded. We include a list of fees set by the Commissioners of the County to be charged by the ferry owners. There was little difference found in prices charged in the late 1840's and those charged in the late 1860's.

DEWITT COUNTY COMMUNITIES, SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES

T27

In 1825, a decree from the Mexican governor or Coahuila and Texas stated that "in each new town a block should be set aside for a school." The settlers brought to this area by empresario Green DeWitt were eager to comply. In the area that became DeWitt County, the people of nearly every settlement built a church as soon as possible, and in most cases it was also used for school purposes. Even though in some cases, a town never grew from the settlement, there was often a school.

James Norman Smith established the first school in what became DeWitt County. On the banks of the Cuero Creek near later site of Concrete, Smith opened his school of thirty pupils in 1840.

In 1854 DeWitt County began plans for public schools. Thirteen districts were laid off and elections were held to select three trustees for each district.

Beginning about 1890, the county judge was also county superintendent of schools, ex-officio. Judge J.D. Terry held this dual office in 1891. In 1892 Professor Tom Colston became Cuero's first superintendent of public schools. In 1896 Charles A. Sumners became County Judge and school superintendent and continued in office twelve years, until his death, April 1, 1908. He took great personal interest in the schools and did much for their improvement. In an article written for the Illustrated Edition of the Cuero Star, March, 1906, Judge Sumners said: "DeWitt County schools are under what is known as the community system. There are 45 white schools and 19 colored schools in the county, besides the independent districts of Cuero, Yoakum, and Yorktown."

Community and school names that have been found in DeWitt County are listed below. When possible there will be a sketch of each later in this chapter.

Other county school Superintendents were, Le Grand Covey, H.B. Montgomery, W.F. Hancock and Ken Leisman.

ARNECKEVILLE

This community is located eight miles south of Cuero on farm road 236 in DeWitt County. Mr. Adam Christopher Henry Arnecke came to the area about the year 1853. He was of German descent. Other families who came were:

Sager, Olfer, Gerhold, Post, Wilms, Friedrichs, Turk, and Rath.

The community was first called Zionsville, then Five Mile Coletto, and later was called Arneckeville in honor of A.C.H. Arnecke.

After the Civil War, Mr. A.C.H. Arnecke started the first general merchandise business. He built a log cabin for himself and his wife and then later added another room of lumber, into which he moved his general merchandise store.

In 1865, Mr. Arnecke added a large two story house to his store. It was thought that since a stage coach came from Clinton through Arneckeville, the space was probably rented to the passengers wishing to stay overnight.

Others who operated stores in Arneckeville were: William Hasdorff in 1898, Louis Schorlemmer in 1908, Richard Hans in 1915, Emil Afflerbach in 1919, Isaac Egg and Sons in 1922, W.T. McLarty in 1944 and Walter Wolf in 1946. Walter Wolf was the last person to have a store in Arneckeville.

In 1869 a school was started in the church, a one room log house. In 1889 A.C.H. Arnecke donated two acres of land for a school. A large one room frame school was built. In 1894, Mr. Arnecke donated a few more acres to the school and in 1913, Mr. George Gerhold donated land to the school.

Blacksmiths in Arneckeville were, Henry Post, 1878; John Recker, Sr., Louis Schley, John Recker, Jr., Oscar Rodien, Otto Koenig, August Boldt, Fred Jutz and Walter Gerhold.

Arneckeville street scene

The first cotton gin was built in 1870. Another modern gin was built in 1900.

Doctors in the community were Dr. Watkins, Dr. Fuchamner, Dr. Moore, Dr. Johnston and Dr. C.A.H. Arnecke. Dr. Arnecke was the last doctor to serve Arneckeville.

Dr. Arnecke built a two story house for his family and also built a two story building with a Drug Store and Post Office and a store where some chinaware was sold. Upstairs was a hospital and a large hall for lodge meetings and a telephone exchange. The telephone exchange was moved to Dr. Arnecke's home and operated by his daughter and later was moved to the Egg General Merchandise Store. After the close of the Egg Store, the telephone was moved to the Thieme home and operated by Miss Julia Thieme.

Other people who migrated to Arneckeville were: Brandes, Wurst, Thieme, Eismann, Koehler, Hiller, Schorlemmer and Krohmer.

In 1947, a couch in Dr. Arnecke's office ignited and burned the building to the ground. This was the end of the Drug Store, Post Office, Hospital and Lodge Hall. Shortly after this tragedy, Dr. C.A.H Arnecke died.

Arneckeville never recovered from the fire. There was still a grocery store, dance hall, filling station and car repair shop, but they closed through the years due to the ease of shopping in larger towns nearby. Today the Church and the school building are still used by the community. There is also a cemetery at

ARNECKEVILLE SCHOOL

T29

The Arneckeville school is located about eight miles south of Cuero, Texas just a short distance off of FM 236.

The Lutheran Church was the first group to form a school for the children of Arneckeville. This was started in 1869 according to church records. In 1872 this school became a state supported school. The school continued until 1888.

1889 saw the first land deeded by Mr. Arnecke to the German-English School Association. No names were mentioned in the deed but it was to be used for a school forever. A school building was built in 1889 on this land. Repair and upkeep was performed by the German-English Association. Later the association became known as the Arneckeville School Patrons.

In 1894 a second deed for land was given by Mr. Arnecke and in 1913 Mr. Gerhold deeded some land to the school. Directors at this time were: Ed Zengerle, Willie Schley, R.L. Hans and H.C. Sager. This was twenty four years after the first land was acquired.

By 1918 the County Superintendent's records show the first school tax of ten cents was voted in. Even then, the record shows the only state aid received was for teachers salary and fire wood.

In 1923 the Arneckeville Community Club was organized to serve as a parent-teacher organization, working for the benefit of the school. Mrs. A.E. Brown and Mrs. Wm. Schorlemmer, Sr. helped with the organization of the club. The women of this club worked very hard to improve and modernize the school. They raised money by having sausage suppers with a dance at the Red, White and Blue Pavillian in Arneckeville. The Arneckeville Community Club was responsible for the addition of the stage and basement. The club also raised money by presenting home talent plays and having band concerts and ice cream socials.

The building is still being used at this time for celebrations, meetings and reunions.

The Golly and Green DeWitt Schools consolidated with Arneckeville School and in 1963, Arneckeville consolidated with Meyersville School. In 1963 Frieda (Krueger) Sager wrote the history of Arneckeville School.

ZION LUTHERAN CHURCH, ARNECKEVILLE

The first settlers of this community, later to be known as Arneckeville came here from across the ocean during the years 1855-1860, and were the nucleus from which developed our present Zion Lutheran congregation. They were a hardy lot. Coming from Germany they landed in a raw wilderness then known as Five Mile Coletto, some eight miles south of Cuero. By hard physical labor they wrested a subsistence from the soil. Their crude houses they built by splitting logs. What a change and what a challenge for these Germans who in their native homeland had lived in well-established and well-ordered villages, with their community within walking distance. Here the closest church was Meyersville, six or more miles away, where they walked, as buggies were an unknown luxury. Unlike so many others from Germany, this group had not left their Bibles, their faith, and their church in the homeland but brought them along as a source of hope and strength during those trying, troublesome pioneer years. Distance and fear of marauding bands of Indians and white outlaws separated them from Meyersville and drew them together in this community which was to be their permanent home.

Why was the Church built on this location? Perhaps there were several reasons. First this was a well traveled trail or road in this point in time. The trail went mainly from one house to the next, and from Meyersville to Clinton, Texas, the DeWit County Seat. Also they would have to look for places to cross creeks and rivers. Going to Meyersville on the Hauser place was a natural crossing at the five mile Colleto. That made the road come by this location. People going to church in Meyersville went in wagons or walked so they used this crossing for wagons, ox carts and walking. When the population grew in this area, they began to talk about having a Church of their own. They also needed a school for the children since it was too far to walk to Meyersville everyday. Since the trail came by here and they saw all the beautiful trees, perhaps they talked about putting a church here. Then Michael Sager offered to give 10 acres of land to build a church, so building began here. School was conducted at the church until 1889 when a public school was built for all children of the community.

If these beautiful trees could talk, they could fill us in on many unanswered questions.

Thus a number of families with their axes and saws built a simple log church from the trees growing nearby, hauled in by ox teams, drawing a sledge. Records reveal the following ten family heads as charter members of Zion congregation: Michael Sager, John B. Olfers, Henry Arnecke, William Arnecke, Henry Koehler, Michael Hiller, John C. Thieme, George Gerhold, John Eismann, and Adam Krohmer. These, and possibly assisted by others, with Pastor Christoph Adam Sager who was skilled in carpentry and a possessor of a few special woodcraft tools, built the church. The building was modest indeed - 21 feet long, 16 feet wide and 8 feet high. It served as a house of worship school house, and possibly for a time as a parsonage. The congregation was organized and the building dedicated to the glory of God on November 1, 1868. So, by God's grace, the church was planted in the wilderness but the wilderness was in later years to bloom as a Truly the heart of every God-fearing Israelite was lifted high in admiration and praise as he viewed the Temple of his God and King, established firmly on the highest point of Mount Zion in the holy city Jerusalem.

Some of these selfsame emotion of elation, joy and pride have always surged through the worshipers at Zion Lutheran Church of Arneckeville as they gathered in the house of God. Like the centuries-old gnarled, sturdy oaks whose roots are sunk deep in the peaceful countryside, so stands Zion's church today—extending a warm welcome to all to participate in fellowship with God. She stands solid, the spire pointing heavenward, as a monument to the sturdy, defiant, undaunted faith which has characterized the membership during its first century of existence. Truly, in Zion God is the land that drains into it has been in the possession of Friars since Sidney Friar bought it in 1891. It is in the area about three miles south of Cuero and has a dry bed except in rainy times when much water is carried along its westerly course to empty into the Guadalupe River.

Bonner Hollow was named for Nelson and Julia Burns Bonner who in 1880 settled on the land that drains into this hollow. It unites with the Guadalupe River several miles above the mouth of Irish Creek.

Irish Creek rises in the central part of eastern DeWitt County not far from the town of Edgar; it flows in a general southwesterly course to empty into the Guadalupe River near the location of Old Burns Station, or about midway between Cuero and Thomaston. In 1826 about two miles from the mouth of this creek and near its southern bank the Arthur Burns family settled on his headright league in the first home ever built in the entire area that later became DeWitt County. In its upper course the creek runs through some rugged country and when heavy rains come it can really become a raging torrent. Arthur Burns was of Irish descent and it is said when it was on the rampage, the early settlers joked him about his creek's "having its Irish up" and that in time this led to its being called Irish Creek. In dry seasons much of its course is without water, but because of the violence of its flash floods the bridges across are high and strong.

Reed Branch is about three miles below Irish Creek. It forms the northern boundary of land purchased by Dan Reed in 1865. Though most of the time it is a dry ravine, in rainy seasons it flows with a swift current to join the Guadalupe River.

Spring Branch runs across land of the Charles Lockhart headright land in the Thomaston vicinity and unites with the Guadalupe River. In the deed for 1094 acres that Charles Lockhart sold to Orlando Jones on November 10, 1845 Spring Branch is given as a boundary of the tract. It usually has a dry bed.

Price's Creek rises about five miles northeast of Thomaston, flows in a general southwesterly direction, and empties into the Guadalupe River two miles below the DeWitt-Victoria County boundary line it drains some rugged country, and in places has cut out a rather wide and deep bed and in times of heavy rains it becomes a really deep and swiftly flowing stream. In dry seasons much of its course is without water. In the lower part there are some deep, permanent, spring-fed pools in which there are perch and trout. Legend attributes the naming of the creek to have been for an early settler, but no definite knowledge has been obtained of a Price family's ever having lived along its course.

Big Brushy rises in the extreme northeastern section of DeWitt County and flows across that area and on into Lavaca County where it unites with the Lavaca River. In early years much of the land along its course was covered with thick brush and that accounts for its name by which it was called as early as 1850.

Little Brushy is a tributary of Big Brushy; it rises in the central eastern part of DeWitt County and flows in a southeasterly course. In early days Charles Hume had a saw mill on Little Brushy.

Thiele Creek is a prong of Big Brushy in its upper course and is so named because it crosses land owned by a Thiele family.

Tonqua Creek is in the Stratton area and is tributary to Little Brushy. Though it has a different spelling Tonqua Creek was named in long-ago days for the Tonkawa Indian tribe that roamed and hunted along its course.

Chicolete Creek is in southeastern DeWitt County. It has two branches in its upper course. It is said this creek was named for Chicolete Indians who were a division of the Cherokee tribes. This is an intermittent stream.

Bear Creek is in southeastern DeWitt County very near the Lavaca County boundary. From statements made in "Texas Camel Tales" by Chris Emmett there seems some evidence that in days of yore there were black bears in the area around Victoria. This is not far from Bear Creek, so there may also have been some bears along its course and this may account for the name.

Creeks of DeWitt County West of the Guadalupe River

Denton Creek rises in Gonzales County and flows across into DeWitt County where it empties into the Guadalupe River. There were several early-day families bearing the Denton name who lived in the locality through which this creek flows, and it was named for them.

Fisher Creek starts in northern DeWitt County near the Gonzales County boundary and flows in a general southeasterly course into the Guadalupe River. Research has yielded no reason for its name.

Fulcher Creek rises in northern DeWitt County almost on the Gonzales County line, flows southeast across the Churchill Fulcher league that was granted him as a headright in 1831, and empties into the Guadalupe River about five miles downstream from the mouth of Fisher Creek. Early settlers named this creek for Churchill Fulcher.

Boggie Creek is in the northern part of DeWitt County and its source is near the DeWitt-Gonzales County boundary. It runs in a southwesterly course to join the Sandies some three miles above where Clear Creek flows into it on the opposite side. Boggie Creek derives its name from the fact that it has quicksand in its bed and from earliest times on down to the present many cattle have "bogged down" in it. It is risky for a horseman to attempt to ride across its bed even when it is entirely dry.

Bird Creek is a tributary of the Sandies and runs along the outskirts of Westhoff which is very near DeWitt County's northwestern boundary. This creek is located on the James Bird survey — hence the name.

Thomas Creek is near Westhoff and is crossed by U.S. Highway 87. It is named for the Thomas family who live in the vicinity.

Sandies has quite a long course and may be counted as a permanently flowing stream. Its source and much of its course is through sandy land, and this accounts for the name, Sandies. It rises in the central western part of Gonzales County and runs on across the northwestern boundary of DeWitt County where after a meandering course in which at times it flows south, east, west, and finally southeast it joins the Guadalupe River in the central part of the county across from the Cuero area. It has such a large watershed that in times of heavy rains it really goes on the rampage and pours such a large volume of raging water into the river that it has no small part in bringing it up to flood stage.

Chisholm Creek is near Clinton and flows into the Guadalupe River. The Richard Chisholm family of four took up their abode in January 1829, on his headright league across which this stream runs and it soon came to be called Chisholm Creek in his honor. Except for pools from springs near its source, this is a dry creek bed most of the time.

Cattail Creek joins the Guadalupe River several miles below Clinton. It got its name quite early from the cattail bushes that then grew and blossomed along its banks. It seldom has water in it in the present time.

Carlisle Creek (also spelled Carlyle in some deed records) is mentioned in a DeWitt County deed record dated September 30, 1859. It is reputed to have been named for Henry Carlisle (not sure which spelling) who in early years lived in his home about 200 yards from the stream. It is located in southern DeWitt County and has two branches. One flows in a southeasterly course and crosses the southern end of the Green DeWitt survey; the other nend or the Green DeWitt survey; the other Quinn league; they join a short distance from where the creek unites with the Guadalupe

Clear Creek rises in the area near Nopal in northwestern DeWitt County where it has

BEAR CREEK SCHOOL

In 1884 Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Byars and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Samuel Cook donated two acres of land for a school. This school became the first Bear Creek School and combined the Hebron and Terryville schools. The two acres were near the bank of Bear Creek. The same hurricane that destroyed Indianola, also blew down the Bear Creek School on August 20, 1886. The men of the community built a new building and it was used until 1911 when the trustees decided to sell the old school and build a new one at the crossing of the Cuero and Hebron roads. This school was used until the 1930's.

Some of the families in the area were the Coopers, Carrolls, Goodes, Hollans, Plackes, Vicks, Garretts, Meyers, Utz, Byars, Michnas, Shows and Granberrys. Also, Moffats, Werlands, Browns, Stevens, Squyres, Osburns,

BIG BRUSHY

In October of 1909, Robert and Eva Tippins sold for $25 one acre of land for the Big Brushy Union School. This was from the southeast corner of land which was bought from J.P. Morris on the Abraham Dillard survey.

BLUE MOTT SCHOOL

On July 9, 1896, Wm. M. Garrett and wife M.A. Garrett donated 1 acre of their land to Edward Koenig, County Judge of DeWitt County. The land was to be used for a public school.

The area residents took up a collection to buy lumber to build the school. The school started in 1898 with Frances Margaret Kyle as the teacher. She roomed and boarded with Mr. and Mrs. W.M. Garrett. Eventually, she married the Garrett's son.

The school building was used for school, church and community meetings. Church was whenever a preacher of any denomination came through the area.

In 1898, C.H. Stell sold one acre of land to the Blue Mott School community. The location was in the extreme southeastern part of DeWitt County and was bordered very near Victoria County.

BUCHEL COMMUNITY AND SCHOOL

T34

A few miles north of Cuero, Texas, in DeWitt County, there is a very unique community, chock full of history. This is the community where Daniel Boone Friar bought acreage in 1839 in the Samuel Lockhart Survey in the Cuero Creek area. He built his home at the juncture of the LaGrange-LaBahia and Victoria-Gonzales Roads. The Friars used the home as a combination home, store, and post office. In 1842, during the Republic of Texas, a post office called Cuero was established and a record of this is in the files of the DeWitt County Historical Museum. Also, in the files are papers that state that when Texas became a state the Cuero post office became a United States post office on May 22, 1846. Friar sold his house with fifty acres, September 28, 1849 to Crockett Cardwell. Cardwell used the building as a store, post office, Stage stand, and tavern. In 1866, Cardwell, after the Civil War, gathered 1800 steers (longhorns) to take up the Chisholm Trail. When the terminus of the railroad came into being, the post office, Cuero, was moved a few miles south to the railroad and the town became known as Cuero, instead of Morgantown or Germantown as before. The Cuero Creek house lasted until 1916 when it was torn down and rebuilt as a barn and other out buildings on the nearby Lewis Burns ranch.

In 1894, Otto Buchel gave an acre of land for the present site of Buchel School. The patrons donated materials and erected a building. Miss Emma Tully later named the school Oak View because of the many beautiful oak trees nearby. Mrs. Carrie Kilgore of Yorktown taught the first class in the new building. Other early teachers were Miss Tully and Miss Ura Woods of Gonzales.

In 1921, the need arose for a modern building. The school was erected and named Buchel for the man who gave the land. At this time the trustees of the school were B.F. Thigpen, Richard Lucas, and Mr. Preston. In early years the school had an enrollment of 60 pupils. By 1930 it dropped to 30 pupils, and during World War II it reached a low of 10 pupils. By the spring of 1950, there were 26 pupils enrolled in Buchel School.

Some of the teachers of Buchel School were: Columbus Burns, Lou Schleicher, Effie J. Brantley, Mary (Milligan) Fanette, Isabella (Kruse) Schaffner, and Marily Jean (Brantley) Tidwell and Eddie Blackwell.

Area families were: Frels, Blanks, McDonalds, Hoehnes, Lucas, Wisian, Orsaks, Nacks, and others.

After the Gilmer-Aikin Bill that became law in 1949 went into effect, Buchel School ceased to exist when both white and black children were bussed to Cuero.

The school building became a community building. The Buchel Home Demonstration Club paid the insurance and utilities for twenty five years. After 1975, the Buchel 4-H Club assumed this responsibility and the club leases the building from Cuero Independent School District.

BUESING SCHOOL

Т3:

Buesing School

The Buesing School was located seven miles west of Yorktown and was named for Henry Buesing on whose land the school was built in 1914. Early settlers of the area were John Schmidt, Charles Gruetzmacher, A.R. Dworaxzyk, Anton Meinen and Henry Morisse. Their children were students of this rural school. The original building had only one room. The first teacher was Mrs. Bernice Shropshire.

BURNS STATION

Burns Station Cemetery

In 1826 Empresario Green DeWitt colonist, Arthur Burns, built a two-story home near the east bank of the Guadalupe River, south of Irish Creek. This was the first home built within the present bounds of DeWitt County. The house was later used as a refuge during Indian Raids.

Arthur Burns operated the county's earliest water-powered grist mill and after his death, Moses Rankin operated this mill from 1856 until 1869 when it was destroyed by flood. Then for a number of years maintained a grist mill run by a Dutch windmill. Near it clustered the Sherman and Thomas General Store, Charlie White's Blacksmith Shop, and the Warn Hardware Store. The first church was erected in 1853.

The settlement became known as Burns Station as it was a stage stop on the Victoria-Gonzales road where the stage would stop for the purpose of changing horses.

In the 1870's, Burns Station lost business to Thomaston and Cuero, but was a stop on the Gulf West Texas and Pacific Railroad. About 1902, The Burns Station depot was given the name "Verhelle", honoring a railroad official who had never lived in the area.

The post office was established in 1851. Postmasters between 1 July, 1873 and 18 June, 1877 were Joseph Shults, Samuel Myers, Calvin B. Phillips, and Daniel Reed. Original inhabitants of the Irish Creek settlement were Josiah and Hephzibeth Taylor, Patrick Dowlearn, John Morrison, Rev. Thomas and Ardelia Burns Cook, Columbus and Mary Ann DeMoss Burns, James Irvin and Eliza Cottingham, William H. Kirkland, T.B. Womack, Moses Rankin, John Keith and Elizabeth (Butler) Rankin, Samuel and Mary "Polly" (Rankin) Myers, William J. and Susan (Friar) Weisiger, Evan S. and Gabriella (Cook) Weisiger, William Thomas, C.M. Shermans, B.F. Lowe's, William "Bill" and Laura (McDonald) Sutton, and Aaron and Laura (Myers) Neel.

The cemetery is all that remains of the once thriving and oldest settlement in DeWitt County. It is on Irish Creek alongside the Victoria highway and a marker is placed on the highway to mark the historical site.

The site was deeded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, trustees listed as Lewis Smith, M.D., John D. Cobler, William M. Jones, Nathan Thomas, William R. Wallace, M.D., and James Smith by Thomas F. Cook and his wife, Ardelia Burns Cook, for and in consideration of the sum of five dollars on the 23rd day of June, 1853. This deed is on record in the DeWitt County Courthouse. The cemetery adjoined the Irish Creek Methodist Church.

The first known grave is that of Joseph Allen, born in Ireland, and died in October, 1853. At present, there are over 90 known graves. Many unmarked graves were lost during the period of neglect.

Up until 1930, relatives would meet occasionally to clean their family plots and as many more as they could. For a number of years Eddie Neel, who lived nearby, kept individual plots. After 1930, nothing was done. Nearly forty years of neglect followed except for fencing of family plots. The Key lots were fenced in 1940.

About 1968, Jesse Mills contacted members of the DeWitt County Historical Survey Committee asking for help in restoring the cemetery. This committee visited the cemetery, saw the neglect and the word spread that something needed to be done soon. The project committee, W.W. Key, Mrs. W.W. Key, and Mrs. Lee Benbow, took charge. The cemetery was cleaned and fenced with funds donated by descendants buried there.

Fielding B. Key left an endowment for the care of the cemetery upon his death in 1974 and donations have been made by descendants since 1983. This money had been combined and the Burns Station Cemetery Perpetual Maintenance Fund established at the Cuero Federal Savings and Loan Association with interest only to be used for maintenance.

An Ironical Eulogy on Burns's Station

I dare say you all have long ere this heard of the beautiful, flourishing town of Burns Station, situated in a very romantic district of country on the Southern Pacific R.R.

Through the centre of this village flows a lively little brook known as Irish Creek, which is always rippling merrily along on its way to the beautiful Guadalupe.

North of the village are some high rugged hills which possibly are remote outlying spurs of the Rocky Mountains — this fact alone may make some of my young friends desirous of visiting this lovely picturesque place.

You would doubtless be greatly surprised to see the yards which are laid off in lovely style, and of course are neatly kept. They contain such rare and lovely flowers and beautiful evergreens that it is a feast for the eye to behold them.

The buildings are mostly cottages of pretty designs, and are well furnished.

The cemetery here is one of the objects of interest, the soft green grass natures emerald carpet is not regularly removed as in our city cemeteries, and the luxuriant weeds grow to such a height that one can hardly see the mounds and fallen tomb-stones.

The school building reflects credit upon the enterprising citizens of the place, and the school is their especial pride. There are twenty-six pupils I think. The people believe in educating their children, for they send them to school—during the entire free school term and let them take a course in music and art at the same time.

People wishing to find a place where they can have good religious and social privileges might do well to visit Burns Station before locating elsewhere.

The Spaniards gave the name "Cabeza" to a creek which is located in the southern part of the Francisco Real Survey near the center of DeWitt County's western boundary. It was on the headwaters of this creek that the town of Cabeza was founded.

Cabeza is the highest section of the county being at an elevation of 850 feet. It was the only town between Yorktown and Helena in Karnes County, in 1876. Three sheep men settled in this area and began the town. They were: P.O. Short, John Riley, and Joshua Butler. The only other name was for the Strickland ranch which was abandoned by 1876. The Butlers, Shorts and Rileys were farmers and sheep and cattle men.

The first office was established in Cabeza by Dr. Rushing. He came to Cabeza from Tennessee and was a young unmarried man. The first store was owned by J.O. Short. He was the son of P.O. Short. The store was run by Dick Wilbarn. Other merchants were: H. Langley, Charles Moore, William Rutherford, Mrs. Murphy, and Mrs. Johnny Mixon. The Cabeza

Post Office was established April 6, 1889 and discontinued May 15, 1907. At this time Cabeza had three stores and John C. Butler's Blacksmith Shop. There was a cotton gin built and run for a number of years before being bought by Ulrich and Kasten, who moved it to Nordheim.

By 1948 Cabeza was a ranching area with 150 inhabitants, maintaining two schools, one for Whites and the other for Mexicans. Both schools were discontinued in the 1950's.

There was one church in Cabeza, the Methodist Church, which had Sunday School and preaching services every fifth Sunday. Many camp meetings and revivals were held by the Methodists and the Baptists.

Other names in the Cabeza area were Haynes, Brown and Koehler. The last remaining direct descendants of the first three settlers are the Butler family.

The first school in the Cabeza area was built of barn wood that was the ruins of Mr. Short's barn that had been blown down in a storm. This community school, called the Short School, remained on the Short Ranch for six years. There were sixteen pupils in school: three Rileys, two McNamaras, two Shorts, one Granberry, two Butlers, and three Thomases. The first teacher was Robert E.L. Magee. Later the public school in Cabeza was started in a one room house. Early teachers were, Miss Carrie Kilgore, Miss Homy Hargrave, and Mrs. John Manlove.

By 1914, the school was a three teacher school, and a home for the teachers was built in 1915. Miss Katie Mountz was the music teacher, and her sister Mary a school teacher. Mrs. Paralee Menn taught classes in the upper story of a later school and Mrs. McMurry taught in the lower story.

The school closed in the 1950's. Prof. Ed. Horton and Miss Nona Young, both of Runge, were among the schools last teachers. The school enrolled as many as 135 students at its peak.

CALHOUN SETTLEMENT

T38

In the early 1870's, Sam D. Calhoun and John R. Calhoun built their homes near the Heard Ferry crossing on the West Side of the Guadalupe River. They had come to Texas from Tennessee as children and had lived in Clinton with their mother, Elizabeth Hungerford (Smith) Calhoun. She was the daughter of James N. Smith. After the Civil War, the Calhoun brothers settled on land that their mother had left to them, on Cattail Creek. This area soon became the Calhoun Settlement because of the Church and School built for the Calhoun families. There was a Presbyterian church that was later moved to Clinton and a school that was later moved to Green DeWitt. A small family cemetery was also at this location. At some time, a saloon was established in this settlement.

There are no remains of any of this settlement in 1990. The buildings and the cemetery are gone. Information was found through Garrett Abstract Co., interviews with area residents, and Calhoun family records.

CAMERON

T40

The site of Cameron is located about one mile west of Cuero. This site was chosen in June 1846 as the first seat of DeWitt County and named for Capt. Ewen Cameron (1811-43), slain prisoner of the Mier Expedition. Although a town was platted on the 100-acre tract, donated by Joseph Tumlinson, a log courthouse and a county clerk's office were the only buildings erected. In 1850, after four elections and four court decisions, Cameron lost the title of County seat to the nearby town of Clinton. County offices moved to Cuero in 1876.

Beginning of Cameron Lodge #76 A.F.&A.M.

Cameron Lodge originated Nov. 2, 1850 by a committee of petitioners, all members of Gonzales Lodge #30, and recommended by Deputy Grand Master Andrew Neill, Esquire.

It being so far to ride horseback to Gonzales to attend lodge, and the participants living in the Cuero and Clinton area, the meeting was held at Cameron Stage Stop and Store, where court was also held.

The petitioners were: James E. Smith, William Means, L.J. Brisette, Lazarus Nichols, Joseph Tumlinson, Henry Wrigley, B.M. Odom, K.B. White, D.S. Page, Joseph Stevens, Daniel B. Friar, John Tumlinson, Arthur Burns and Thompson Brown.

After the proceedings the Deputy Grand Master installed the officers-elect as follows: James N. Smith, Worshipful Master; Daniel B. Friar, Senior Warden; L.J. Brisette, Junior Warden; William Means, Treasurer; Henry Wrigley, Secretary; Thompson Brown, Sr. Deacon; Lazarus Nichols, Jr. Deacon; B.M. Odom,

At this time it was resolved to adopt the bylaws of Victoria Lodge #40 as their government, the Lodge to meet on the third Saturday of each month at 2:00 P.M.

A meeting was held on Nov. 9, 1850 for instructions, at which time members were appointed as a committee to procure furniture and other accessories necessary for use of the lodge. At this time the lodge was operating under dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Texas, until they were established and before receiving their charter.

The Lodge was formed and operated at Cuero for a short period while a building committee was working to build a lodge hall at Clinton. A report from them was read and motion made and carried for the building committee to make all purchases necessary to complete the lodge which was now held in Clinton.

Cameron Lodge moved and dedicated their new hall in Clinton on Jan. 22, 1853, and at this time two degrees were conferred. They had applied and paid for their charter Dec. 24, 1850, and this was granted March 22, 1851.

Cameron Lodge continued operation in the town of Clinton until 1877 at which time, it is not clear as to the reason, it closed and moved to Yorktown. The first Yorktown meeting was held July 6, 1877 with S.F. Grimes, Worshipful Master protem. At this meeting the following brethren, formerly of Coletto Lodge #124, L.T. Grun, L. Schumacher, A. Kraege, L. Lenz, F.H. Hoppe, Robert C. Eckhardt and John Grun, petitioned to affiliate with Cameron Lodge #76 A.F.&A.M., which is still an active lodge in 1990.

Coletto Lodge #124 had formed in Yorktown a few months after Cameron Lodge was formed at Cameron, just north of Cuero, but had demised.

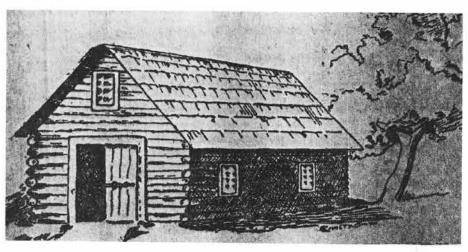

An interesting entry in the minutes of Cameron Lodge, of November, 1854 concerned the building of the Washington monument, at which time the lodge voted to donate $8.00 to this project. This was a considerable sum, and in gold, which was hard to come by.

way between Concrete and Yoakum in northeastern DeWitt County. Some early families to settle in the community were those of W.E. Edgar (1855), Price Allen August Schultz (1890), and Dr. R.W. McGehee. The school was started in 1902 and was given the name "Center" because of the school house's central location in the community. On July 25, 1905, John and Johanna Benga transferred a small tract of Joseph H. Wood survey land, 92 yards long and 50 yards wide to the trustees of Center School Community for school purposes and it was to revert back to the grantor when the school was discontinued. Any orthodox religious organization could worship in the schoolhouse. The first teacher was Frank Hagon. In 1945, the school was discontinued; the children went to school in Yoakum.

CHEAPSIDE

Early Cheapside School.

Pioneer settlers of English descent settled an area about eighteen miles northwest of Cuero and named it Cheapside after a well known street in London, England. The first settlers were recorded in the area as early as 1857. By 1874 a Cumberland Presbyterian church was established in the area and also a cemetery called Bellevue.

The town of Cheapside has had saloons, a broom factory, a drug store, a livery and blacksmith shop, a hotel, grocery and mercantile stores, a cotton gin and a grist mill. The town plat was laid out by Mr. Thomas Carter. Store and business owners were: W.D. Wofford, Dr. George C. Milner, E.F. Elder, C.S. Riggs, H.N. Smith, A.T. Young, E.L. Bellinger, M.L. The Post Office closed on December 30, 1988 with Mrs. Lucella Watson as Postmistress. Mrs. Watson had served for thirty years. The last Cheapside Post Office was in Gonzales County.

In 1876, L.G. Harmon gave five acres for a school in DeWitt County near Cheapside. In 1882 a school for the black children was built near Cheapside and called Middlefork. By 1884, Cheapside school was listed in Gonzales County. In 1909, L.A. Carter donated land for a school in DeWitt County to be part of the DeWitt County School System. On this land was built a two room school which opened later in the year of 1909. By 1914, an upper story had been added to the school. In 1949 the school consolidated with the Cuero Independent School District and the Cheapside school was closed.

In 1983 the Lavaca River Baptist Association showed the organization of the Cheapside Baptist Church. As the population declined, the citizens organized the Cheapside Community Church and it continued on for many years.

Bellevue cemetery is still in use in 1990 but the town of Cheapside only has a small community center still active.

CHICOLETE SCHOOL

Chicolete School Building

Chicolete School was also known for a short time as the Hefner School because the man who donated the land for the school was named Hefner. There were eight grades taught there until later years when they started teaching ten grades. In 1912 Mr. Kahlich bought the land and his daughter Lillian attended school there for eight years.

There was no mail delivery and mail had to be picked up in Stratton. It was Lillian's job to ride horseback once a week to Stratton (5 miles) and back with the mail for her neighborhood.

Teachers boarded with the Kahlich family for four years, then the Kahlich family got too large and the Key family boarded the teachers.

CLEAR CREEK CHURCH AND SCHOOL

Clear Creek School

On October 12, 1885, Joe Card deeded two acres of Squire Pharris Survey land on the north bank of Clear Creek, just east of where the Southern Pacific Railroad crosses it, for church and school use. On May 9, 1889, John Wallis donated acres for the use of the Clear Creek Methodist Church. A building was erected and for a number of years was used for both church and school by the name of Clear Creek. The first session was taught by J.A. Webber in 1886; the trustees were John Wallis, Elias M. Wallace and Fred Noelte. In 1898 the school pupils began attending the near-by Guilford school but the church work at Clear Creek was continued many years.

The Clear Creek School that was there in 1948, was started in 1892 with John Myrt Delony as teacher. Its location is some fourteen miles to the northwest of the first Clear Creek school on land of the Francisco Gonzales league one mile from the Gonzales County line and three miles southwest of Nopal. There, some of the early settlers were the families of Joe, Willie, and Charles Jalufka, and the Frank Mettings.

In 1925 the Nopal school joined with the Clear Creek school and then for several years it was a three teacher school. In the 1950's the school was discontinued.

For 30 years Methodist Sunday School and Sabbath afternoon services were held in this school house.

T45

Clinton, located on the West bank of the Guadalupe River on the Richard Chisholm Survey, is in central DeWitt County. It was laid out as a townsite in the summer of 1846 and named for Clinton DeWitt, a son of Empresario Green DeWitt. Clinton was the county seat of DeWitt County from 1850-1876.

A two story Masonic Hall was built in 1852 and when it was dedicated on January 22, 1853, Cameron Lodge No. 76 was moved to

Early Courthouse at Clinton

Clinton from Cardwell's Store where it had been located since it was organized in 1850. It was later moved to Yorktown in 1877.

The Live Oak Presbyterian Church became Clinton's first church in 1850. The Methodists and Presbyterians both held services in Clinton's log courthouse until the Presbyterians built their church in 1856 and shared it with the Methodists.

Clinton boasted of both private and public schools during the time that it was in existence. Sam J. Webb had a General Dry Goods and Grocery Store which also housed the Post Office. This store was later moved to Weesatche in Goliad County. Judge Kilgore had a drugstore in Clinton which moved to Yorktown in 1877. John Wofford had a store in Clinton that he later sold to Charlie Sherman. Martin King had a Blacksmith and Livery business. Dole Davis had a Saloon in Clinton. W.O. Wheeler of Victoria had a branch store in Clinton. J.R. Nagel also had a Hardware and Tin Shop. Clinton's first hotel was a small log house. Later Oliver Stapp built a two story frame hotel. C.G. Hartmann was a noted DeWitt County Surveyor of the times.

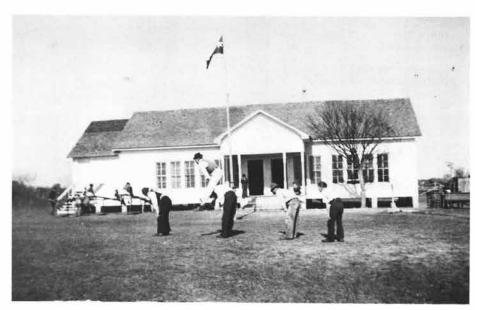

Doctors who were in the area were Drs. Aaron C. White, Andrew J. Hodge, Lewis Williams, and Joseph Weisiger. Lawyers of the time were Robert E. Williams, William Friend, Sam C. Lackey, Sr., John W. Stayton and Henry Clay Pleasants.

Civil War and Reconstruction brought lawlessness and ruin to the area. The final blow was the coming of the railroad to Cuero in 1872-73. Many businesses moved to the railroad town and then the county seat was moved to Cuero in 1876. Clinton slowly declined until the 1950's when the school was finally closed. Now all that remains of Clinton, is the cemetery.

The first school in Clinton was started by Rev. and Mrs. Conelley as a private school in about 1854. Mrs. Viola Case moved her school for girls to Clinton during the Civil War but closed it and returned to Victoria after the war. A Major Carruth also had an early day school in Clinton for a number of years.

The first public school in Clinton was started in 1881 and continued as a small rural school until the early 1900's even though Clinton declined and the county seat was moved across the Guadalupe River in 1876.

One source of information set the attendance of 94 pupils in the Clinton School in the year of 1889.

Clinton School

Mr. Alvin Schorlemmer stated that he attended the one-room Clinton School in 1912 with Mrs. Mamie Bruce as his teacher. Mrs. Bea (Brown) Steen (Mrs. Lias Steen) recalls her Clinton School days back in 1917 with Mr. Scott as her teacher.

In 1921 there was a consolidation of schools program in DeWitt County. Mr. H.B. Montgomery was county superintendent at the time. Part of the students who had attended the one-teacher Five Mile School were redistricted to Clinton while others attended the new Ratcliffe School.

The children in the Vincent Lempa family entered the Clinton Community School in 1921. The building had been enlarged to a two-teacher school. It was divided by a heavy canvas curtain. This proved impractical as it wasn't exactly sound proof. Furthermore, some wise-acre would walk past it and either punched it with his fist or elbowed it, making it bellow about and attract attention. There was a porch on the south side and a cloakroam (including a book storage closet) on the north side of the building. The water pump was in front of the building, slightly to the east. The flagpole was about 25 steps south of the porch.

In the beginning there wasn't much playground past the flagpole until some time in 1922 when some fences were moved and the Clinton school students found themselves with some nine to eleven acres to play on. The source of information on this could not recall if this acreage was bought or donated by a DuBose family.

Some of the teachers during the twenties were Mrs. Alfred Olle, Miss Jewel Manning, Louise Marquis, Maude Wilson, and Lula Rhodes.

At some point in time, a large stage had been added to the west end of the building with a storage for firewood beneath it. Also a two car and one buggy storage shed had been erected behind the schoolhouse. The outdoor restrooms were built on opposite sides of the car shed. The privy on the west side was for girls because it was nearer the main building. The outdoor toilet on the east side of the shed was for boys.

Other teachers were Frances Peyton, Alice Rath, Ernest Meier, Mary Etta Bunting, Edith Hans, Iva Lee Rabke, Mrs. Jones, Evie Joy (Brantley) Dieringer, Jessie Dodds, Odell (Johnson) Darr, Lottie (Johnson) Coker, Clyde Cameron, Laura Overby, and Mrs. Tom Cheatham.

There were two teachers employed at the Clinton School until about 1945. Later, there were so few students that only one teacher was hired. The eighth grade students were transferred to the Cuero Public School.

Concrete School Building

Ruins at Concrete College

The Upper Cuero Creek Settlement (1827) developed to be Concrete, DeWitt County's earliest townsite. James N. Smith surveyed the town blocks for the village in the early summer of 1846 prior to his surveying the bounds of Clinton. Concrete is located near the east bank of the Guadalupe River in the northeastern part of the county on the land of the John McCoy league.

The town was established on the Gonzales to Victoria stage route. The stage brought mail and passengers, twice daily, at four a.m. and nine p.m. The town had a large two-story hotel owned and run by Isham North. There were seven stores. Also, a blacksmith shop and a shop where shoes were made. The soles were nailed with wooden pegs, as nails were scarce. Concrete was a prohibition town. There must have been early saloons but Concrete remained a "dry precinct" in the county until about 1981. In later years there was a muledriven gin. There was a Dutch windmill where the people could have their corn ground into meal, when the wind blew. Concrete was the only post office for miles and when the stage arrived everyone could hear the bugle blow. Traildrivers moved their herds through the village on their way to northern markets.

There were two church buildings: one was the Cumberland Presbyterian (1846) and the other Baptist. The Masons built a large two-story building. They used the upstairs for lodge purposes and the downstairs for church meetings. The Methodists held their church there. This building was moved in the 1890's to Hochheim. The Baptist church was built in the 1850's. The benches were built by hand as were the doors and windows. This wood frame building burned in the 1970's.

Concrete had an early college started by J.V. Covey and Woodlief Thomas. Concrete college was a state-chartered coed institution with dormitories for boarding students, from 1867-1881. In 1873 there were 12 instructors and 250 students in the famous school.

Some of the early residents and their families in the Concrete Community were: Dr. Robert Peebles, Joseph Stevens, Captain Lynch, Dr. Wimbish, Dr. W.W. White, Dr. O.D. Coppedge, J.B. Worth, James M. Baker, T.R. Taylor, Isham North, W.E. Orman, John Clayton, Joseph Edgar, Ben Milligan, Spear Hudson, Lish Stevens, Henry Stevens, and Dr. King.

There was a ford on the Guadalupe River across from the Miles Bennet Plantation that enabled people from across the river to attend church and school in Concrete.

Concrete was a thriving town in the 1870's until the coming of the railroad, about ten miles away, brought about a great change in the county. People moved their business to a better location for trade. The busy Concrete college apparently became less and less successful and finally closed.

Through the years farming along the river continued to be the most important way of making a living.

In later years, Concrete had three public schools. Mr. Will McCormick and his sons operated a large general store for many years. It sold everything required: groceries, shoes, clothing, meat, farm tools, and machinery. The store was also the community gathering place for daily news. Claude Lombertson operated the Concrete Cotton Gin. Rudolph Mueller had a blacksmith shop. After the McCormick store burned, Jim and George McElroy each had grocery stores. The following are some of the families who made their homes in the Concrete area in later years: Frels, Barth, Pruitt, McCormick, Williams, Leister, Leisner, Laufer, Parks, Young, Daniel, Boothe, Rathkamp, Blackwell, Stubbs, McElroy, Coppedge, Smith, Weber, Lombertson, Jackson, Enoch, Baylor, Mueller, Lucas, Green, Brown, Parker, Staire, Lockett, Imminhauser, Nelms, North, Fleming, McCurdy, Stevens, McMahan and Poth.

There is very little farming done today except for feed crops. Most of the land that once was farmed is now grazing land for cattle.

There are several well tended pecan farms that are very successful in the community.

The county's oldest town has almost disappeared. Remnants of old cisterns and building foundations can sometimes be found while the old cemeteries reveal the names of many early county inhabitants and are a reminder of the settlement of the 1820's when the untouched virgin land brought settlers to the Guadalupe Valley.

Concrete Schools

James Norman Smith began and taught the first school in the county in an area called Upper Cuero Creek Settlement in 1840. Mr. Smith taught about thirty students of all ages in a log one room school. The tuition paid by students was two dollars per month.

Mr. Smith resigned his position after the county was organized and for some years itinerate teachers taught short school terms. About 1855 Concrete citizens built a two room frame building of lumber hauled from Indianola. The school was called Concrete Academy. Rev. and Mrs. J.V.E. Covey taught there briefly in 1865 until it was mysteriously destroyed by fire. Concrete college later had a Primary, Intermediate and College department so the children of the area could attend school there.

The first public school was erected about 1895 and continued until it became part of the Cuero Independent School District.

Concrete College

The date of the establishment of Concrete College is difficult to determine. P.N. Gammel, Laws of Texas, states that "on September 1, 1856 the Legislature of the State of Texas chartered Concrete College, a school of learning consisting of male and female departments to be located in the town of Concrete, with J.M. Baker, F.M. Taylor, Josh Stevens, J.R. North, and F.J. Linch trustees; curriculum to be 'purely literary and scientific'; students of all religious denominations to enjoy equal advantages." This charter evidently did not grant the college the right and privilege to confer Bachelor's and Master's degrees because the state granted another charter in 1873, section three of which read, "Concrete College through its president and faculty be, and is hereby empowered to confer the degrees of Bachelor and Master of Arts, grant diplomas, certificates of proficiency, and rewards of merit.'

Indications lead one to conclude that some prominent pioneer residents of the community took an advanced view concerning the education of their children. Many of the settlers were college trained individuals, and recognized the advantages offered men and women by education. Thus the time that elapsed between the original charter and the time Dr. J.V.E. Covey came to the community in about 1864 would mean that time was needed to finance the school and find a man to establish a college. It does seem odd that it would be possible to begin a college at the end of the Civil War.

Dr. J.V.E. Covey's chief purpose in life was to preach the Gospel and instruct coming generations. Though he was born in New York, while attending Colgate College, he heard a Baptist Missionary to Texas speak of the need for religious endeavor in Texas, then a Republic. It apparently made a lasting impression on Covey's life. Soon after his graduation and marriage, Covey established a Female College in Tennessee. He then went to Palestine, Texas as head of Franklin College, a Masonic School. While there he also established churches. From Palestine the Covey family moved to Hallettsville where Dr. Covey served as president of Alma Male and Female Institute which had been established in 1852. Dr. Covey left Hallettsville in 1864 to move to Concrete. There had been a wooden school building in Concrete built of lumber hauled from Indianola. This building burned about 1866. He instructed his first pupils in church buildings and plans for a new building were started immediately. The new building was built of stone quarried in the local area. The contract to build the college was given to Mr. Germandt of Concrete who lived on the McCoy Creek north of the town.

The buildings of Concrete College were in three divisions. The largest known as Covey College, was the regular college building. The dimensions of this building were about 150 feet by 40 feet with partitions dividing the class rooms. This building had an ell which contained the large dining room and kitchen. Near at hand was a girl's dormitory and at the opposite end of the main building the boy's dormitory and a frame building for primary students and servants quarters. On the campus, in addition to the buildings mentioned, were several homes and a building for the Commercial School. Back of the College was a playground area for various athletics and outdoor games. The girls played apart from the boys and sat in separate sections in the same classes. Tom Stell described the college thus: "The college was made of rock with a log foundation. The floors were made of split logs with the surface hewed smooth. The interior walls were plastered white which gave ample light. The college was located on a slight hill which afforded good drainage. The lawn was Bermuda grass with cedar trees and roses here and there to add to its beauty. As a whole the campus was beautiful and well kept."

Concrete College had primary, intermediate, and college departments. This was necessary to prepare and furnish students for the college. After the college had been in operation for a few years it would only accept students over twelve years of age.

Some of the subjects taught were Latin, oratory, German, French, Spanish, music, math plus history, English, and science. There was a special department of Business and Penmanship. Banking, bookkeeping, business arithmetic, political economy, penmanship, business correspondence, and commercial law were some of the courses taught. Many early successful business men of Texas received their early training in Concrete College. Two students, W.H. Crain and Rudolph Kleberg, were later United States congressmen.

An interesting educational idea was developed. Students were graded according to ability and expected to produce accordingly. If they failed to do what was expected, they were demoted to the grade below. It was also customary to recognize merit by passing superior students to classes above. At commencement time, a Board of Visitors consisting of twelve members conducted the public examinations of the proposed graduate students. These men were from different communities and were educated people.

Certainly an important item in connection with operating a college was the matter of tuition. Though the college received some support from the Baptist denomination, it was not A flat fee of $100.00 would pay for a student's instruction and board if he furnished his bed and linens for 5 months. In those days $200.00 for a ten month term of school required sacrifice on the part of many parents. Often students would attend the term they were not needed at home. Also many were day students and there were separate fees for them, also for musical instruction, languages, and needle-

The college was very strict - all firearms or deadly weapons must be left at home or deposited with the college president. Games of chance, smoking, profane language, use of liquor could mean expulsion. Boarders at the college got up at five and dressed by ten minutes past five. Everyone then attended chapel until six thirty. After chapel students attended class until breakfast. At night everyone was to be in bed by 9 PM. Visits to town were limited to once a month and this was a short time on Saturday morning. Attending church services were the only opportunity to leave the campus. No matter how many rules were made it would be difficult to believe that the students of the 1870's were so different from those of today. The students found ways to have a good time no matter how severe the punishment might be. Many of the students did not come from highly cultured or stern families, and several boys were known to be expelled for having wild parties in their rooms.

Dr. Covey did endeavor to keep everyone very busy with studies, exercise and other activities, so that did help with maintaining discipline. His belief in coeducation was unusual at that time; however, he stated the belief that young people learned better in a coed environment.

The college enrollment reached its height in 1875 with 250 students out of which 100 were boarders. It was probably one of the largest boarding schools at that time in Texas. By 1880 the student body had dwindled so low that the following year the college closed. Several factors brought about its close — the rise of the public school and the fact that the railroad did not come through Concrete. Also, another reason for the decline of the college was an epidemic of measles followed by pneumonia and flu which occurred two successive years causing deaths among some of the students. This frightened the public as a whole and caused people to keep their children at home.

There is nothing left of the college today except the foundation outlines of some of the buildings. The Concrete cemetery nearby is a silent sentinel and the only reminder of a one time busy campus area.

land belonging to Dr. J. Dickinson. Dr. Dickinson's wife, Mrs. Caroline Dickinson lived to witness the many changes in that district, living to be 107.

In this house some of the present day citizens, grandparents and parents attended their first school. Among them were Mrs. Charles Powers, Mrs. Taylor Woodrome, Miss Jennie Nelson, later Mrs. J. Hargrove was the first teacher. Professor Younkin, well known practitioner of Yoakum rode horseback daily from Hope to County Line to teach. Other teachers were Jeffries, Covey, and Edgar.

In the 1870's a school house was built of lumber. Rev. Wade Hollan, a Baptist minister, one of the pioneer landowners, sold this tract to J.B. Cook and C.W. Cook. C.W. Cook donated the land for the building to be used for both church and school. The patrons of the school were Dickinson, Hollan, Stephenson, Rush, Barnes, Bradley, Powers, McDonald, Simpson, McManus, Yarborough and Woodrome. Trustees were C.W. Cook, W.H. Hollan and J.E. Autry.

That was the era when, may we quote, "Reading, writing and Arithmetic were taught to the tune of a hickory stick" by conscientious instructors, who literally observed the injunction, "spare the rod and spoil then child." However, the practice was considerably modified in time and the County Line School, beginning in the little log house. The knowledge implanted by this method proved a stepping stone from which many treked on in life to become useful men and women.

In 1877 J.B. Cook deeded to the church, onehalf acre of land for a burial ground. In 1902 the school was moved to the Woodman's Hall. Miss Katie Powers and Mr. S. Hopkins were the teachers and the trustees were H. Koehler, P.E. Edgar, and James McCoy. The old building was moved to a location between Terryville and Stratton, and was used as a place of worship.

The school trustees reserved three acres of the land for the cemetery and sold the rest to C.H. Stephens. Also, a Cemetery Association was organized with W.C. Steineman, C.E. Powers, and S. Hopkins as trustees. The late Charley Stephens was the first caretaker, followed by S. Manning and then J. Rehak. The first grave was dug by Uriah Mott, Buck Hollan, Sam Leaton, John Alexander and Bill Cook and Sam Manning.

CROSSENVILLE

Crossenville School

The first store established in the area, on the Abednego Biddy Survey, was built by George W. Crossen in 1858. George Crossen came to a small settlement where the J.M. Alexander family were living in about 1850. The settlement was named for Mr. Crossen. His family included his sister, Mrs. Jeffreys, a widow with two children.

By 1859 there was a log schoolhouse with Bill Edgar as teacher. Mr. Edgar rode horseback eight miles from his home in Edgar to teach the Crossenville school. In 1880 the log building was replaced with a frame building. Other teachers were Loretta Reynolds and Birdie Jennings. In 1925 the Crossenville School was consolidated with the Stratton School three miles to the southeast.

Other families from this area were the Adams, Bowen, Rice, Coldman Parker, Buch, Fudge, Kirkland, Matthews, Morrow, Means, Woods, and Newman.

The famous "Elm Street Meetings" conducted by Joe "Bud" Newman were held at the Joseph Austin Newman home in Crossenville. Every July the Primitive Baptist would gather to hear the preaching from 1926 to 1935.

The Alexander Cemetery is the only reminder of the people who once lived at nearby Crossenville.

CUERO

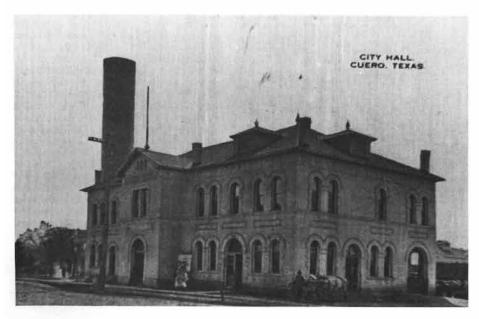

T49

The City of Cuero is situated in the J. Antonio Valdez y Gonzales League, one of eleven leagues of land granted to Father Valdez by the State of Coahuila y Texas on July 5, 1831. The League had a number of owners before J.O. Wheeler, of Victoria, purchased it in 1860. In 1870 the land was vacant except for occasional herds of cattle grazing across it. Across the River lay Clinton, the thriving county seat.

In New York, New Orleans, and Galveston, however, great plans were afoot for the development of this otherwise empty Guadalupe River valley. Before the Civil War, Mr. Charles Morgan, of New York City, had established his supremacy in the shipping industry of the western Gulf of Mexico, meeting and defeating the challenge presented him by Commodore Vanderbilt, and establishing a virtual monopoly of transportation in the Texas Gulf region with his regular schedule of passenger steamers from New Orleans to Galveston to Indianola and return. Morgan's shops made Indianola the principal port of entry for traffic destined for San Antonio, northern Mexico and the forts of the western frontier. In the great expansion of industry and commerce which followed the Civil War, new competitors to Morgan sprang up and commenced building railroads southward toward San Antonio, from the north and east, presenting a serious threat to Morgan's dominance of the western traffic. Accordingly, in May, 1870, Morgan announced the formation of the Gulf Western Texas and Pacific Railway Company and his intention to build a railroad westward from Indianola to San Antonio with a projected extension to Austin.

On December 25, 1871, Col. Gustav Schleicher, John C. French, Charles Terrell, and Fletcher Stockdale formed the Cuero Land and Immigration Company, a state chartered private corporation. Col. Schleicher was an engineer and surveyor who laid out the route of the G.W.T.&P. Ry. He later served as a United States Congressman. John C. French was a San Antonio businessman. Charles Terrell was a colonel, later general, in the United States Army. He was prominently connected with real estate development in San Antonio. Fletcher Stockdale was an Indianola lawyer, a member of the Board of Directors of the G.W.T.&P., and a former Lieutenant Governor Texas. On February 8, 1872, Col. Schleicher, in behalf of the Company, paid the J.O. Wheeler Estate $10,0320.00 in gold for 4,128 acres of the Valdez League. A few days later, on February 13, 1872, Col. Schleicher conveyed legal title to the property to the Cuero Land and Immigration Company. That company, as an inducement to the Railroad to bring its tracks to Cuero, conveyed 100 acres of its land to Morgan's new G.W.T.&P. Ry.

Five months behind schedule the first passenger train arrived from Indianola at the new Cuero station on March 4, 1873. Among the passengers on that first train were Mr. and Mrs. C.C. Howerton and their two children. Jim and Lelia. Before the week was over most of the Cuero Land and Immigration Company's lots in downtown Cuero had been sold. Nicholas Fuchs bought the lot where the old post office now stands; Qualls & Kent bought the site on Esplanade where the Texas Hotel was built; C.C. Howerton bought the lot at Main and Esplanade where Breeden Bros. store (now Klecka Drug) was later built; Tom Womack purchased the property where the Warn Building, later Bates (now Wagner) Hardware, would be built. It was April before H. Runge & Company, pioneer Indianola and Cuero banking and merchandising firm, bought the lots at Main and Gonzales where it built its bank, grocery store, and hardware store. Others who bought Cuero real estate within the first few months after the Railroad reached Cuero include Frederick Buschick, G. Schleicher, Eleanor T. Schleicher, S.W. White, Mary Hausmann, William Hausmann, Henry Seligson, B.E. McCullough, Robert P. Carr, B.S. Milligan, Robert Wulfinch, August Hyck, William Hasdorff, Hugo Schindler, Rudolph Kleberg, Gideon Egg, Thomas Ball, Wm. Trautwein, R. Fromme, Lizzie Fromme, L.C. Fudge, J.C. Houston and Brothers, J.R. Nagel, Julius Bade, Wm. Gohmert, H. Nitsche, J.E. Mitchell & Co., and E. Seider, who purchased the lot where the Seider Hotel was erected. For a few years the extension of the railroad westward to San Antonio remained uncompleted and Cuero prospered as the temporary western terminus of the railroad. All goods and passengers from Western Texas bound for the east through Indianola had first to board the train in Cuero and all goods and passengers from eastern ports destined for Western Texas had to disembark in Cuero and proceed further west by stage coach or freight wagon. It was during the middle years of the decade (1875-1876), after Cuero supplanted Clinton as County Seat, that such familiar names as S.C. Lackey, John T. Wofford, L. Seligson, J.C. Woodworth, H.J. Huck & Co., W. Westhoff & Co., J.C. Heaton and Bros., Wm. Frobese, Otto Staerker, Ed Koenig, Otto Buchel, Mrs. Mary Breeden, and J.M. Reuss first appear as owners of Cuero lots. Many businesses based in Indianola established branches in Cuero which eventually became larger and more profitable than their home offices.

The Railroad subdivided its 100 acres into "Morgantown" in honor of Charles Morgan, its founder and principal owner. Morgan Avenue was the principal thoroughfare through the addition. Sale of lots in Morgantown also commenced as soon as the first train arrived from Indianola. Although there were many businesses in Morgantown, it developed principally as the first residential area of the new town. During the first week after the train arrived the Railroad sold lots in Morgantown to N.E. Green, J.M. Austin, J.T. Kilgore, Wm. Sutherland, Alex Hamilton, C.M. Sherman, Wm. Westhoff. Later in the year D.K. Woodward, Adeline Brown, and N. Chaddock acquired lots in Morgantown. In the middle years of the decade Morgantown lots were sold to R.M. Forbes, Henry Keller, J.M. Reuss, F. Flick, J.F. Hamm, J.W. Lienhardt, Ms. Johanna Marshall, Wm. Mangold, Stephen Minot, Henry Doell, Pauline Kunitz, Fred Schmidt.

In 1876 the Cuero Land & Immigration Company added to its Cuero town site a subdivision called "Centennial Town Addition" in honor of the centennial of American Independence. It was designed as a residential area for the black population, with streets named Douglas (for Frederick Douglas, the famous abolitionist), Toussaint L'Ouverture (for the black liberator of Haiti), Grant, and Lincoln. Early purchasers of lots in Centennial Town included Sam Smith, Peter Anderson, J.D. Asbury, Fannie Paschal, Susan and Elliott Green, Laura Blackwell, Fred Sweeney, Docia Canfield. In 1891 Professor E.A. Daule, for many years principal of the black public school, bought a lot in Centennial Town.

In the summer of 1873 the Cuero Weekly Star, edited by Rudolph Kleberg, later Congressman from this District, went into publication. Twenty-two years later the Cuero Weekly Sun could boast that Cuero supported six newspapers, one in German and five in English.

In September of that first year Professor D.W. Nash opened the first session of his Academy which was the first and was to be the most renowned of Cuero's schools. On May 22, 1877, Emil Reiffert conveyed a lot on South Line Street to Hugo Buschick, Edward Mugge, William Frobese, and Charles Kleinecke, Trustees of the English-German School Association of Cuero, and the school was located on that lot. St. Michael's Parochial School was founded in 1877 and the Sisters conducted classed in a building behind the Church. Today St. Michael's School has been in operation longer than any other educational institution in DeWitt County. On July 18, 1893, Sarah R. French conveyed Block 112 to Henry F. Hill, Mayor of Cuero, and his successors in office in Trust for the sole use of the public free school in the City of Cuero. The large brick school house with bell tower which was erected on this site was named John C. French School in honor of Mrs. French's deceased husband, one of the original members of Cuero Land & Immigration Company.

On April 23, 1873, little more than a month after the first train arrived and the first lots were sold in Cuero, the Legislature adopted an Act to Incorporate the Town of Cuero, providing for election of a Mayor, Recorder, Marshal and five Aldermen. The first election took place on the first Monday in June, 1873. In November, 1875, Cuero Land & Immigration Company conveyed twelve acres to the City for the establishment of Hillside Cemetery. A hotly contested County-wide election in 1876 resulted in the removal of the County Seat from Clinton to Cuero. In 1894 the frame courthouse burned down and in March, 1895, the cornerstone of the present Courthouse was laid. In 1898 the Buchel Power & Irrigation Company completed the Cuero Dam, 120 feet long with a 21 foot crest, and electric lights were introduced to Cuero. After the Austin dam was destroyed in a flood in 1901, the Buchel Dam was for a time the largest dam in Texas. In 1903 the citizens of Cuero passed a bond issue to pay for a new two-story brick city hall which was erected at the southeast corner of the Main and Gonzales Street intersection. In 1954 the second story was removed and the City Hall substantially remodeled. In 1927 the first natural gas distribution system was laid in Cuero and for the first time the City enjoyed gas heat.

On September 15, 1875, the first of two destructive hurricanes struck the flourishing port city of Indianola. Some 175 lives and thousands of dollars in property were lost. The people of Cuero contributed $500.00 to the relief of their mother city. A great exodus from Indianola occurred at this time, many of the inhabitants moving the remains of their homes and businesses to Cuero via the G.W.T.&P. Ry.

1989 Cuero scene Esplanade and Church Street

On August 19 and 20, 1886, a second great hurricane struck Cuero itself with considerable force, damaging stores, churches, and homes in the new town, but obliterating what remained of Indianola. The winds and tides broke up the railroad wharves which extended a mile into the bay and used the massive timbers as battering rams against the frame buildings of Indianola. A fire resulting from a falling lamp completed the destruction. The survivors of Indianola then left their homes for the last time enroute to Cuero and other inland points on the railroad. As a result of this influx coupled with the continuing prosperity of the city, the population of Cuero almost doubled from 1,333 in 1880 to 2,442 in 1890.

During the first three decades of the twentieth century Cuero's growth and prosperity continued as a manufacturing and distribution center as well as a market town for a prosperous agricultural economy. Although the city lost population between 1900 and 1910, its growth resumed in the years from 1910 to 1930. Cotton was the dominant crop in DeWitt County and Cuero boasted five gins, a cotton compress, cotton oil mill, cotton textile mill, and several cotton merchants. Cotton picking time was the time of greatest business activity and prosperity in the city. It was customary for merchants to carry their customers from one cotton harvest to the next with settlements being made when each cotton crop was picked and sold.

industry, virtually every farm family raised turkeys for sale in the Thanksgiving and Christmas markets. Because motorized trucks were still far in the future the farmers customarily drove their flocks on foot into Cuero to market. Flocks from more distant areas were joined by flocks closer to town and by the time they approached the City thousands of the Thanksgiving birds might be seen marching into town. A "drummer" staying at the Multi Hotel observed this sight with great interest and suggested that the march of turkeys would be an interesting tourist attraction. Mr. Jim Howerton, publisher of the Cuero Record, took up this suggestion and promoted a civic festival centering around this parade of turkeys. The "Turkey Trot" was a popular dance of the day and was adopted as the name of the festival. The first Turkey Trot was held in 1912, followed by celebrations at irregular intervals culminating in the Cuero Centennial Turkey Trot of 1972. The celebrations achieved national attention and attracted crowds of spectators from throughout the state and elsewhere. The elaborate parades were accompanied by spectacular pageants in which a local business man and a popular young lady were crowned as "Sultan Yekrut" and Susltana Oreuc". Although virtually no turkeys are now raised in DeWitt County, the Cuero Turkey Fest has been a popular local celebration since

When the United States entered the Great War in April, 1917, Cuero responded with a wave of genuine patriotism. The Cuero Machine Gun Company was mustered into service as part of the 36th Division. Many Cuero boys lost their lives on the battlefields of Europe. The ladies at home wrapped thousands of bandages for the American Red Cross.

The 1920's were prosperous ones in Cuero. A new John C. French School and a new High School were built. Many local churches built new sanctuaries or auditoriums or remodeled existing ones. A c stock broker established a local office with stock ticker to make it easier for local customers to invest in the booming stock market. But this prosperity came to a crashing end with the onset of the Great Depression in the 1930's. The fact of depression was brought home to the people of Cuero when H. Runge & Co., the oldest bank in Texas, closed its doors in 1932. J.T. Newman was elected Mayor of Cuero in 1934 on a platform of utilizing federal aid to combat the effects of depression. Under his leadership and with the aid of the W.P.A, P.W.A., and other federal relief programs, the Cuero Municipal Park with clubhouse, lake, swimming pool, golf course, and baseball diamond was built; the NYA facilities were put in place; the electric distribution system was acquired by the City; a new sewer plant was constructed; a storm sewer system was installed. As American entry into the Second World War drew near, Cuero became the site of Brayton Field, a civilian contract flying school. As Cuero became immerse in the war effort its population increased and it enjoyed probably its period of greatest prosperity.

Many distinguished statesmen have lived in Cuero. Although Cuero has never much exceeded 7,000 in population it has been the home of four United States Congressmen: Gustav Schleicher, William Henry Crain, Rudolph Kleberg, and John J. Bell. It became the home of Fletcher S. Stockdale who had served in 1863-1866 as Lt. Governor of Texas and had acted briefly as Governor after Gov. Murrah

West End School - Cuero

The School Board met Wednesday, September 6, 1911, to reorganize under the new state law governing schools. The new law gave the local School Board the right to govern school affairs and permitted separation from the City Council. At the meeting a petition was presented calling for an election to be held in October, Attorney H.W. Wallace was present to explain the new law and to point out to the opposition that it was now the law of the land and that their arguments were useless. On September 7, the Cuero Record, in an editorial, defended the law and asked that the objectors forget their complaints and give the new law their fullest support. To quote the writer, "Our District is favored above the average new district in that we have men of experience successful men of affairs - at the steering wheel." On October 10, 1911 an election authorizing the school district to be operated by its own school board passed by a vote of 200 to 29.

On April 16, 1912, the Cuero Independent School District School Board met to plan for a bond election to be held on the following day. Present at the meeting were Mr. Sterling F. Grimes, Mr. Frank Hutchings, Mr. Berthold Schiwetz, Mr. Henry Nagel, Mr. C.H. Burghard, and Dr. W.R. Gillette. On April 17, 1912, a bond issue for $30,000. was approved by a vote of 203 to 80 to build a school. This building was used from the time of completion through the 1971-72 school year. An editorial in the Cuero Record stated, "Opposition put up a game fight, but with the thought of the children before them, those in favor of the bond issue charged to victory."

On May 5, 1912, Professor A.S. Bush of San Marcos Baptist Academy was elected Superintendent. During the month of May, 1912, several committee meetings were held to decide on the location of the site of the new building. $5,000,00 was raised to purchase the site because it was ruled that it was illegal to spend bond money for sites. Lawyer H.W. Wallace ruled that local maintenance money of around $3,000.00 could also be spent for a site. The committee was composed of Dr. J.W. Burns, Chairman, H.W. Nagel, J.C. Howerton, H.W. Wallace, C.T. Schwab, and H.A. Mugge. Judge Sterling F. Grimes was also mentioned in connection with the committee's action. The building was finally located on a block of land purchased from Mrs. Helen Reiffert, who obtained it from Mrs. Cora R. Nash (Deed recorded Vol. 71, P. 81-82, June 8, 1912).

In 1928 the people of Cuero approved a $125,000.00 bond issue to build a high school and the first John C. French Elementary School. The red brick high school is no longer being utilized by the school district and the first John C. French building was torn down and replaced by the present John C. French building. Members of the school board in 1928 were as follows: Dr. J.C. Dodds — President;

In 1938 a bond issue for $17,000.00 was approved to build the school gymnasium that is located across the street from Hunt Elementary School. Bond issues in 1946 ($110,000), 1948 ($125,000), and 1950 ($125,000) provided bunds to build the Daule School, Oak View Primary School, and to make improvements to all existing facilities.

In 1956, $700,000.00 in bond funds were made available to build a new high school on Park Heights Drive. In 1965 the citizens of Cuero approved $650,000.00 in bond funds to construct a 20 classroom air-conditioned facility on the Hunt campus and a 12 classroom airconditioned facility on the John C. French campus. The 1965 bond issue also provided funds for the construction of a vocational building at the high school.

In 1972 a bond issue for $1,400,000.00 was approved to build an air-conditioned junior high school, an 8 air-conditioned classroom addition at Hunt, a 4 air-conditioned classroom addition at John C. French, an 8 air-conditioned classroom addition at Cuero High School, and an air-conditioned band hall at the high school.

Although there has not been a need for bond money since 1972, facility improvement has remained a priority in the school district. Several major projects have been completed in recent years (1985-89) that have not only improved facilities but have also enhanced the instructional offerings of the school district. Historically speaking, the Cuero community has always supported the facility needs and the instructional needs of the school district.

The following is a list of superintendents who have been employed by the Cuero Independent School District: M.V. Peterson 1911-12; A.S. Bush 1912-13; J.W. Ross 1923-26; J.H. Head 1926-27; S.M. "School Days" — Hoping to Bring Back a Memory —

After the Gulf Western Texas and Pacific Railroad reached Cuero in the year 1873, the village prospered and the people became concerned about the education of their children. Even though there were private schools in Cuero, the people felt that the opportunity to attend a free, public school would not only increase opportunities for their children, but give Cuero a mark of importance. There were no public funds available, but as interest in creating a public school increased, a tax bond was passed in 1893 and construction on the long awaited John C. French School began.

The school was built on land given by Mrs. Sarah French. When completed, the school was one of the finest structures in South Texas. Grades 1-10 all attended school in the same building, with the younger students on the first floor and the older students on the upper floor.

The first graduating class was in 1896. It consisted of only four people. There were Mamie Kate Henry, Luella McConnell, Annie Thomas, and Brink Peavy. Around this time a public school for the black citizens of Cuero was established. Daule School was constructed near the area of West Morgan Avenue with all grades attending.

The Cuero Independent School District was created by House Bill 39 on August 31, 1911. Some citizens fought against the establishment of C.I.S.D., but it was the law and their arguments were useless. On April 17, 1912, a bond issue of $30,000.00 to be used for a new school building was passed. A local attorney ruled that $3,000 of local money could be spent for a site for this new, larger, more modern building. During this time, there was a controversy over a site for the building, but finally a block of land was purchased from Mrs. Helen Reiffert. The first Cuero Independent School District High School, built about 1912, was a three story, tan brick building which was torn down in 1980. One of the early high school principals of this school, later became the famed author, college professor, and historian — Walter Prescott Webb.

In 1927 more space was needed and another bond issue was passed to build another high school and elementary building. The new High School was constructed across the street from the tan building on land purchased from Mr. T.A. Reuss, Sr. In the same year, 1928, and out of the same red bricks, a second John C. French was built.

The years passed, and in the late 1940's another school for the black citizens was needed. Mr. Willis Barfield, at that time owner of the Cuero Livestock Auction, gave the Cuero Independent School District a large tract of land at the West end of Cuero on which to build the second Daule School. The last big building project C.I.S.D. embarked on was the construction of the present High School in 1959, at a cost of $700,000.00.

The C.I.S.D. has continued to upgrade its school plant by the construction of a modern Junior High, Hunt Elementary, and John C. French. The John C. French School presented an unusual problem when the C.I.S.D. was offered a nice price for its site on Highway 87 for commercial property. The district had other land available that was not on a busy highway.

However, upon having their lawyer examine the deed for the land, they learned that if the time came when the property was not to be used for a school, it would revert to the French heirs — needless to say John C. French remained on the same location.

Cuero Schools have produced people with a wide spectrum of occupations and abilities. A majority of these people can look back to some teacher, friend, person, or event during their school years that had a profound effect on their later lives.

HISTORY OF ST. MICHAEL'S SCHOOL SINCE 1887

T51

As soon as the Catholics of Cuero were organized as a parish with a church (St. Michael's) and resident pastor, Frank Manci, plans were made to open a school. The school was supported by state money. Records indicate the number of students ranged between 40 and 85 each year. In the late 1800', not only did the Sisters teach school, they conducted a private informary, called the Salome, which had been opened sometime earlier by Dr. Joe Reuss, in the upstairs portion of the school, and was operated until a hospital was built on Factory Hill.

In 1908, all grades were taught by Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word of San Antonio. The school continued to be operated behind the church, with many of the students being boarded with the Sisters in their home above the school.

Second School - 1909

On July 23, 1909, the school was moved to the home on the property known as "The Old Baker Home."

In 1912, the Baker Home School was moved to Lot 3 in Block 16 where the school continued

St. Michael's School 1950's

in operation during the building of the first permanent school for the parish. According to Sister Eucharia, who taught at St. Michael's in 1915, "There were normally five Sisters assigned to Cuero; three to teach in the grades, a music teacher, and a Sister who did the house-keeping. Degrees in music were awarded by St. Michael's School, as well as high school certificates. German was also taught at St. Michael's in these days."

First Permanent School - 1912

Under the direction of Rev. G.J. Hendricks in 1912, the first permanent two-story frame school was built for St. Michael's. This school had three classrooms with a wide central hall on ground level, and assembly hall with a stage, and a kitchen area on the second floor. Sister Eugene Courtney of the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word, remembers the school as "a large empty building with two floors."

They obtained desks for the school by contacting local merchants and by asking for donations from farmers on their way to Cuero.

"Sister Loyola taught the High School students, and she relates her first students at St. Michael's in 1916 to 1917 were: Barney Byrne, Bertha Koenig, Margaret Heyer, Edna Zedler, Roberta Mayne, and Gladys Jecker."

"In those early years," according to Sister Loyola, "the Sisters received $20 a month pay for lower grades, and $23 for High School. Nearly the entire salary was turned in to the Mother House. The Sisters lived on the income from music lessons, for which they charged very little, and the generosity of the parishioners."

In 1927, Gideon Dreyer was the last student to graduate from High School at St. Michael's. He was the only graduate in his class. High school continued being taught from 1927-1929, but there were no graduates. At the end of the 1929 school year, the High School closed, the reason being that it was not accredited. Since that time, grades 1-8 have been taught at St. Michael's.

Sr. Lucilla Donnelly, who is now the present principal at St. Michael's, taught at the school. She remembers the school "as a wooden two-story building that shook when the wind blew." The basic subjects were taught, along with a rhythm band, music, and singing. Each Sister taught more than one grade. Sister Lucilla taught grades 2-3. The Sisters who taught lived in a two-story building where the present school stands now.

She further remembers that school life was at a much slower pace then. She said, "there wasn't such a rush, and not as many outside activities such as meetings."

Second Permanent School — 1955

In 1926, Mrs. Lydia (John) Welch donated Lot 10 in Block 11 to St. Michael's. The money from her will was designated to build the school. The Sisters' convent was moved into the old "Welch Home" in the 40's, where it remained until 1955. Rev. William Jansen directed the building of the St. Michael's School, consisting of four classrooms, with a brick exterior. The school office and library were built in 1955. The Sisters' living quarters were built above the office and library.

St. Michael's Academy

In 1966, Rev. John Flynn made plans to double the size of St. Michael's School. The additions consisted of four classrooms, music room, and a teachers' lounge. The air-conditioning system was also added at this time.

It was anticipated that St. Michael's would have to meet the State standards in a few years in order to qualify for the State Accreditation. It was announced that all the schools in the Archdiocese would receive blanket accreditation.

During the years 1964-1970, Sister Emilie Eilers was principal and set out to perfect the school for the Accreditation Team. A separate building from the school was built to serve as a science lab. Reading and science laboratories were added. Visual aid equipment was utilized. A pre-planned number of books and research materials were added each year until it met State standards.

In 1953, Mrs. Hedwig Lucas became the first lay teacher. Since 1975 there have been 38 different sisters stationed at St. Michael's. There have been seven different principals. In 1984, Mr. Robbie Kirk became the first lay principal.

"Finding teachers is not a problem of St. Michael's School. St. Michael's School pays well for a private school," says Father Herbst.

St. Michael's School 1912

St. Michael's School needs money to operate and depends on the support of its parishioners. The largest single contributor was from the Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Zengerle estate. Father Herbst also established an Endowment Fund for St. Michael's School which has grown rapid-

St. Michael's has always kept tuition costs down. There have been only two small increases since 1975.

The St. Michael's School sports program has grown throughout the years. When Coach Marie (Clarke) Rangnow began teaching twelve years ago, the S.M.S. track meet was in its twelfth year. Coach Rangnow has continued the track meet for a total of 23 years. She and Mary Kay Solo have started volleyball tournaments, which have occurred for three years. They have had baseball tournaments for the past three years.

St. Michael's is a small school compared to other schools, but in most events they have prevailed. The coaches have always encouraged their students to do their very best. St. Michael's School was especially proud of the sportsmanship trophies won in the baseball tournaments in 1989.

In the 1988-89 school year, two new programs were started at St. Michael's School. "Sparkle" was the name of a new "fun"tastic learning experience. "Students participate in a significant learning experience once a week that combines fun with challenging activities to promote a higher level of thinking skills," explained Mrs. Jean Nagel, second grade teacher.

The second new program, called "Just Say No," makes students aware of drugs and how to say "no" to them.

In 1989 St. Michael's School was visited by an accreditation team. The school was commended for its excellence.

In 1989 St. Michael's was staffed by two sisters, one being the principal, Sr. Lucilla Donnelly, and the other, Sr. Celine Pisklik. St. Michael's teachers are Cynthia Spanihel, Nancy Hajovsky, Jean Nagel, Carol Beer, Donna Beach, Laurie Pokluda, Mary Kay Solo, Marie Rangnow, Ruth Lampley, Gertrude Reese, and Kathy Sager. The current enrollment is 125 students from Kindergarten through eighth grade. St. Michael's accepts students of all races and religions.

St. Michael's 1988-1989 PTC officers were Peggy Bullard, Susan Halepeska, Mary Alice Klaus, and Terri Bradene. The School Board members were Richard Carbonara, Dot Hoffman, Arthur Bowers, Annette Rath, Darryl Stefka, Veronica Zimmerman. Ex Officio members were Msgr. Herbst, Sr. Lucilla, and Peggy Bullard.

According to Mrs. Pauline Kacir, "St. Michael's students, because their early formative years are spent in this positive, wholesome environment found in our school, are the hope and future of our parish."

THE ASSEMBLY OF GOD CHURCH

T5

The Cuero Assembly of God Church observes it's sixty-second anniversary this year, 1989, having been organized in 1927 and affiliated with the General Council of the Assemblies of God, headquartered in Springfield, Missouri.

At the turn of the century, the Pentecostal revival swept across the continent, including Canada and Mexico. Those adherents of the Pentecostal movement in this area began meeting in homes, and sponsoring tent meetings. Soon the need was evident that there must be some organization and governance.

In 1914, a delegation of three hundred (300) Pentecostal ministers and lay leaders from a wide area of the country met in Hot Springs, Arkansas and the name "Assemblies of God" was chosen for the new Pentecostal fellowship.

The group in Cuero had depended largely upon itinerant ministers to come by and conduct services. Among those ministers was a Rev. Rube Johnson, who was already ordained by the General Council. He conducted a successful tent revival and many more of those embracing the Pentecostal faith, were added to the local group.

Rev. Johnson remained in Cuero for about a year and led the group into a building project.

1943 Assembly of God Church

Julia Scott, Herbert Dromgoole and Dovie Kuchler — Assembly of God Church Charter Members

The organization purchased land on West French Street, and within months the small church was completed.

Mr. Jake Wagner, father of Mr. R.L. Wagner of this City, helped to finance the indebtedness that was incurred.

Early in the year of 1927, the congregation of about forty members decided to pursue affiliation with the organization of the Assemblies of God in Springfield, Mo. Three men were selected to approach the officials of the Texas District Council of the Assemblies of God. The three men were Mr. Jack Boone, Mr. George Allen, and Mr. Hubert Dromgoole, who is one of the surviving charter members of the congregation.

The Committee contacted Rev. Hale, Presbyter of the San Antonio Section of the Texas District Council, who came to Cuero in March of 1927, and officially received the church into the parent organization.

Rev. Cyril Isom, a graduate of the new Evangel College of Springfield, became the first pastor of the newly organized church.

Twenty eight pastors have served through the next sixty years. In 1936 Rev. Bernice Robison came to serve as pastor. During his tenure with the church, he built the present structure at 313 West Live Oak Street. The rock for the front of the building was donated by Mr. Kos Morgan, and hauled into town from his ranch at Cheapside. Also Mr. O.T. McAlister donated the light fixtures, which are still in use. In 1963 Mrs. E.T. Summers, Sr. donated the air-conditioning and heating unit for the church.

The congregation, in 1950 erected a parsonage at 703 E. Heaton Street, which served as the pastor's home until the purchase of the present parsonage at 601 W. Johnson Street.

Acreage has been purchased on the Yoakum Highway, North of Cuero Community Hospital for construction of a new sanctuary and christian education facilities. The congregation is looking forward to the time when construction can begin.

There are three surviving charter members of the church; Mr. Hubert Dromgoole, Mrs. Julia Scott and Mrs. R.L. Kuchler, who has served as pianist for more than sixty years. Accompanying is a picture of the three in front of the present church, also a picture of the entire Sunday School in 1943.

The present pastor is Rev. David Washburn, who also serves as presbyter of the Yoakum Section of the South Texas District Council.

This data was compiled by Hubert Dromgoole and wife, Carmen Dromgoole, Dean Wiggins and from information gathered from charter members, church records and long time members of the congregation.

HISTORY OF THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

408 N. Gonzales 275-3401

The First Baptist Church of Cuero, Texas, was organized on February 20, 1878, at three in the afternoon, in the Union Church, which was located at 223 Morgan Avenue. Eleven Baptists, members of this Union Church, requested a conference for the purpose of presenting their letters to the Presbytery, in order to organize a Baptist Church.

The Union Church was owned by Methodists, Presbyterians, and Baptists. The Baptists sold their interest to the Methodists, but continued to worship in this building until they erected their own in or around 1885, on the site

When the Church was organized, services were held once a month. In 1882, the church with nineteen members listed, was holding services twice a month. Sometime between 1882 and 1909 the Church acquired a parson-services twice a month. Sometime between 1882 and 1909 the Church acquired a parsonage, located at 134 South Valley Street. Early in 1909, this parsonage was sold in order to more centrally locate the pastor. In 1913, the house at 204 East Reuss Blvd. was purchased.

In 1912 the Church was rebuilt. This was the second church. In 1918, the Colorado Association, which had been organized in 1847, met in Cuero for it's Seventy First Anniversary. It was at this meeting that the Association was divided, and the Guadalupe Association was formed.

In 1919, the house at 301 East Prairie was purchased. This was the third parsonage the Church owned. In 1950, this house was demolished and a new house built on the site — serving as the parsonage until 1972, when the property at 509 West Johnson Street was acquired.

The church membership was listed as 253 in 1920. In October of that year the church voted to buy property at the corner of Broadway and Clinton for the site of a new Church. These lots were sold in 1931, because the restriction clause in the deed prevented sale of the present site.

An Annex was built in 1922, because of the pressing need for more Sunday School Class Rooms. The Sunday School enrollment was 190, with an average attendance of 142.

The budget for 1926 revealed the spirit of the Church concerning evangelism and missions. In a total budget of $6,028.00, Revival meetings were designated $500.00, Denominational Programs $1,200.00, and Associational Missions $337.00.

In 1928, the year of the reduced budget, the church voted to begin construction of a new church. The first service was held in this church on July 7, 1929. This was the stucco Church, which was torn down to make way for the present building.

Despite restrictions which the years of the thirties brought, Church Records reveal all of the Organizations remained strong. Missions was never neglected. In 1935, the church helped with the organizations of the Yorktown Baptist Church. The following year, excavation work was begun under the main building for additional Sunday School Class Rooms.

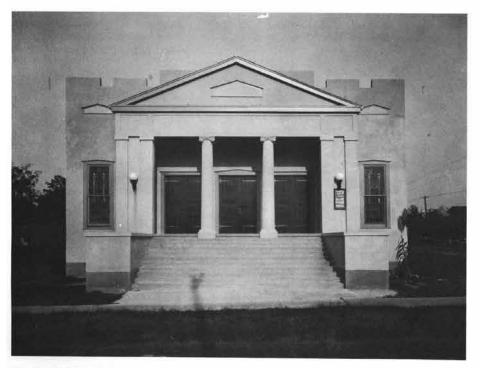

A new organ was installed in July of 1937. Property at the rear of the church, and, facing on Broadway, was purchased from Mr. Poetter in November of 1939. The remainder of the Poetter property was acquired in 1945.

The years of the forties brought rapidly enlarging programs. A Homecoming Celebration, in commemoration of the Church's Sixty-Third Anniversary, was held in February of 1941. Two former pastors returned for this celebration. They were Brethren M.M. Wolf and W.N. Percell. The church membership in October of 1940 was 401—the average attendance in Sunday School was 159. By the middle forties, the church membership had increased to 663, and the Sunday School average attendance had increased to 350.

Jerusalem Baptist Mission was organized in the early forties, under the leadership of Bro. Refugio Garcia, the Latin American Associational Missionary. The Church adopted this Mission. Their first building for worship was a house on King Street. In 1947, property was purchased at Live Oak and Indianola Street for the site of their first building. This building was torn down to make way for the new church, which was dedicated on May 2, 1976. Bro. Roland Lopez is the pastor.

Early in 1952, construction was begun on an Educational Building, the site being the property acquired from the Poetter Estate. The church met in regular conference in this new building on October 8, of that year.

Ground-breaking ceremonies for a new sanctuary were held on Sunday, March 29, 1970. Dedication of this building was on Sunday afternoon, December 20, 1970. In May of 1976 the Church called it's first full time Minister of Music and Youth.

GRACE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Grace Episcopal Church 1800's

Grace Episcopal Church

On March 4, 1873, the first passenger and mail train pulled into the town of Cuero. Among its passengers were Mr. and Mrs. C.C. Howerton and family, who were the first Episcopalians to settle here, being members of Grace Church in Lavaca. By July of that year, he recruited the help of Mr. T.C. Smith (Presbyterian), Mr. J.T. Wade (Campbellite), and a Mr. Auston (Methodist), and had organized the first community Sunday School. In the autumn of that year came Louis Selligson and family from Lavaca and the Otto Buchels.

In December, 1873 Cuero had grown to 250 persons. On New Year's Day, 1874, the R.M. Forbes family moved into town from Lavaca; this made seven members of the Episcopal Church living within the town. These people were the seed from which sprung Grace Episcopal Church, Cuero.

In March of 1874, The Rt. Rev. Alexander Gregg, Bishop of Texas, arrived in Cuero to hold services and to preach what was probably the first sermon ever heard in the town of 600 people. McColloch Hall, now extinct, was the scene of this service, and was located across the tracks from the old Railroad Depot. As a result of this service and a meeting which was held in the Walter K. Breeden home, the idea was born to built a Church in the town. Mr. Howerton and Mrs. Forbes met with Mr. R.J. Evans, President of Gulf, West Texas, and Pacific Railroad and discussed the possibility of moving the old Episcopal Church from Lavaca to Cuero. Apparently Mr. Evans thought very kindly of the idea; not only did he agree to transport the Church and all the furnishings, but do it free of charge!

However, there was a cost involved in tearing down and rebuilding the Church. To this end, Mrs. Forbes with the assistance of several other ladies, gave a benefit supper, at which they raised the sum of $60.00. Col. Schleicher himself made a most generous gift of a plot of land for the new building, and now all that remained was to raise more money. The community was canvassed and came up with numerous gifts and donations from individuals and business firms.

In July, 1874, a contract was signed with the company of McIntosh & Clark of Lavaca to take down and move the Church from that town to Cuero, "with bell and furnishings, and to enlarge the Church, to add a chancel, put in a new front of dressed plank and a gothic door for the sum of $375.00. The move was accomplished in July, which was quite a remarkable feat in itself, not only was transportation slow at that time, but July is a pretty hot month to do any heavy labor in this part of Texas. The heat and humidity can be quite overpowering. Added to the difficulties faced by these people was not only the heat, but the fact that one of the flatcar wheels on the train broke, spilling the load and necessitating immediate repairs. For a cost of $17.50, billed to the then non-existent Grace Church, Cuero, the wheel was replaced, and the work went on. Success crowned the efforts of these people, and by September, 1874, Grace Church, Lavaca, had become Grace Church, Cuero, the total cost, including the new wheel, was $392.50. The Church and property, along with the $112.50 debt, were turned over to Mr. Howerton; the Episcopal congregation at this time numbered 35 communicants, namely: Mr. and Mrs. C.C. Howerton, Mrs. R.M. Forbes and two daughters (Mrs. Alice Townsend and Miss Jennette Forbes), all of Cuero; Dr. and Mrs. T.S. Burk, of Concrete: Mr. (later Judge) Henry Clay Pleasants, Mrs. Pleasants, and daughter; Abb Webb, and Mrs. Jennie McCormick, all of Clinton; Mrs. (Dr.) J.A. Wimbush, Mrs. F.L. Lynch, and Mrs. Montgomery Blackwell, of DeWitt County.

Continuing with excerpts taken from Mr. C.C. Howerton's journal: "As this building was the only house of worship in the town, the Union Sunday School, which had been organized in 1873 . . . was invited to occupy the building. The invitation was accepted." "Now up to this time, Mr. Howerton having entire control of the church property and affairs, notified the members of the Church, and all who contributed to it, to meet at the Church for the purpose of electing a vestry. The following gentlemen were elected as vestrymen: Dr. T.S. Burk, H. Clay Pleasants, Abb Webb, F.B. Wimbush, and C.C. Howerton. The newly elected vestry in turn elected Henry Clay Pleasants as senior warden, and C.C. Howerton as junior warden as treasurer, and F.B. Wimbush, Secretary. The unanimous voice of the vestry was to invite any christian church which believed the Apostles' Creed to worship in our Church. This has been the voice of the vestry ever since.'

Grace Church was now an integral part of the town of Cuero, which by now numbered close to 750 persons. The Church building was there, on its own lot (behind which is now Means Furniture Store) and like many a Church before and since, this parish started its existence in debt. This debt, remarkably enough, was entirely cleared in less than a year; again it was "the ladies" who did the lion's share of the work, turning the town gay and giddy with ice cream socials, entertainments, dinners, and the like, until the entire sum of $112.50 had been raised. Spearheading these efforts was the Ladies' Aid Society, the first parish organization, which was formed in October of 1874 "to uphold the hand of the vestry and Priest in all parish matters." The year 1875 saw quite a few "firsts" for the little parish. The first debt was cleared in June; in the fall of that year, the first organ, costing $225.00 was bought, installed, and paid for by the Ladies Aid Society. Included among the many donations was a gift of $10.00 from the Hon. F.S. Stockdale, Governor of the State of Texas also $50.00 was contributed by Mr. Charles Morgan of New York, President of Gulf, West Texas and Pacific Railroad. Mrs. Friend was the first Church organist (1873-1876). Another "first," just as important as the others, came in January, when the Rt. Rev. R.W.B. Elliott, first missionary Bishop of the new district of Western Texas, made his first Episcopal visitation to the little Church, and officiated at the first confirmation ever witnessed here. In this first confirmation class were three persons. This was also the first "formal" service in the little Church presided over by a clergyman. The first marriage in the Church, Mr. Tom Smith to Mrs. Josie Brown (both Presbyterians) took place in the fall of 1874.

First marriage performed in the Church by an Episcopal rector, The Rev. F.R. Starr, was to Mr. Otto Staerker and Miss Margaret Forbes, March 7, 1877.

In March, 1877, Bishop Elliott appointed The Rev. Francis R. Starr as first missionary Priest in Cuero; his ministry was to last until June 1883, when he resigned and accepted a call to Waco, Texas. Since the parish records for this period have been lost, it is impossible to gauge the effectiveness of his pastoral ministry. Upon his departure, the communicant strength of Grace Church stood at 38 persons, while the Sunday School (still the only one in town) numbered 80 students on its rolls. Mr. Starr's tenure did see quite a bit of material improvement in the parish, however. We read from Mr. C.C. Howerton's journal again.

"In 1878 Bishop Elliott promised if the Church was ceiled he would put in a round art glass chancel window. The ladies again went to work and made the sum needed: $275.00, and appointed a committee of gentlemen who had the Church ceiled. In August, 1879, the Bishop had the chancel window shipped. The Rev. F.R. Starr had it put in place." During this year Mrs. Montgomery Blackwell presented to the Church a lovely walnut lectern, handsomely carved and lettered, together with a large Bible and some altar cloths. The first infant baptized in the Church was Miss Addie Smith daughter of Mrs. Rebecca Smith.

The Rev. F.R. Starr was succeeded at Grace Church in October of 1883 by The Rev. C.E. Cabiness, who remained until December, 1885. Under his pasiorate, 24 names were added to the rolls of baptized members, and the communicant strength grew by 21 persons. During his tenure in Cuero, the parish witnessed two more "firsts." Early in 1885, the convocation of the Protestant Episcopal Church for the missionary district of Western Texas (forerunner to Diocesan Convention) assembled at Grace Church, with The Rt. Rev. R.W.B. Elliott presiding. It was the first time this little parish had been no honored; and it was to be so honored once more, this time in 1895. Later this same year, The Rev. A.W. Borroughs, assigned to Trinity Church, Victoria, was ordained to the Priesthood at Grace Church; this was the first such service ever witnessed in Cuero.

"First young girl's society named The Gleaners composed of girls in and out of the Church who had the Church painted on the outside, Miss Annie Blackwell being the leader in this work" (Bishop Elliott's Diary). The first bell was given by Mr. Frank Bates and Mr. Frank Hutchings.

The Rev. J.B. Fitzpatrick held his first service in Grace Church, having succeeded Rev. Cabiness. During Rev. Fitzpatrick's term as rector, seven persons were baptized. The number of communicants at that time is not known, due to a gap in the parish records; however it is estimated that he left a congregation of 50 to 60 persons.

The following year, 1888 The Rev. George Hinson, a former Methodist minister, was ordained Deacon in the Episcopal Church by The Rt. Rev. James Steptoo Johnston. Mr. Hinson served Grace Church for about two years. The town was rapidly growing and as the city stretched its youthful legs, so also the Parish grew. There were those who dreamed of something larger as their place of worship; there were those who talked of a more churchly structure. So it was, in 1889 during Rev. Hinson's rectorship that the present Church building was erected on the corner of Esplanade and Live Oak Streets, where it remains to this day. The building was Gothic in style, with white clapboards and a cedar shingled roof on the outside, the inside, adorned by three handsome stained glass chancel windows, was of dark walnut. Cost of the Church was $375.00. all of the interior wood was imported from New Orleans, La., and carefully tongued and grooved for the walls and cathedral ceiling. The baptismal font was moved from the original Church and is still in use today. The Church has remained substantially unchanged to the present. As the Church was built, the Ladies' Aid Society undertook the task of converting the first little Church that had been moved from Grace Church in Port Lavaca to Cuero into a rectory, in which capacity it served until 1961. It was sold by the Church in 1963, and now serves as a private residence. The first baptized in the new Church was Corrine Staerker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Staerker in 1890 by The Rev. Hinson. First memorial windows were given in memory of Miss Kate Seligson, Mr. Ed Menifee, and Miss Minnie Chapman.

The Rev. Hudson Stuck succeeded The Rev. George Hinson in the year 1892. During The Rev. Stuck's tenure, several memorial gifts were presented to the Church. Among these are the brass altar cross given by the first Altar Society. This cross still graces the altar in the church today. In the same year, a new communion Chalice was presented to the Church and this cup is still used at all services, a gift from the entire congregation, this silver cup was made by smelting down many small baby cups, pieces of jewelry, and some silver plate, then moulded into the cup. A jeweled ring, the engagement ring of Mrs. Carey McNelly, wife of Captain McNelly (a Texas Ranger) adorns the top of the stem; the jewels that ring the bottom of the cup and stem were at one time jewelry pieces worn by members of the congregation. Also in use today are the brass missal, a pair of brass candlesticks, altar vases, and a large prayerbook.

The Rev. Austen F. Morgan succeeded The Rev. Stuck in 1895 and stayed until June 1897.

The Rev. Alfred W.S. Garden succeeded The Rev. Morgan in 1898 and stayed until 1903. During his tenure the first Altar was given to Grace Church by Mr. and Mrs. Otto Buchel in memory of their little girl, Norma. Also the first brass processional cross was given and presented by the Altar Guild, first brass and wood candelighter and snuffer presented by "Lad and Lasses Society". First vested choir was organized by The Rev. Garden with 19 members and sang on Easter Sunday April 12, 1903.

Later rectors of Grace Church were: The Rev. F.R. Godolphin, May 1903 — Nov. 1904; Rev. John M. Hamilton, Nov. 1904 — April 1907; Rev. Upton B. Bowden, Sept. 1907-1917; Rev. A.J. Gayner Bank, May 1918 — July 1920; Rev. G.W. Smith, Oct. 1920 — June 1924; Rev. W.W. Reese, Jan. 1925 — Jan. 1926.

Next came The Rev. Everett H. Jones, July 1927 — March 1930. The Rev. Mr. Jones served Cuero and Yoakum until March of 1930 when he accepted a call to St. Paul's Church in Waco. The parish experienced an additional pride in 1943 when The Rev. Mr. Jones who had been ordained to the Priesthood in Grace Church was consecrated the Fourth Bishop of the Diocese of West Texas.

The next minister to serve Grace Church was The Rev. W.A. Allan, April 1930-1936.

Until 1936, Grace Church didn't have a parish hall in which extra activities could be held. Vestry meetings were usually held in private homes. On March 21, 1936, Bishop Capers acting as administrator to the estate of Mrs. Emma Proctor presented to the vestry a resolution that a parish hall be erected in her memory. The resolution was adopted and the present Proctor Hall now serves the parish and community.

Next came The Rev. Allen Day, July 1937 — August 1939; The Rev. Jay Scott Budlong, Sept. 1940 — March 1946.

The Rev. F. Randall Williams Jan. 1947 — May 1951. During his tenure 2 lots were purchased northwest of the present Church building. Also an historical Diamond Jubilee Pageant was held to celebrate the 75 years of the Church's history. An historical pageant was presented by the children of the Parish, none of whom were over ten years of age. The pageant consisted of tableaux which had to do with the organization and establishment of Grace Church as well as scenes in which the first baptism, wedding, and confirmation were depicted.

Next came The Rev. John W. Herman, Sept. 1951 — Nov. 1954; The Rev. James C. Soutar, Feb. 1955 — Jan. 1957; The Rev. John H. Battles, April 1957 — July 1962.

The Andrew R. Krumbhaar, Sept. 1962 — Jan. 1966. During his tenure the educational building in back of Proctor Hall was added in October of 1963. The Rev. Paul Abbott served June 1966 — Aug. 1972. During this time the first stained glass memorial window, within 50 years, was given in memory of Paul Hamilton Breeden by his children in 1971. The second memorial window and celestial windows were also added.

The Rev. Clayton Holland May 1973 — July 1975; The Rev. John McRae Beebe, Jan. 1976 — Nov. 1980. During his tenure the George Phillips family of Houston gave the Church their home in Cuero to be used as a rectory, this house was originally the William Frobese home. Frobese came to Indianola from Germany and in time built this home. After the 1875 hurricane in Indianola Frobese dismantled the house, numbered every part and brought it to Cuero by ox-cart and rebuilt it.

Next came The Rev. Neil Fraser Innes, a very popular minister who brought in many new people and reactivated numerous to the congregation. During his tenure The Grace Episcopal Day School was opened and has proven to be very popular and successful. "Father Scotty" as his parishioners called him served Grace Church June 1981 — Aug. 1984.

The Rev. George Patterson Connell, Father Pat to his parishioners served Sept. 1984 — May 21, 1989. During his tenure much was accomplished at Grace Church - a copper steeple was given by contributions in 1986, the sesquicentennial tour of homes and historical sites were held and Grace Church was on this tour, Proctor Hall was renovated and a garden area added complete with fountain, a new sidewalk, Church sign, and a paved landscaped site in front of the Church were given by contributions. Memorial plaques have been given and some still remain to be given, also the library has been refurbished along with the bathrooms. He brought in many young families with children necessitating a nursery for Sunday services.

The present congregation numbers close to 200 communicants. The vestry is still the governing body of the Church and is made up of 10 to 12 members of the congregation. The Altar Guild consists of 25 women of the Church, who are on teams and set up the Church Altar every Sunday and for special services. The Choir consists of 8 members and an Organist. The Layreaders are responsible for helping with the service and read the lessons - 10 men and women serve on this. Acolytes are scheduled to help with the services and these are made up of 12 boys and girls aged 8 and up. Ushers number 12. An adult Sunday School meets every Sunday at 9:45 AM and the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Episcopalian children meet every Sunday for combined Sunday School classes. Services are held every Sunday at 8:00 and 11:00 AM, also a Wednesday service is held at 10:00 AM.

FIRST UNITED METHODIST CHURCH OF CUERO

Methodist Church 1880's

The first preaching by an appointed Methodist minister in DeWitt County is credited to Reverend Joseph P. Snead who was assigned as a missionary to Texas by the Mississippi Annual Conference in 1840. He organized churches in Victoria, Port Lavaca, Gonzales, and Seguin, and held services at Concrete in 1841. The Concrete Methodist church was later established in 1847. In 1866 Concrete and all DeWitt County became a part of West Texas Conference (formerly Rio Grand Conference). The Cuero First Methodist Church was established on February 12, 1876 by trustees M.B. Rankin, Samuel Myers, Stephen Minot, John McCullough, and J.M. Austin with eight charter members. Reverend W.H.H. Biggs, while serving the Victoria Methodist Church, apparently laid the groundwork for a Methodist Church in Cuero.

West Texas Conference Journal of 1876, 1878 show appointments of J.W. Brown, J.F. Cook, and J.W. Vest to the Concrete Circuit. Cuero lists them as pastors for the same years. This shows that Cuero was part of the Concrete Circuit. 1880-1883 Journals list Cuero and Victoria as a charge, and in 1884 the appointment was listed as "Cuero Mission", J.H. Dibrell as pastor. In 1887 Cuero became the District Headquarters. In 1928 the District was moved to Yoakum.

The first place of worship owned by The Cuero Methodist Episcopal Church South was located at 407 East Morgan Avenue. The building and property were sold to the German Methodist Church in 1888. The present church site at 301 East Courthouse was bought in 1885, and the building was erected in 1886 while G.B. Shaw was pastor. That building is the upper story of the present sanctuary which is shaped in the form of a cross with beautiful Gothic windows of lead framed art glass. Minutes of the West Texas Conference of 1886 state that the Conference Session was held in the "beautiful new audience chambers" of The First Methodist Church of Cuero.

In May of 1901 property which is now 208 Hunt Street was bought by the trustees. This was used as the parsonage until 1911. In 1908 electricity was installed in the church, but coalburning stoves were still used for heating and three ceiling fans for cooling.

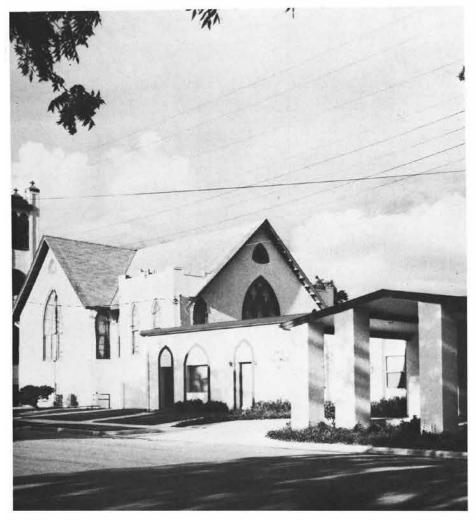

In 1910 the site of the present parsonage on Clinton Street was bequeathed to the church by Marietta Smith. The house was sold and moved to 515 East Reuss Blvd., and a new two-story frame parsonage was built in 1913. The parsonage was valued at $5,000 and the Church building at $7,000. Mrs. C.G. Smith became the first woman in 1922 elected to the official board as a steward. Reverend T.N. Barton was pastor. Just prior to 1922, Miss Edith Fuess had gone out as a foreign missionary of the church.

In 1929, when J.W. Black was pastor, the entire church building was raised and a basement was constructed underneath the building. The tall spire was removed, and a tall tower was built at the northeast corner with lower towers added at the other corners. In the basement were rooms for Sunday School classes, a kitchen, and two rest rooms. The exterior was stuccoed. The $15,000 debt for these repairs was not paid off until May 3, 1943 because of the effects of the depression. On April 20, 1929 a pipe organ was bought for $5,500. That debt was paid off in 1936. In 1933 the Reverend Wood H. Patrick, pastor from 1930 to 1933, made these remarks; "We are ending the best of three years here — a year trying in the extreme. Finances worry us but we have raised $70, more than last year. The use of weekly envelopes is to be stressed. Choir is improved, Sunday School is well organized, workers interested and prepared, attendance is not up the last years. Thirty members have left town with a net decrease of twenty. Debts embarrass us."

During Reverend T.K. Anderson's ministry in Cuero (1938-1942) the church membership began to grow. Cuero had a primary flying school to train pilots for World War II, and a number of young students and instructors attended church. In 1941 Cuero was put in the Corpus Christi District, where it is today. A Methodist Men's Class, started during Anderson's ministry, attracted 30 to 40 men.

In 1946, during the ministry of Ewart Watts, the church was refurnished and redecorated. New pews and new pulpit furniture were added. Much of the furniture was given as memorials to the boys who lost their lives in World War II: Willard Green, Harold Green, Kenneth Thigpen, John Burns Edgar, Sam Lane, Jr., and Richard Bednors.

The Educational Building was built in 1953

First United Methodist Church and Faith Fellowship Hall

when Reverend A.C. Peterson was pastor. Sunday School attendance averaged 80 and jumped to 120 the year it was completed. The value of the property at this time was $73,000. Additional property was purchased in 1955—the property south of the church known as the Annie Speed property. The church was equipped with central heat and air-conditioning in 1957. At this time a Miss Alice Halt was reported in premedical school preparing for work as a medical missionary, and James Miller was in a school of theology in Nashville.

In 1958, due to deterioration of supporting timbers of the upper floor, architects advised that the church building not be used until properly repaired. Services were held in Freund Chapel and in the Presbyterian Church. Trustees finally contracted with architects in Austin to make the necessary repairs to the church building and guarantee its safety.

In 1959 plans were adopted to build a new brick veneer parsonage for $21,577, using material from the old two-story frame parsonage. $5,800 of the debt was satisfied by the sale of a home willed to the church by Mrs. E.M. Wallace. The balance of this bank loan was paid by April 4, 1967.

Out of the General Conference Meeting in Dallas in April 1968 came The United Brethren and The Methodist Church merger — The United Methodist Church. During the late 60's and early 70's Cuero followed the national trend in a lowering of Sunday School and Church attendance. A Lay Witness Mission in 1972 stimulated the spiritual life of the church to a greater extent than any event in recent years.

In 1974, the Reverend and Mrs. Allen G. Roe were sent to Cuero. In 1976 when the church celebrated its 100th birthday, improvements had been made on the church, parsonage, and other property. The Sunday School Classes (adult, children, and youth) were going well, and one of the largest confirmation classes in many years had been received into the church on Christian Education Sunday, September 28, 1975.

Four days during March of 1976 were used to celebrate the 100th birthday of the Cuero United Methodist Church. On Sunday, March 14, 1976, at 11:00 A.M., the Reverend Ewart Watts was guest preacher. Special music was given by the choir. Pictures, deeds, and old wills were on display in the basement and a history booklet was available. On Tuesday, March 16, 1976, there was a musical celebration followed by a covered dish supper. On Thursday, March 18, 1976, a story night was held. Stories were put on tape and made available through the church library. On Sunday, March 21, 1976 at 11:00 A.M. Bishop Eugene O. Slater rededicated the church building and reconfirmed membership vows. At 1:00 P.M. recognition was given to members who had held 50 years or more membership in the Methodist Church.

During Reverend Roy Wold's pastorate (1978-1981), all church property was vastly improved. The parsonage was renovated. The interior of the sanctuary was completely repainted and the floors were revarnished. New red carpets were installed and new light fixtures were added. The pews were upholstered and padded in the same red color of the carpet. The interior of the basement was redone, and partitions were removed to make one large fellowship hall. All walls were paneled, ceilings refinished, and floors carpeted. An electric lift was installed on the east side of the church. The priceless stained glass windows were covered with clear impact plastic. On the west end of the Educational Building facing Clinton Street, a modern kitchen, a pastor's study, a secretarial office, a store room, and two rest rooms were built in 1981. In 1981, a historical marker was placed on the north side of the church by Texas Historical Commission.

During the pastorate of Reverend Robert Allen (1981-1985), a fellowship hall was built adjoining the 1981 addition with the kitchen opening through sliding doors into the new hall. Since the hall was built on faith that the cash would be there to pay for it when completed (and it was), the name Faith Fellowship Hall was adopted. On March 25, 1984, it was dedicated by Bishop Ernest Dixon. In 1982 an 8:30 worship service was started. During this period of time the United Methodist Men were rechartered after being disbanded in the 1960's.

During Reverend Kent Kinard's pastorate (1985-1990), the Educational Building was repainted inside and out, a complete new airconditioning and heating system was installed in the church, and new furniture was placed in the parsonage. In 1987, property at 209 East Morgan was bequeathed to the church by Mrs. Julia Adcock. This house is now used to house the CAMAL Center (Cuero Area Ministerial Alliance). This program helps in areas of groceries, utilities, and lodging, for those in need in the community. In September, 1986 the Church celebrated the 100th anniversary of the church building itself with a "Sweet Memory" Sunday. Video tapes made by church members on this occasion are in the Church Library. A Calling and Caring Ministry began in 1988 and is still active.

The Cuero United Methodist Church has grown from 8 members in 1876 to over 325 members in 1989. It has been served by 50 pastors during that time. The 1902-1903 records list three active organizations working in the church: The Woman's Home Missionary Society, The Sunday School, and The Epworth League. In 1989, active organizations include: Youth Groups — Junior and Senior EMPS, United Methodist Men, United Methodist Women, Cooperative Sunday School, Adult Sunday School, Choirs — Chancel and Bell, Council on Ministries, and Calling and Caring Ministry.

A complete history of this church was published in 1976 to celebrate 100 years of church history. This booklet was compiled from records and from a history written by Myron Bass, long time historian.

HISTORICAL HIGHLIGHTS OF FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CUERO, TEXAS

T56

Presbyterians have been in America since before 1625, but the first General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America was convened in 1789 in Philadelphia.

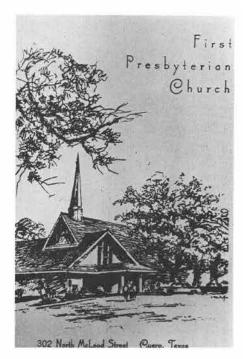

At the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861, a great division occurred on the issue of slavery with the churches in the South taking the name Presbyterian Church of the U.S. and those in the North the name of Presbyterian Church U.S.A.

Three other groups — the United Presbyterians, the Reformed Presbyterians and the Cumberland Presbyterians — remained independent.

In 1988, all Presbyterian churches were reunited and from June, 1988 — June, 1989, the United Presbyterian Churches U.S.A. will celebrate their Bi-Centennial.

First Presbyterian Church of Cuero will observe the Bi-Centennial to honor its beginnings and founders and to recognize the advancements made through the years 1849-1989.

On July 8, 1949, Rev. William Blair, a missionary evangelist for this part of DeWitt County, met with neighbors of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Peebles to organize a Presbyterian Church. Because the meeting was held under a large oak tree on the Peebles plantation, the church was called the Live Oak Presbyterian Church. The six members who signed the covenant and elected two elders were Elizabeth Calhoun Smith Barnhill, Miles Squire Bennet, Bathsheba Bennet, Mary C. Trigg Peebles, James Norman Smith, and Elizabeth Morehead Smith. The elders named were J.N. Smith and Miles S. Bennet. Samuel Bennet, the three month old son of the Bennets, was also baptized. This Live Oak Church became one of the first seven charter churches of Presbytery of Western Texas.

Presbyterian Church, 1989.

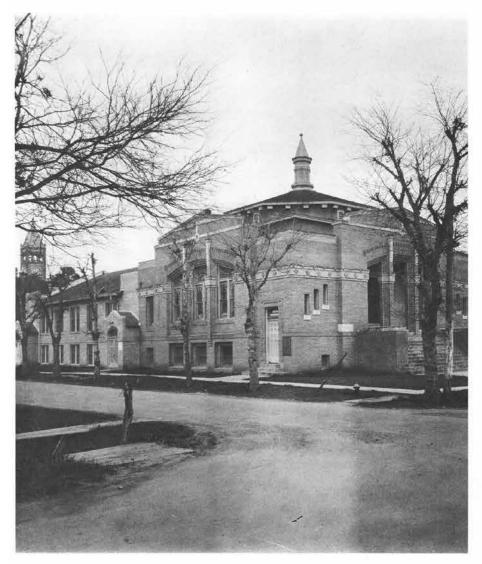

In August, 1851, with the location of DeWitt County seat in Clinton, the Live Oak Church moved there and met first in a grove of trees, then in homes, or in the courthouse. On August 26, 1860, Clinton Live Oak Church dedicated its own house of worship.

A second church was chartered in Concrete, September 16, 1855, on the east side of the Guadalupe River. The fifteen members of Concrete Presbyterian Church include Mrs. Lucy Arnold, Mrs. Sarah Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. Miles S. Bennet (who now lived nearer Concrete), Samuel Cunningham, Dr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Hodge, Dr. Francis J. Lynch, Mr. and Mrs. James Priestley, William Priestley, Mrs. P.H. Smith, Mrs. James Wallis, Miss Antoinette Wallis and Louis Weddington. Dr. Hodge and Dr. Lynch were elected elders.

In the spring of 1876, the county seat for DeWitt County was moved from Clinton to Cuero. A Presbyterian Church was organized in Cuero October 13, 1878, with nineteen charter members. They shared a meeting house with the Episcopal members. These charter members were Mr. and Mrs. John Anderson, Mrs. Elizabeth Baker, Charles Dickerson, Mr. and Mrs. Festus F. Farnsworth, Adolph Weisenberg, Dr. W.R. Wallace, Mrs. Virginia F. Smith, Mrs. C.A. Sidall, Miss Adaline Ryan, Miss L.C. Rutherford, Miss Elizabeth Ogsbury, John McGee, R.E. McGee, Mr. and Mrs. J.C. Mitchell, Mrs. Nannie Lackey, and Mrs. Annie Hamilton. Dr. Wallace, J.D. Anderson, and Festus Farnsworth were elected elders

In 1883, Live Oak Church of Clinton, Concrete Presbyterian Church and Cuero Presbyterian Church merged to form First Presbyterian Church of Cuero. The Clinton frame building was dismantled, floated across the River, and rebuilt on the present site. A few years later an "ell" was added for Sunday School rooms.

A storm on August 20, 1886, destroyed the town of Indianola, and on April 2, 1887, members of the Indianola Presbyterian Church were added to that of First Presbyterian in

In 1916, a brick sanctuary was built, debt free, costing $13,529.00. The Ladies Aid Society purchased a pipe organ to replace the handpumped organ used in the old frame building. The brick Educational Building was added in 1925.

On June 18, 1939, nineteen members of the Thomaston Presbyterian Church merged with the Cuero congregation.

In 1949, the Education Building was remodeled in time to celebrate the Centennial of First Presbyterian Cuero Church which now numbered 260 members.

In 1960, a brick manse was built across the street from the church. (The street name had been changed from Depot to McLeod, in honor of Dr. Wm. A. McLeod.)

Contracts for a new brick church, to cost about $200,000, were drawn up on April 18, 1969, and groundbreaking ceremonies were held April 27, The congregation moved into its new church on March 8, 1970. The church, with a new pipe organ, was dedicated on March 28, 1971. By December 15, 1974, the building debt was paid in full and the old brick church was moved from the corner.

In 1981, the Fellowship Hall was remodeled to add a nursery, a loft for three Sunday School classrooms, and to improve the acoustics. The memorial windows from the former church buildings were used in the new sanctuary and in the Fellowship Hall.

It was not until 1973 that women were elected as officers in Cuero, First Presbyterian Church. The first elders were Mrs. Virginia Lewis, Mrs. Virginia McCurdy, and Mrs. Anna Schorre. In 1975, two deacons were elected. They were Mrs. Elizabeth Murphree and Mrs. Joyce Ware. In 1983, Mrs. Evelyn Cates was elected to the Board of Trustees.

Thirteen pastors have served First Presbyterian Church from 1883-1989. They are these: William Edward Caldwell (1883-1885), A.H.P. McCurdy (1886-1889), Jeromo P. Robertson (1889-1901), William T. Abrenbeck (1901-1908), J.L. Green (1908-1919), W.A. McLeod (1919-1947), Sam B. Hill (1948-1950), John P. Minter (1950-1954), Marshall W. Doggett, Jr. (1955-1962), Walter C. Guin (1963-1967), C. Rogers McLane (1967-1976), J.W. Ware (1976-1977), Harvey L. Friedel (1978-present).

Our present membership is 179.

ST. MARK'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

Lutheran Parsonage

German Lutheran Church

The early records state that "In 1880, Mr. George L. Koch, a leader and a God fearing man", organized the German Lutherans in the small town of Cuero with the purpose of obtaining a pastor. Pastor G. Stricker from Meyersville was sent to organize the "Evangelical Lutheran St. Mark's Gemeinde." This took place in July of 1886. The group adopted a constitution that had been written by Pastor Stricker. A Council was elected. Mr. George Koch, President, Mr. Wm. Gerloff, Secretary, Mrs. George Dietze, Treasurer, Mr. George Marquardt and Mr. J.F. Hamm. In addition to the five elected to serve as the Church Council the other Charter Members were: M. Peschke, Val. Hardt, Theo. Eberhardt, Louise Gohmert, Heinrich Wieland, Adolph Abel, Henrietta Abel, G.C. Letsch, August Dietze, Louis Peschke, Carl Rudolph, Victor Mueller, E. Domann, Friedrich Kastner, W. Bahlmann, Wilhelm Domann, Heinrich Moehlmann, Henrietta Palmie, Marie Friese, Marie Marquardt, August Gohlke, Marie Mader, Pauline Keller. Mrs. Chas. Kleinecke and Mary R. Kleinecke.

Pastor C. Buttermann came as Pastor of St. Mark's on Christmas Day 1886, and was installed on January 23, 1887. Services were then held regularly every Sunday afternoon in the Episcopal Church, and a Sunday School was organized with Mr. C.F. Gerhardt as superintendent, on February 20, 1887. At the first congregational meeting on October 9, 1887, action was taken to buy a lot for a building. Mr. Dietze was authorized to purchase a suitable lot, which resulted in the purchase of a lot on the corner of Esplanade and Live Oak Streets from a Mrs. Maria Hausmann of Meyersville for $375.

Soon after the arrival of Pastor Cornelius Ziesmer in December of 1888, the congregation employed Mr. Charlie Schley, a contractor, to draw up plans for a building. Construction on the new church was begun on May 5, 1889 and the first service was held in it on August 4, 1889. The large bell was purchased by sales of potted plants and flowers by Mrs. Caroline Fuhrman," whose name is inscribed on the bell.

After three years of existence the congregation still had no parsonage and considered building on to the church, but, as one records notes "fortunately decided not to do this!" Again Mrs. Fuhrmann came to the rescue. She offered to build a parsonage on a lot adjacent to the church at a cost of $450.00. Her proposition for the congregation to pay her $4 a month for a period of five years was gratefully accepted on September 8, 1889. Also, in 1889, Dr. L.C. Kleinecke, a local dentist, was elected Sunday School Superintendent, a post he was to hold for nearly sixty years.

St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Church 1990

Pastor Ziesmer died on February 24, 1894 and during the following months the congregation was served by Pastors E. Dziewas, Theo. Traubel, John Mgebrof and F. Apfelbach. On July 22, 1894, Pastor Hurtzig was installed as Pastor. Pastor Reinhold Schubert was called on December 27, 1896 after Pastor Hurtzig left to recuperate from malaria. Pastor Wilhelm Utesch was called and came to Cuero on July 3, 1902. The English language was introduced into the Sunday School and evening services and were well attended.

In 1911 a committee was appointed to "enlarge the church." A new pipe organ was installed.

On September 16, 1917 Pastor A.A. Hahn was called from Illinois, and was installed as the sixth pastor of St. Mark's on October 21, 1917. Beginning in October two services each month were conducted in the German language for the benefit of the older members who "were not too familiar" with the English language. Pastor Frank Eberhardt was called after the resignation of Pastor Hahn in 1920. He arrived in Cuero on April 16, 1921.

At a meeting on January 7, 1923, a vote was taken to build a new church. On June 24 it was noted that the Rose property adjoining the Knights of Pythias and the Kobitz property was bought for $831. Also during 1924, the first Daily Vacation Bible School was introduced, covering four weeks of the month of June.

In 1926, Pastor Eberhardt was approached by Dr. S.P. Boothe with a proposition that the Texas Synod purchase his hospital for $25,000. The proposition was accepted, and caused Pastor Eberhardt to devote much of his time during the next two years to the securing of funds to pay for the hospital. During Pastor Eberhardt's leaves, Pastors M.A. Ritzen, J.C. Pfenninger, Immanuel Bowoldt and P. Ilgen served the congregation. Pastor Eberhardt died on January 17, 1930 from complications of an appendectomy.

Pastor John W. Kern was called and served until 1937. Then Pastor Otto Oelke of Ander served as Supply Pastor until Pastor A.A. Hahn was called to be pastor of St. Mark's for a second time.

After many years of planning, a new church was authorized in 1939 and an architect was chosen, Harvey P. Smith of San Antonio. The new church was dedicated on Christmas Eve of 1939.

In 1951 Pastor Hahn tended his resignation but it was rejected. It was finally accepted on June 8, 1952. Pastor John A. Jacobs a native of Goliad, was called in on July 13, 1952 and served until July 1, 1967. Pastor Jacobs and his family had to live across the street in Mrs. Houston's house until a new parsonage was completed.

Pastor Vernon Breitkreutz was appointed Vice-Pastor during the vacancy before Pastor Hubert A. Hanson was called on June 28, 1967. In 1972 Mr. Jim Drury was employed as Lay Assistant to the pastor.

In October of 1972 an Official Texas Historical Marker was dedicated. Pastor Hanson retired from St. Mark's on September 20, 1987 and Rev. Alfred O. Hoerig became Pastor on September 1, 1988.

ST. MICHAEL'S PARISH SINCE 1875

T58

The history of St. Michael's Catholic parish in Cuero dates from the foundation of the town. When the first train came into Cuero in the spring of 1873, several Catholic families were already in residence. In the year 1874-75 a movement to establish a Catholic Church in Cuero was started by six families: Mrs. Mary Martha O'Brien, John Welch, W.H. Graham, Marie Demonet, Herman Nitsche, and Pius Fev.

In 1875 the Cuero Land and Immigration Company donated Lot 6 in Block 11 in the town of Cuero to the "Roman Catholics for the construction of a church," the Deed being dated May 13th of that year. On that same date the first Bishop of the new Diocese of San Antonio, Anthony Dominie Pellicer, decreed the erection of a parish in Cuero.

The Catholic families in Cuero proceeded to secure funds to build a church. A dedication souvenir of St. Michael's Church presented by Rev. Francis Pallanche on March 31st, 1931 commemorating the completion of the present church, state: ". . . back in 1875 when this parish was founded, two zealous ladies, Mmes. Michael O'Brien and John Welch, solicited subscriptions from merchants until enough money was secured to finish the church and purchase an organ." Rev. V.L. Manci, a member of the Jesuit Order, stationed in Indianola, served the missions of Cuero, Texana, and Port Lavaca, and he encouraged and assisted the Catholics in Cuero during that year, guiding them in building the first church. He came from Indianola to Cuero frequently to baptize Catholics of the area and say Mass in their homes. The first Baptismal records in the parish date back to 1875, while Marriage records date from 1876, and Confirmation and Funeral from 1881.

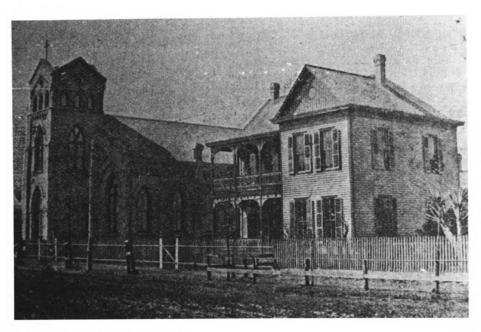

Before the end of 1875, several more Catholic families lent their efforts in raising funds to build the first Catholic Church in Cuero: Mrs. Johanna Marshall, Frank Marie, C.L. Stadtler, Frederick Flick and M.D. Monserrate.

A small frame church was completed in 1876. It was approximately 27 by 54 feet, wood construction with 1 by 12 outside siding and pine flooring. The name of St. Michael in honor of the Archangel Michael was chosen for the church. Rev. V.L. Manci became the first resident Pastor of St. Michael's in 1876.

Soon after the completion of St. Michael's Church in 1876, Rev. Manci made plans to open a school. In 1877 after the purchase of land and a building in the rear of the church, St. Michael's School was established with the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word of San Antonio as the first teaching Sisters.

As more immigrants of the Catholic faith came to settle in Cuero, the original frame church of St. Michael's became inadequate. It was decided in 1886 to erect a larger church, and the foundation was laid in the spring of 1886, and the cornerstone on June 10th by Rev. J. Ferra, Pastor.

On August 19th, 1886, the storm which destroyed Indianola struck Cuero, and according to the Cuero Bulletin "The Catholic Church (built in 1876) was lifted from its blocks, set out onto the sidewalk and badly twisted." The foundation of a larger church had been laid some months earlier, but difficulties arose, and the foundation was left standing until 1892. In that year, Rev. J. Sheehan, the new Pastor, is said to have brought new life to the parish and completed the building of St. Michael's second church. The Cuero Star in its October, 1895 edition carried a picture of the brick church on its front page and stated it to be "the handsomest in the city." The church measured 40 by 90 feet, a white brick structure of Gothic style architecture. The bricks were donated. The cost amounted to $6010 exclusive of the cost of the foundation. The church was dedicated on September 29th, 1892 by Most Rev. J. Neraz, Bishop of San Antonio.

After the new brick church was dedicated, the frame church was sold to the Second Baptist Church of Cuero with some furnishings for $300. The church was torn down, moved to their site and rebuilt by members of the congregation. This church continues in use today known as Macedonia Baptist Church. The original auditorium with sanctuary and Communion Railing remain basically the same as constructed in 1876. The iron cross made from a wagon wheel which was placed on the steeple of the first church is now bolted on the outside front of the present St. Michael's.

In the fall of 1894 a two-story Rectory of frame construction was built next to the church replacing a house where the resident Priests had resided up to that time. Rev. J. Sheehan was Pastor. Records in the files of the church indicate that $900 was borrowed to apply to the erection of this Rectory. Trustees of the church at this time were: C.L. Stadtler, Wm. Hasdorff, Joseph Sheppard, Chas. Kossibel, V.J. Grunder, and W.H. Graham.

In 1902 the tower of the brick church was completed at a cost of $485. It was built by Chas. Kossibel. Upon the completion of the tower, a one thousand pound bell was placed there in memory of Mrs. C. Stadtler. At this time Rev. Sheehan donated the main altar. The pulpit was donated by Mmes. J. Muti and J. Welch. The Stations of the Cross were obtained by Rev. M.J. Mertes in 1904; each Station donated by individual members of the Congregation. The bell and Stations of the Cross are in the present church.

In 1912 under the direction of Rev. G.J. Hendricks, a two-story frame school was built with a parish hall on the upper floor. From the beginning of the first St. Michael's School in 1877 until 1927 all grades through High School were taught.

In the 1923 religious census of the city, it was indicated that there were many Mexicans of the Catholic faith in the city who for language difficulties did not attend St. Michael's. Rev. Francis Pallanche, resident Pastor of St. Michael's, decided to provide a church for them. A block of land was donated by W.H. Graham and funds were secured from St. Michael's parishioners and friends as well as the Mexican people for the erection of this church. The church cost $6200 including the bell, furniture and fixtures. It was named Our Lady of Guadalupe, and the first Mass was celebrated there on February 22nd, 1925 by Rev. Pallanche. The new church was taken charge of by the Dominican Order, and was solemnly blessed by Most Rev. A.J. Drossaerts, DD., Bishop of San Antonio on May 4th, 1925.

Even after the building of Our Lady of Guadalupe, it was only a short while before it became evident that St. Michael's brick church had become too small for the Congregation. Since the church showed signs of decay, it was decided to build a larger church, and by January of 1930 definite steps were taken to draw plans and receive bids for a new church. The last Mass was celebrated in the brick church on April 25th, 1930, and from that date until the completion of the present church, services were held in St. Michael's Hall above the school.

The laying of the Cornerstone of the new church took place on the morning of August 6th, 1930 with Most Rev. A.J. Drossaerts, D.D., Archbishop of San Antonio officiating. The inscription on the Cornerstone reads: Domus Dei at porta Coeli A.D. 1930 (House of God and Gate of Heaven) with the names of the Pastor, Rev. Francis Pallanche, the Architect, F.B. Gaenslen, and the Builder, Falbo & Guido Construction Co. A solemn High Mass was celebrated at the entrance. The Council of St. Michael's at this time, having been elected by the parishioners in 1928, consisted of: Victor J. Grunder, Jos. C. Kossibel, Michael Byrne, Wm. P. Meissner, Stanley Kulawik, Jos. L. Sheppard, and L.W. Sciba.

St. Michael's present church was completed in 1931. It is 63 feet by 117 feet, is faced with tapestry brick, backed with common brick, built along the Romanesque plan of Architecture. The trimmings and belfry are of tamped artificial stone. It cost approximately $67,000 with furnishings. St. Michael's was dedicated on March 31st, 1931 by Archbishop Drossaerts of San Antonio, and a solemn High Mass was celebrated. The Cuero Record in its account at the time of the dedication recites: ". . . the beautiful new Catholic Church of St. Michael's Parish, is an event which sets a new mark in community church history for it gives to Cuero an edifice the match of which can be found in few towns of the size in the state."

Rev. Pallanche died while Pastor of St. Michael's in July of 1932, and he was buried on July 26, 1932 in the sanctuary of the church.

In 1937 Rev. Wm. Jansen came to Cuero as Pastor of St. Michael's where he was to remain for twenty-nine years. During these years, he paid off the debt left on the parish by the building of the present church. He built the present modern school and convent which were dedicated on September 18th, 1955. In the summer of 1962 work began on a new Rectory for the priests. It was completed in January of 1963. During Rev. Jansen's pastorate, men who served on the parish board were: Judge Stephen Hebert, John Berning, Barney Byrne, Henry Koenig, Gordon Kyle, Dr. F.W. Miller, Charles Riebschlaeger, Dr. Wm. Grunder, John J. Bell, Rudy Fuchs, and Joe Hoffman.

Upon the retirement of Rev. Jansen, Rev. John Flynn was named Pastor in April, 1966. He directed the remodeling of the sanctuary of the church as well as air-conditioning of the parish buildings. He doubled the size of St. Michael's School adding four classrooms, a music room and teachers' lounge.

In the fall of 1972, ground was broken for a parish hall, Rev. Peter Higgins, Pastor. The new hall was dedicated on March 25th, 1973. St. Michael's Hall is a steel building 60 by 100 feet with stage and kitchen. An annex meeting room was added in 1978 under the pastorate of Msgr. Henry Herbst who came to St. Michael's in June of 1974.

On May 18th, 1975 St. Michael's parish celebrated the Centennial of its founding. The Most Rev. Francis J. Fury, Archbishop of San Antonio was Principal Celebrant and Homilist of the opening Mass. A history of the parish from 1875 was written for the occasion.

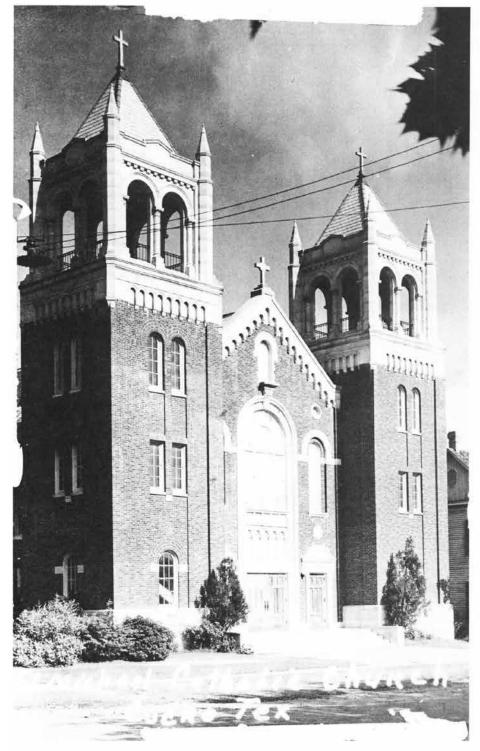

On May 23rd, 1976 an official Texas Historical Marker was dedicated at St. Michael's Church.

In September of 1977 a Centennial Celebration of the founding of St. Michael's School was held at St. Michael's Hall with particular recognition to the Sisters of Incarnate Word and Blessed Sacrament of Victoria who have staffed the school continuously since 1916.

During 1978 stained glass windows were installed in St. Michael's Church donated by individual parishioners and Msgr. Herbst. In the main auditorium of the church, the windows depict the salvation history and the four evangelists. In the sanctuary, the depict the Eucharist. At the side entrance the windows are the two American Saints and the Sacred Heart and the Immaculate Heart of Mary. In the choir the large center window is the Archangel Michael and the two smaller windows are the Archangels Gabriel and Raphael. The high windows at the front and rear of the church depict church symbols.

In 1981 Msgr. Herbst, realizing the difficulties of continuing to operate a Catholic School financially, started a School Endowment Fund with a gift of $10,000. Today, contributions to the fund have made it possible to continue to provide a Catholic education for the children of St. Michael's and the community. In 1984 a Kindergarten room was added.

The Diocese of Victoria in Texas was established on May 29th, 1982 from part of the Archdiocese of San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Houston, at which time St. Michael's parish came under the new Diocese. Msgr. Herbst was appointed Vicar General of the new Diocese.

From the very beginning of St. Michael's parish, the church societies have played an important role. St. Michael's Altar Society dates back to 1875 when the ladies worked to raise money for the first church. Today this society provides all the requisites of Divine Worship and assists with other needs in the parish. Cuero Council 1682 of the Knights of Columbus was organized on May 4th, 1914 and support local and national Christian education and charitable activities. Court St. Michael No. 347 of the Catholic Daughters of the Americas was instituted September 22nd, 1918. They assist in areas of need at the church and school as well as support community, diocesan and national projects. St. Michael's PTC was first organized on October 29th, 1931. The members work with the teachers and pastor for the special needs of the school in financial aid and personal assistance. The newest society is St.

Michael's Outreach organized on August 27, 1986 for the purpose of rendering personal service to parishioners in special need.

Since the beginning of the parish in 1875 and the completion of the first church in 1876, lay people have served as organists and choir directors. Mrs. Louis Sciba served as organist and assistant at St. Michael's for forty-two years, longer than any other person. Since 1972 Lay Ministers of the Eucharists have assisted in the distribution of Communion at Masses and in the nursing homes, hospital and homes of the disabled. Mr. Ben E. Prause was the first Lay Minister of the Eucharist. Lay people also serve as Lectors at church services, and Confraternity of Christian Doctrine teachers.

In 1989 St. Michael's parish has 452 registered families. In 1909 there were 45 families; in 1930, 153 families; in 1951, 210 families; and in 1974, 425 families. The parish plant consists of the church dedicated in 1931; a modern school teaching Kindergarten and grades one through eight, and CCD classes for High School students and Catholic young people attending public school; Sisters' convent; Rectory; and parish hall and annex.

A HISTORY OF THE HOSPITALS OF CUERO T59

In an era when hospitals in Texas are failing at an alarming rate it is hard to believe that at one time the small town of Cuero boasted of three privately owned hospitals. Two of the three were fully accredited medical facilities. The third was an osteopathic hospital. Brochures published by each of the medical hospitals give interesting accounts of their beginnings.

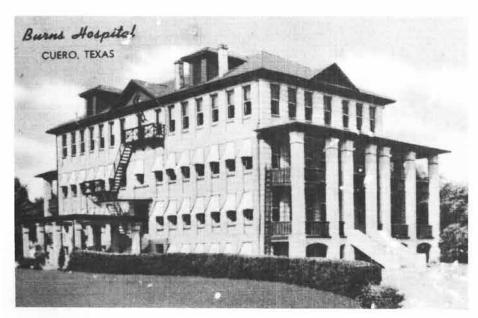

Salome Hospital

The story of the hospital which eventually became the Cuero Hospital Foundation is closely connected with the early history of Cuero. About 1872, Dr. Joseph Martin Reuss, a physician of the port of Indianola, Texas, opened a drug store in Cuero. After the hurricane of 1875 which devastated Indianola, he moved to Cuero and began his practice there. In 1892 his youngest son, Dr. Joe Henry Reuss, established a temporary hospital called, for whatever reason, "Salome", in the upper story of the Catholic school. It soon became inadequate, and the good citizens of Cuero, notably the ladies, undertook the task of raising funds to build a new hospital. A Hospital Association was formed to oversee the process. In 1893 the state of Texas granted a charter for the hospital and a building site was purchased from the Schleicher estate for $700. Funds, collected from individuals and businesses, entertainment and mite boxes, slowly accrued. In 1894 the new "Salome" hospital was erected on what was known as "Factory Hill". Dr. J.H. Reuss was named manager and superintendent. In 1904 he moved to Dallas where he remained in practice until 1911 when he returned to Cuero. He then purchased the "Salome" from the Hospital Association and in 1916 erected a new building which he called Reuss Memorial Hospital. It was intended to be a lasting memorial to his father, Dr. J.M. Reuss, who had died in 1909.

Newspapers accounts of the time are fulsome in praise of the new facility. It is described as having what we now call "state of the art" accommodations and equipment. Dr. Reuss enjoyed flourishing practice in the new building until his untimely death in 1919.

Burns Hospital

Thereafter the hospital saw many changes.

The hospital was conducted as an open staff hospital by the estate until its purchase by Dr. Sterling Boothe who named it the "Boothe Hospital." In 1936 Dr. Boothe offered it to the Lutheran Church which, after some deliberation, accepted the offer. It then became the Lutheran Hospital Reuss Memorial. The Lutheran Board ran the hospital until 1940 when it was leased to Dr. A.J. Bohman, who purchased it in 1944.

Dr. Bohman continued to operate the hospital up to 1957 when he arranged to convert it to a foundation. It was known as the Cuero Hospital Foundation until 1971 when it was closed. All monies and assets of the foundation were given to the new Cuero Community Hospital in the names of the Bohman Clinic partners, Dr. A.J. Bohman, Dr. F.A. Prather, Dr. O.E. Hall, Jr. and Dr. R.R. Reese, and the board of directors of the foundation. At that time Mr. Fain McDougal was chairman of the board of the foundation. Other members were Mr. Nathan Post, Mr. William Ferguson, Mr. E.T. Summers, Jr. and Mr. Jimmie Reiffert. The Cuero Hospital Foundation thus became the largest contributor to the new facility.

The Burns Hospital was the second of the medical facilities of Cuero. It was opened in 1911 as a private, non-sectarian establishment by Dr. John W. Burns and was named in honor of his father, Columbus Burns. Before opening his own hospital, Dr. Burns had cared for patients in the old "Salome" hospital.

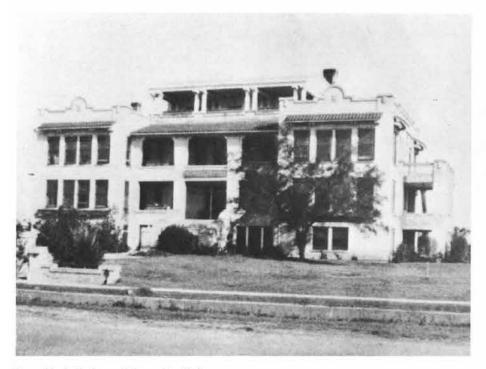

The Burns Hospital brochure, published in 1935, describes the many modern conveniences available, from patient rooms to treatment rooms. In an interesting aside, the pamphlet notes that a four day stay in the hospital, plus use of the delivery room was offered to expectant mothers for the sum of $17.00.

Dr. Arthur Burns and Dr. Gillett Burns, sons of the founder, maintained the hospital for many years. In 1934 it was sold to the Sisters of the Incarnate Word and Blessed Sacrament of Shriner. They continued to manage it until 1972 when it, too, was torn down. Dr. Gillett Burns was associated with the hospital through 1958. Thereafter, Dr. Harold High, Dr. John Davis and Dr. L.B. Landry were on staff at the hospital.

Cuero's third hospital, the osteopathic hospital, was owned and operated by Dr. Carl R. Stratton and his sons, Dr. Richard L. Stratton and Dr. James A. Stratton. It offered osteopathic services in its own facility from its establishment in 1956 until the opening of the Cuero Community Hospital.

The Cuero Community Hospital opened its doors to patients for the first time on September 8, 1970. It was at once a beginning and an end: the beginning of a new hospital, the culmination of many years of hard work on the part of a number of the fine citizens of the area.

In 1964 the State Board of Health found the city's old hospitals inadequate. Cuero citizens immediately reacted to the situation. A steering committee was organized and meetings were held. The architectural firm of Page, Southerland and Page of Austin, who specialized in designing hospitals, were consulted. They proposed that a hospital district be set up. This was done with the final proposal settling upon an area composed principally of DeWitt County portions of the Cuero, Meyersville, and Westhoff school districts, plus sections of the Concrete, Stratton, Five Mile, and Meyersville voting precincts and the Bear Creek voting precinct. Voters approved the hospital district in an October 30, 1965 election.

The next step was to raise the money for the hospital. Government grants, known as Hill-Burton funds were available in the amount of $850,000. They were, however, contingent on matching funds being raised. In April, 1966 passage of a $750,000 bond issue took care of that. The State Board of Health then approved the proposal and the new hospital was on its way to being built. Additional funds of $200,000 were raised through private donations. All of the existing hospitals were closed upon completion of the new hospital. Physicians, personnel, and patients were transferred to the new facility.

Members of the original Board of Directors of the hospital were: Mr. Clifton Weber, President, Mr. Howard Keinecke, Mrs. Patricia Leske, Mr. Dewey Henderson, and Mr. Dewey Schorre. Mr. Riley Aldrich was the first administrator, Sister M. Lucilla Donnelly, director of nurses.

The Cuero Community Hospital was built just outside the city limits of Cuero on the Yoakum highway. It was described as a completely modern facility, boasting the most upto-date equipment. The twenty acre site provided for adequate parking for the 92 bed hospital.

In 1990 the hospital will celebrate its twentieth anniversary. It is still a first-rate facility which, through struggling with the same problems which face many rural hospitals, continues to provide quality medical care for the citizens of the district. Present administrator of the hospital is Mr. Larry Krupala. He has been associated with the hospital since 1970. Mr. Krupala is a member of the Texas State Board of Health, treasurer of the Texas Hospital Association, Chairman of the American Hospital Association Rural Hospital Governing Council and a member of the American Hospital Association House of Delegates.

The annual audit of the hospital, conducted by an independent auditing firm, revealed the Cuero Community Hospital to be "very, very strong for a rural hospital." The hospital is approved by the Joint Committee on Accreditation of Hospitals.

Salome Hospital

The first Salome Hospital was founded in 1894 and occupied the second story of the St. Michael's Academy in the 300 block of East Church Street just to the rear of the Catholic Church. It was established by Drs. J.M. and J.H. Reuss. There were accommodations for male and female patients in separate wards and private rooms. The wards contained from twelve to fifteen beds. The Hospital Fund Association maintained a certain number of beds which were free to needy patients. The hospital employed two professional nurses, had water connections and modern conveniences. The Sisters of Charity oversaw the kitchen.

In a October 1895 letter from Bertha Reuss to her sister Alfreda, she stated "Josie (J.H. Reuss) had completed surgery the day before at the Salome on a young girl confined to her bed over a year and ailing fifteen years. Seven doctors were present, several from the county, to see the operation. There are eight patients in the hospital, all surgical patients and several waiting for rooms."

Dr. J.M. Reuss retired in September 1895 after fifty years of medical practice. His son continued at the hospital for a number of years. The need for a larger institution was noted and a Hospital Association was organized with the following officers: Mrs. John Welch, president; Mrs. H. Hitchens, vice-president; Mrs. Otto Buchel, treasurer; and Mrs. W.R. Rathbone, secretary. Initiation fees and nickel collections during the first month brought in $34.75. A charter was applied for and granted on Feb. 6, 1893, by the state of Texas. A building site was purchased for $700 from the Schleicher Estate. Some other members of the association were Mrs. Gus Tips of Runge, Mrs. Oscar Reuss, Mrs. Schleicher, Mrs. Anna Flick, Mrs. Bates, Mrs. Crain, Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Vahldieck, Mrs. S. Lee Kyle, Mrs. Luther, Miss Bertha Reuss, Mrs. John Wofford, Miss Alma Froebese, Mrs. Otto Staerker, Mrs. Rudolph Kleberg, Miss Lizzie Kyle and Mrs. Theo. Reiffert.

The nickel collections from members and from boxes placed in various business houses were continued. Other fund raising events included a children's concert at Neil Schultz residence conducted by Miss Neelie Schultz with proceeds of $1.05 raised. Those participating were Misses Neelie, Jessie and İvy Schultz, Ella Nagel, Winnie and Dotrie Staerker, Ruby Swain and Masters Emil Staerker, Joe Flick and Richard Kunitz. A children's masked ball was held and raised $22.45. A patchwork quilt was to be given away to the collector securing the largest amount of donations. Each collector was to make a 12" square to be made into this quilt. Unfortunately the recipient of the quilt is unknown.

In the spring of 1897 the organization found itself in position to build. A building committee was elected with Dr. J.H. Reuss as manager and superintendent and Dr. D.B. Blake as sanitary inspector. All Cuero physicians pledged their support. The hospital was completed and the name remained Salome. The hospital was located at the end of Morgan Avenue and was situated on a slope of hill. A news clipping states "The hospital is a large two-story structure and surrounded by large oak trees, an ideal place for such an institution. Miss Orrell is matron and in her absence, W.H. Powell is in charge. The place requires five trained nurses who are kept busy most of the time. They are Misses Norton of Schulenburg, Neal of Runge, Bass of Wrightsboro, Slavitsch of Beeville and Hohn of Cheapside. The patients rooms are equipped with neat iron bedsteads, while the linen is faultless and the whole is scrupulously clean and good enough for the most fastidious. The operating room is well equipped with surgical instruments, irregators, sterilizers and heating apparatus. In all rooms of the building there are electric call bells arranged near beds for the use of the patients." The hospital was self-supporting to a degree in that it had chickens, a garden and it's own cows.

Dr. Reuss left Cuero in 1904 to move to Dallas. He returned in 1911 and resumed his work at Salome. When he became head of the medical department of the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railroad he decided to build a larger hospital. In 1916 he realized his lifelong dream and opened the Reuss Memorial Hospital as a memory to his father.

The Salome Hospital was sold in the late 1920's to Rollie Simon and ceased as a medical institution.

BRAYTON FLYING FIELD

In 1939 as Nazi German commenced its conquest of Europe and the Japanese Empire accelerated its military aggression in Asia and the Pacific, the United States recognized an immediate need for thousands of trained aircraft pilots — many more than could be trained at military fields alone. The government turned for help to a system of civilian contract flying schools.

Cuero Mayor J.T. Newman and Chamber of Commerce President Sherrod Harris conceived the idea of locating such a civilian pilot training school in Cuero. They contacted Clyde E. Brayton, veteran pilot whose first license (1926-1931) had been signed by air pioneer Orville Wright. On December 31, 1941, Brayton flew into Cuero to look over a proposed site. He liked what he saw and an agreement was reached. The voters passed a bond issue to purchase land for the field and on January 28, 1941, the City purchased 500 acres about one and a half miles north of the City from Kos Morgan and Frank Kunetka. The land was leased to Brayton and construction was started immediately.

The first class of student pilots, Class 41-H, was enrolled in mid-March, 1941. Thereafter new classes reported every five weeks. Army Air Corps cadets came to the field as well as enlisted men, Air Corps officers, and West Point cadets. Each class required ground school, physical training, and 65 hours flying time. At its peak a staff of 550 civilians and 100 military men trained the aspiring pilots. The first women mechanics used by the Air Corps were employed at Brayton Field. During the life of the field, Brayton trained 6,611 student pilots who flew a total of 335,000 hours. The first 35,000 hours were flown in Stearman PT-17's and the last 300,000 hours in Fairchild PT19's. Brayton Field received numerous awards for safety and meritorious service including, in 1943, the Safety Award from the Aeronautical Training Society for flying the most hours with the fewest accidents.

Cuero enjoyed perhaps its greatest prosperity during the years Brayton Field was in full operation. At its peak Brayton's annual payroll in excess of $1,000,000.00 was the largest in the city. Many Cuero homeowners rented rooms to one or more civilian instructors, officers, mechanics or dependents. Although merchandise was scarce during the war local stores were crowded with shoppers. The City's first bus service was organized to transport students and employees from Brayton Field to town and back. Cuero was a beneficiary of the nation-wide shift of population from the north to the south and west as many students, instructors, and officers met and married DeWitt County girls and later returned to make their permanent homes here. Cuero's population grew from 5,474 in 1940 to 7,498 in 1950.

Brayton Field ceased operations in August, 1944.

CUERO ORGANIZATIONS

The Cuero Community Hospital Auxiliary

In the beginning . . . there was a dream! A dream of a new hospital to serve the community of Cuero, and a group of dedicated men and women to serve that hospital. The Cuero Community Hospital Auxiliary was organized and soon became a part of the Texas Association of Hospital Auxiliaries, Inc. On February 19, 1970 the first slate of officers were elected: President, Mrs. Robert Post, 1st Vice President, Mrs. Lias B. Steen, 2nd Vice President, Mrs. Joe Reuss, 3rd Vice President, Mrs. Grady McDonald, Secretary, Miss Sharon Bauer, Treasurer, Mrs. Frank Kuecker and Historian, Mrs. Leo Semper.

The Cuero Community Hospital opened its doors for public inspection on August 30, 1970 and began receiving patients on September 8, 1900 Cuero Century Club. Back: Nellie Thompson, Gertrude Clement, Last on Row: Mrs. Lonie Howerton. Front: —, Viva Crain, Mr. Lewright, —, —.

1970. The Auxiliary was given the task of supervision of landscaping the hospital grounds. The Cuero Hospital District Board approved a plan by Jim Simpson of Alamo Landscaping Company of San Antonio. Mr. and Mrs. J.B. McAlister were appointed cochairmen of the project. They were assisted by Mrs. Jim Conrad, Mrs. Harold High, Mrs. Emil Penner, Mrs. Grady McDonald, Mrs. C.L. Duckett, W.G. Foster and Mrs. George Trowell.

The Hospital Auxiliary donated $100 for the project. Donations and assistance came ion from various community clubs, such as the Cuero Lions Club and the Rotary Club. The landscaping was completed and the beauty of the hospital was greatly enhanced.

The Cuero Community Hospital Auxiliary membership swelled to 100 in the first year. Since its beginning, the Auxiliary has been and continues to be a vital part of the hospital program. Many types of service has been provided to the patients and hospital workers. All proceeds earned by the Auxiliary have been used to provide gifts to the hospital, in the form of equipment, etc. These gifts and the donation of time and service worked by the Auxiliary members have saved the tax payers of DeWitt County many, many dollars. The Auxiliary has also provided numerous Nursing School Scholarships.

Of the original Charter Members five are still active. They are J.B. (Burns) McAlister, Mrs. J.B. (Bert Marie) McAlister, Mrs. John (Elizabeth) Steen, Mrs. E.A. (Jeannie) Brown and Mrs. John (Margaret) Diebel. Mr. and Mrs. McAlister were presented a plaque in 1989 in honor of their combined total of over 20,000 hours worked.

The Cuero Community Hospital Auxiliary currently has a membership of 48, which includes active, affiliated active, inactive and Honorary and Life members. Officers for 1990-1991 are: President, Mrs. Cliff (Sharon) Weber, 1st Vice President, Mrs. Nolan (Audrey) Wendel, 2nd Vice President, Mrs. Rubye Goodson, 3rd Vice President, Mrs. Tom (Kathy) Gunn, Treasurer, Mrs. G.C. The Ladies Auxiliary of the Cuero Fire Department

The need for a Women's Auxiliary unit to the Cuero Fire Department was recognized with the result that a group of women decided to get together and form such an organization. Since that time the Organization has flourished and has been of invaluable assistance to the Firemen.

The initial meeting of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Cuero Fire Department was held August 19, 1948 with thirteen (13) ladies in attendance. They were Mrs. Georgia Boysen, Nell Buehrig, Martha German, R.H. Heyer, Sr., Hilda Hingst, Bernice Kleinecke, Ethel Koenig, Gladys Laake, Mildred Nack, Jewel Papacek, Alta Reese, Jerry Stone and Helen Wiley.

Officers elected at that meeting were: Mrs. Wiley, president; Mrs. Laake, Vice-President; Mrs. Nack, Secretary; Mrs. Frers, Treasurer; Mrs. Koenig, Press Correspondent and Mrs. Reese, Chaplain.

Primary objective of the Organization include Welfare Work, promotion of interest in the activities of the Local Fire Department and to render moral support, encouragement and assistance to the Department in it's work.

Mrs. R.H. Heyer, Sr. was given the title of "Fire Mother", at the meeting. Her late husband served as Chief of the Local Department for many years and during his tenure was highly respected by the Community as well as the Department Members.

For many years, the Auxiliary sponsored the Annual Christmas Ball for the purpose of raising funds to maintain the Organization, however the Auxiliary has discontinued this and in turn sponsor an Annual Bake Sale for this purpose.

Regular monthly meetings are held at the Fire Station every third Wednesday at 7:30 P.M. with various members serving as hostesses.

Present membership numbers 45 with the following Officers presiding: Betty Bade, President; Alta Reese, Vice-President; Kay Rath, Secretary; Brenda Arndt, Treasurer; Peggy Schorre, Reporter; Georgia Boysen, Historian and Agnes Wanjura, Chaplain.

Cuero Lions Club

The Cuero Lions Club held its first meeting on October 26, 1938, at noon in the American Cafe with 18 members and 18 guest present. The minutes show that President Edgar of the Victoria Lions presided.

Charter members were A.E. Hensley, M.F. Menking, L.E. Van Horn, J.D. Bramlette, Jr., C.J. Riebschlaeger, Robert G. Wagner, Edwin C. Buchhorn, Gerald A. King, William S. Grunder, Bruce Gibson, C.E. A.E. Hensley was the first president of the club. Since then the following have served: E.H. Nielsen, Jr., in 1939. From 1940-1948 two men were elected for six months terms each. They were: Fred Hansen, LeRoy Turner, John H. Berning, J.B. Dodd, M.C. Weber, C.E. Morgan, H.P. Cragin, Gerald King, Dewey Schorre, Frank Thieme, Cecil Newman, B.B. Thorn, T.O. An interesting and unusual note is that Clifton Weber served as president in 1942, his son, Mike Weber in 1969, and his grandson Cliff, in 1988.

The club has had only nine secretaries over the years. They were: Garfield Kiel, T.K. Anderson, Ed C. Buchhorn, J.D. Bramlette, Jr., W.F. Kautz, Nick Cameron, Jim Stone, Gene Grafe, and Paul Gebauer. Dr. W.R. Towery is the only member of the Cuero Club to serve as District Governor.

The Lions have always devoted most of their funds to helping the youth of Cuero. They were largely responsible for the youth recreation program that began in the 40s and still support those endeavors. They sponsor handicapped and/or blind youth to the Lion owned and operated camp at Kerrville, they provide eye care and glasses for needy children, and present a $500 scholarship to a deserving senior each year.

In 1973 the Cuero club sponsored a Leo Club for youths 16-21 years of age. Their first president was Corey Duckett and the sponsor was Lion Bob Hesse. Glenn Portis is the only member in the Cuero club who holds the Monarch Key from Lions International for signing, and retaining for a year, 150 new members. In 1987 Portis was nominated by the Cuero club, and elected by District 2-S4 to the Texas Lion Hall of Fame.

The Cuero club currently has about 120 members and has been chosen outstanding club of District 2-S4 many times. The motto of Lions International has long been "Liberty, Intelligence, Our Nation's Safety." Their credo is simply "We Serve."

The Hawthorne Club

The Hawthorne Club was organized on February 26, 1895 as the women of Cuero were beginning to feel a need for a common bond to draw them together. Several women gathered in the parlor of the Stayton Weldon residence to form a literary society limited to a membership of thirty. The ladies voted to name the society "The Hawthorne Club" after the popular writer, Nathaniel Hawthorne. His works were the basis for the first outline of study.

Organizers were: Mesdames Lee Joseph, W.R. Rathbone, D.H. Heaton, J.W. Stayton, Stayton Weldon, John Welch, Frank Coffin, Willie Breeden, D.B. Blake, S.C. Lackey, R.H. Wofford, Misses Mary Breeden, Nannie Lackey, Elizabeth Kyle, Jessie McConnell and Mary Wofford

A fifty cent initiation fee and weekly dues of five cents were voted by the ladies. Meetings were held each Tuesday, and the programs for the club were printed in the Cuero Record. A limit of a two hour duration for each meeting was set by the charter members, and a fine of twenty five cents was assessed for being absent at roll call. Absence without cause carried a fine of one dollar.

In 1898 under the sponsorship of the Bronte Club of Victoria, the Hawthorne Club became a member of the Fifth District Federation. The Hawthorne Club carries the distinction of being the second oldest club in Texas.

During the early years meetings were held in the Epworth League Hall of the Methodist Club, then in the Odd Fellows Hall. Later they met in the homes of members.

One of the early projects of the Hawthorne Club was to establish a library. At first they maintained a library in a private home for members only. Gradually they expanded and formed a public library with a volunteer librarian. Later the University Club took over the library project.

In 1914 on property donated by Mr. and Mrs. John C. French a permanent clubhouse was built on the corner of Hunt and Clayton. Cost of the clubhouse was $900, but did not include water or plumbing of any kind. Money for the building has been raised by Hawthorne members through many projects and donations. During World War II the clubhouse was used as a Red Cross Sewing Center. Over the past 40 years other groups have shared the use and expenses of the house.

In 1916 the Hawthorne Club sponsored the organization of the DeWitt County Federation. The group functioned for many years until the home demonstration clubs of the county took over the work.

Members have served on the Texas State Federation of Women's Clubs. In 1936, Texas Centennial Year, a pageant depicting the history of DeWitt County, written by Dr. W.A. McLeod, was sponsored by the Hawthorne Club and presented by prominent members of the community.

A nursing scholarship was established by the club, and the first recipient graduated from Santa Rosa School of Nursing in 1946.

Today the Hawthorne Club has 37 members and continues to meet monthly in the Women's Building at the corner of Hunt and Clayton and in private homes.

The University Club of Cuero

In 1923, Miss Carrie May Smith was invited to a luncheon in San Antonio by a past classmate from the University of Texas named Mrs. George Abbott. At that time, Mrs. Abbott invited Miss Smith to join the National Organization of University Club Women. The entrance requirements were limited and only graduates of prestigious schools were eligible for membership.

Miss Carrie M. Smith gave a tea to get prospective members and only a few had qualifications to be invited to join. Only ladies who had two years of college in acceptable colleges were bidden. This caused ill feeling and changes were needed. The due to the National Organization were so high that the Cuero group broke away and called their club The University Club of Cuero — Contemporary Literature.

Miss Smith, better known to us now as Mrs. T.O. Buchel, Jr. (or Carrie May) recalls that her first recruits or charter members were Mrs. J.C. (Grace) Ley, Lucy Rathbone, Hermine Burkhardt (Claggett), Mrs. Tom Cheatham, Kathleen Burkhardt (Steen), Mrs. T.A. Reuss (Ruth Sigler), Tennie Mae Bass, and Mrs. Earl Evers.

Meetings were held on the first and third Tuesdays of each month until 1961-62. After that, the Club met only on the first Tuesday monthly until the year 1971-72 when the meeting date of the University Club of Cuero was changed to the third Wednesday of each month — September through May.

Looking through the minutes of years past presented a number of facts: rent for the use of the Women's building was $25 and paid to the Hawthorne Club; the yearbooks were not typed, and printing was only $1.65 for about thirty copies; anyone absent from a meeting paid a 50¢ fine. In 1943 and 1947 the University Club placed 31 books and 68 books into the public library. The Cuero Public Library was a University Club project; Dewey Henderson was the first library president and received strong support from Rev. C. Rogers McLane.

Also, the minutes of past years, tell of the University Club's participation in the PTA Halloween Carnivals to raise funds for library books. Cookies were donated to the U.S.O. during WWII and families of University Club members invited men in uniform for Christmas dinner. The Club always donated to the "Cross the Ransus Fund". One of the desks in the Women's Building was purchased by the University Club. In the 1945 minutes there is an indication that the Club was still an affiliate of the DeWitt Co. Federation of Women's Clubs. A 1¢ post card was found in one of the minute books that showed that the gas bill had been paid that amounted to $1.00 (1950-51). A May luncheon was held in 1946 at the Live Oak Club — the price of the meal was $1.50.

The University Club celebrated its silver anniversary in 1948. Officers serving that year were: President, Mrs. Fritz Koehler, Sr.; 1st. Vice-Pres. Mrs. W.B. McClung, Jr.; 2nd. Vice-Pres. Mrs. A.J. Phillips; Rec. Sec. Mrs. Ray Smith; Corres. Sec. Mrs. Juanita Dahme; Treas. Mrs. Dewey Schorre, Parliam. Miss Mary Barthlome; and Historian, Mrs. J.C. Ley.

The 50th anniversary was celebrated at the home of Mrs. T.O. Buchel (nee Carrie May Smith) on Sept. 12, 1973 with a few charter members present. They shared their memories of the Club in its formative years. Officers for the 1973-74 year were: Pres. Mrs. James Peyton; 1st. Vice-Pres. Mrs. John Pokluda; 2nd. Vice-Pres. Mrs. Ken Long; Rec. Sec. Mrs. Burch Ware; Corresp. Sec. Mrs. Bill Blackwell; Treasurer — Mrs. Claude Blackwell, Jr.; Parliament. Mrs. A.D. Wood; and Historian, Mrs. A.W. Schaffner.

The 1988-89 club year marked its 65th anniversary with Mrs. James Peyton presenting this resume of the University Club of Cuero history. Serving as officers for the 1988-89 year were: Pres. Mrs. Arthur Koehler; 1st. Vice-Pres. Mrs. Charles Murphree; 2nd. Vice-Pres. Mrs. A.C. Ater; Rec. Sec. Mrs. Nathan Post; Correspond. Sec. Mrs. Doug Flessner; Treas. Mrs. Jerome Wild; Historian — Parliamentarian — Mrs. A.W. Schaffner; and Trustee — Mrs. E.T. Summers, Jr.

Members give book reviews at monthly meetings. The reviewer usually selects a book which is on the best seller list. The book can be obtained from the Cuero City Library — the brainchild of the University Club of Cuero.

History of Cuero Lodge No. 409 A.F.&A.M.

In June, 1874, C.C. Howerton, with sixteen other Masons, and with the approval of Cameron Lodge No. 76, petitioned the Grand Lodge of Texas, in Annual Communication in Houston, for a charter. On June 6, 1874, the charter was granted and Cuero Lodge No. 409, A.F.&A.M. was born. The Charter Members and Officers of the new lodge were: C.C. Howerton, Worshipful Master; Otto L. Threlkeld, Senior Warden; L.C. Fudge, Junior Warden; Louis Seeligson, Treasurer; W.S. Lybrook, Secretary; Moses Oppenheimer; B.X. Miligan; James D. Terry; T.B. Priddy, C. Reeves; W.W. Davis; R.P. Carr; J.A. McCrabb; Ben E. McCulloch; William Thomas; James DeMoss; Hugo Buschick.

The Lodge's first meeting was on June 11, 1874, in Pearch Hall, believed to have been located on the corner of Valley Street and South Railroad Street. The New Lodge quickly began working and raised seven new Master Masons in the first six months.

In June, 1879, the Lodge was moved to Hohn Stratton's building at the present location of 115-117 N. Esplanade, and in the summer of 1882, the Lodge was again moved to Alex Hamilton's building on the corner of Esplanade and Church Streets. In 1885 the Lodge, with D.C. Proctor as Worshipful Master, purchased a part lot from S.C. Lackey facing Church Street between Gonzales and Clinton Streets and moved an existing building to the site to serve as the Lodge Hall.

On March 19, 1895, with W.S. Fly acting as Grand Master and the officers and members of Cuero Lodge assisting, the Grand Lodge of Texas leveled the cornerstone of the new DeWitt County Courthouse. Morris Evans was Worshipful Master of Cuero Lodge. In attendance at this gala event were a host of Masons from many surrounding lodges, members of the Order of Oddfellows, Knights of Pythias, and their families. After the ceremony, the ladies of the Order of the Eastern Star served a banquet to all Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, and their ladies.

During the years of 1910-1911, with E.C. Barnard as Worshipful Master, the Lodge purchased the balance of the Lackey lot which extended to Gonzales Street and erected a new, two-story brick building. The top of the building was used as the Masonic Temple, and the bottom was rented out for a garage.

On November 14, 1945, the Lodge, acting through the trustees (Bros. Tom Cheatham, L.L. Buttery, and P. Fielding Breeden) purchased a 10.43 acre site from T.&N.O. Railroad for the erecting of a new Masonic Temple. In the early 1950's the west end of the site was developed into a beautiful picnic area for Masons from Cuero and other lodges in the area. It became a popular spot for open installations and other functions.

On September 21, 1962, Most Worshipful Robert L. Dillard, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Texas, leveled the cornerstone of the new Masonic Temple located on the brow of the hill overlooking the city. Dr. Charles R. Tubbs was Worshipful Master. Also in attendance at the ceremony was Rite Worshipful Claude Austin, Past Grand Master, Worshipful Sam Smith, Grand Senior Deacon, and the remaining officers and members of Cuero Lodge. The new building was dedicated on November 30, 1962, with Most Worshipful Robert L. Dillard, Grand Master again officiating. The Lodge began their meetings in the new Temple soon thereafter, and still use it today.

On March 7,1964, Lester Lodge No. 799 of Westhoff consolidated with Cuero Lodge No. 409.

In the same manner of many noble Brothers of the fraternity the world over, the men of Cuero Lodge No. 409, A.F.&A.M. have been instrumental in the building and development of the community, state and nation. With its strong moral code and honorable teachings, Masonry seeks to make good men better and works towards the betterment of the community.

Some of the many activities of Cuero Lodge include the Annual Easter Egg Hunt for children of the community, a Public Schools Week Essay Contest, a Community Blood Drive, a Masonic Widows' Night, and a Past Masters' Night. The Lodge and its members also support many charities which include the Masonic Home for Aged Masons, the Masonic Home and School for Children, the George Washington Masonic National Memorial, the Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children, the Shriner's Hospital for Crippled and Burned Children, and many others.

Past Masters of Cuero Lodge No. 409, A.F.&A.M. are: C.C. Howerton 1874-75; O.L. Threlkeld 1875-78; C.T. Hill 1878-1879; G.H. Law 1879-81, 84-85; L.C. Fudge 1881-81; S.F. Grimes 1882-83; A.W. CUERO TURKEYFEST T63

"Setting Up" for Turkeyfest

The Cuero Turkeyfest started in 1973 because of national publicity received during the 1972 Centennial and Turkey Trot. Two towns, Worthington, Minnesota, and Cuero, Texas were both claiming to be the Turkey Capital of the World. Lew Hudson, editor of the Worthington Daily Globe, and Ken Long, editor of the Cuero Record got together and decided it might be fun to settle the feud with a race featuring a turkey from each town.

The Cuero Fair and Turkey Trot Association, incorporated in 1947 to handle the Turkey Trot festivals, formed a committee in early 1973 to sponsor an annual self supporting celebration. In the past, townspeople had been called on for donations to put on the big Turkey Trots.

Officers and directors were elected and the assumed name of Turkeyfest was adopted. A race team consisting of Ken Long, Bob Pickens, and Jack Hartsell, and our racing turkey, Ruby Begonia, flew to Minnesota for King Turkey Days in September, 1973 for the first heat of the big race. They in turn sent a team to our celebration in October for the second heat. The event has been held annually since then with the trophy going back and forth. The turkey capital question has never been resolved, but a lot of good times and friendships have been developed over the years.

The annual celebration was held in downtown Cuero for many years and the corporation has bought two vacant buildings for use as entertainment facilities. The turkey race and big parade are still held downtown, but the rest of the celebration was moved to Cuero Municipal Park and Club House in 1988.

Many local civic organizations sponsor food or entertainment booths to make money for their charitable works. In addition to a dance, there is also continuous free entertainment, a chili cook-off, barbecue cook-off, horseshoes, volley ball, baseball, bingo, rodeo, carnival, and many arts and crafts to make this a family affair.

The presidents of Turkeyfest have been Paul Gathings, Dr. Charles Tubbs, Clete Ernster, Lias "Bubba" Steen, Jack Calk, Mike Milbery, Alan Kahlich, Burns McAlister, Davis Kainer, Billy Joe White, C.L. Duckett, and Butch Prause.

The Chamber of Commerce, The City of Cuero, Turkeyfest officers and directors, and many other local citizens spend a lot of time all year — every year — to make this celebration a continued success. Cuero had gains unmeasurable publicity and rewards because of it.

CUERO'S GOLDEN MUSIC AGE - BANDS AND MUSICALES

T6-

Cuero's golden age of music covers the years from about 1880 until 1941 when World War II brought an end to many musical and social affairs of Cuero. During this time span. Cuero was known for its Golden Brass Bands, Minstrel Evenings, Orchestral Balls, Grand and Light Opera Concerts, Sacred Choral Concerts, and Dance Bands. One of the large newspapers in a nearby city quoted, "that for a town of less than 10,000 people, Cuero is second to none in musical artistry".

On December 10, 1865, the first brass band of Old Indianola was organized. This band consisted of members who later moved to Cuero and played in Cuero's Brass Bands. The members were George French, 25, retail druggist, Nassau, Germany, Louis Budde, 25, store porter, Kour Hesse, Germany, Frederick Holtzheuser, 21, laborer, Nassau, Germany, John Freund, 18, draymand, Prussia, Louis Bernard, 26, barber, Baden, Germany, Herman Nitsche, 21, barber, Schleswig, Germany, A. Mylius, 18, butcher, Hanover, Germany, A. Bauer, 21, butcher, Saxony, Germany, and C. Volk, 24, butcher, Hesse Darmstadt. The Casino Society of Indianola sponsored monthly band concerts by the Indianola Brass Band. This band also played for parades and political rallies. After Indianola was demolished in 1886, many of these young men became members of bands in Cuero.

In 1882, the A.J. Lienhardt Amateur Brass Band was organized and played concerts for Cuero citizens. The members of this band were the Flick brothers, Mr. A.J. Lienhardt, Sr., Mr. Wasserman, Mr. Kunitz, Mr. Hausman, Mr. Schrade, Mr. Otto Buchel, Mr. Charles Fischer, and Mr. Hermann Nagel. Members of this band rehearsed and practiced at various homes. The Lienhardt Brass Band played for band concerts and for other social events such as the golden wedding celebration of Mr. and Mrs. George Wasserman, Sr. on August 10, 1892 and for the wedding of Guss Wasserman, Jr. and Ida Kunitz in 1896.

The Cuero Military Band was organized on November 10, 1891 with 9 members. By 1904 this band had 14 pieces and was renowned as one of the best in th state for the size town. The members were Charles Flick (E. Cornet), A. Nitsche (Solo B Cornet), Ed Zedtler (1st B Cornet), A. Flick (Clarinet), R. Klienecke (Picola), R. Heyer (1st Alto), EMil Wasserman (2nd Alto), H. Curlinn (3rd Alto), Gus Wasserman, (1st Tenor), Fred Hamner (Slide Trombone), Oscar Kunitz (Baritone), A.C. Flick (Bass), Charles Klienecke (Snare Drums) and H.L. Heyer (Bass Drum). The Business Manager was R.F. Heyer, Secretary, A. Flick, Treasurer, L. Heyer, and the Leader of the band was Charles Flick. They practiced over Gohmert's Billiard Hall. They led many parades in Cuero. On one occasion, as the Home Protection Hose Company #2, called "Old Reliables", drew their hose cart down Esplanade Street to the new fire hall on Main Street and dressed in their new uniforms, the Cuero Military Band led this group plus several carriages with Mayor Summers, the speaker of the occasion, Mr. H. Bailey, the board of alderman and a number of other Cuero leading citizens.

Around 1890, the first Cuero bandstand was erected at Factory Hill (now Fairview Park) in the area of Salome Hospital and the old factory. The band continued to play at Factory Hill for Sunday afternoon concerts until a new bandstand was built in the City Park about 1910. From the Lienhardt Brass Band and Cuero Military Band evolved the Cuero Municipal Band which continued the Sunday concerts in the park. Later the schedule changed to Friday evening concerts and were often joined by ice cream festivals sponsored by the town's churches and other organizations.

Cuero Municipal Bandstand - City Park

In 1900, there were other bands and orchestras in the area such as the Wasserman Orchestra which played for the Leap Year Ball in 1904 in Turner Hall. Members of this orchestra were Gus Wasserman, Sr., Gus Wasserman, Jr. Albert Lienhardt, and A. Nitsche. Dr. Kleinecke was chairman of the committee which held this chief social function of the year (1904). This orchestra also played for the Lindeneau Mayfest (1904) for the May Queen, and a Red Cross Fund Raising dance at the Mohawk Club. The Flicks, Charles and Pauline, played for social functions with the Flick Orchestra. In the 1890s there was also a string band which played for Cuero social events.

The Cuero Turkey Trot Band evolved from this wealth of musical talent in 1913 when they marched in the second annual Turkey Trot Parade. This band practiced in the old Mohawk Club (or City Auditorium) and Cuero recognizing what they had was one of the first cities in the state to levy a tax in order to support the band. The money was used to pay the conductor, purchase green uniforms and pay their travel expenses to other towns in the area. This tax was levied in 1926 and repealed in 1949.

On May 15, 1916, Mr. Gus Wasserman, Jr. led the Turkey Trot Band at "An Evening in Minstrelsy" at the Opera House in Cuero. At the last concert of the Turkey Trot Band in 1919-1920 season, Director Gus Wasserman, Jr. led the band in such tunes as "That's It, Trombone Meow", "Till We Meet Again Waltz" and "National Emblem March".

The Wasserman Orchestra played for dances and social functions such as the Senior Class Play at Cuero High School, "Home Came Ten" and soloists for the orchestra were Miss Gladys Wasserman and Miss Delka Dietze. All of Cuero banded together for a special Musicale at the Princess Theatre on June 27, 1921 where a special orchestra consisting of Mr. Alfred Marquis, Mr. A.F. Lienhardt, Mr. Gus Wasserman, Jr., Edgar Davidson, Edwin Zedtler, E.R. Wasserman, and Mr. Alfred Marquis as the special violin soloist. Mrs. Fritz Koehler led the Cuero Community Chorus.

One of the musical highlights of the year 1921 was the Cuero Community Chorus' performance under the direction of Mr. David Griffin of San Antonio of Handel's Messiah in the Methodist Church in Yoakum, in the Presbyterian Church in Cuero, and in the Lutheran Church in Cuero. The Chorus members were Mrs. A.O. Froebese, Mrs. E.H. Putman, Mrs. F.F. Eberhardt, Miss Nell Putman, Miss Delka Dietze, Miss Gladys Wasserman, Mr. L.A. Bauer, Mrs. Olga Mueller, Mrs. E.O. Kunitz, Mrs. F.H. Meyer, Miss Esther Pannen, Miss Ruby Boutwell, Mrs. Sophie Nitsche, Mr. Carl Bohne, Mr. C.W. Robinson, Mr. H. Currlin, Mr. F. Gohlke, Mr. H.E. Miller, Mr. F.H. Meyer, Mr. Earl Evers, Mr. Rudolph Evers, Rev. F.F. Eberhardt, and Mr. H.S. Brownell. Appearing as soloists in these performances were Mr. Alfred Froebese, Miss Nell Putman, Miss Gladys Wasserman, Leroy Hamilton, Mr. Carl Bohne, Mrs. Newton Crane, Mrs. E.O. Kunitz, and Miss Delka Dietze.

Cuero was graced with the sound of Grand & Light Opera on May 30, 1922 when members of the Victoria and Cuero Choral Clubs performed at the Dreamland Theater in Cuero. One of the numbers was "Three Little Maids from School" from Madame Butterfly by Puccini sung by Miss Gladys Wasserman, Miss Delka Dietze, and Miss Minnie Lee Mangham.

The Cuero Municipal Band of Cuero (Cuero Turkey Trot Band) will be remembered for its many parades and for its great band concerts in the City Park on Friday nights. While the band played and parents visited, the park had a giant grass covered star where local children rolled and played to the tunes of overtures and Sousa's marches.

In later years the old bandstand in the City Park was torn down and the gazebo constructed and a marker put into place as a reminder of the golden age of band music. In 1969, this marker was unveiled and dedicated at a Turkey Trot Festival by W. John Sprigg (11 yrs.) son of Shirley (Voelkel) Sprigg, Debra Voelkel (9 yrs.), and Dinah Rae Voelkel (8 yrs.), all descendants of the Wassermans and Voelkels who played for five generations in the bands.

Directors of the Golden Brass Bands of Cuero through the years were Mr. Charles Flick, Henry Lienhardt, Sr., Albert Lienhardt, Sr., Mr. Guss Wasserman, Jr., Mr. Martino, Mr. Cohoe, Mr. Welles, and Bennie B. Prause.

In the 1930s and 1940s the Turkey Trotters Orchestra and Ben B. Prause Orchestra played for many dances and social events in the community. Some of the members of these orchestras were Lillian (Ryan) Shelton), Charles Marquis, Pop Krause, Ed Wasserman, Norman Wasserman, Leon Boldt, Ray Voelkel, Ray Allen Voelkel, Alfred Marquis, Edgar Davidson, Jr., Ben B. Prause, Ben E. Prause, Bobby Prause, and Gladys (Mickey) Voelkel. For a time the Turkey Trotters Orchestra had a regular radio show from WOAI in San Antonio.

Members and residents of Cuero who played such great music in the golden era of bands and orchestras are as follows: George Wasserman, Sr., Gus Wasserman, Sr., Gus Wasserman, Jr., Edward Wasserman, Norman Wasserman, Albert "Pete" Wasserman, G.A. If you listen closely on these warm summer nights which we have in DeWitt County and in Cuero, you can still hear the laughter of children, the talking of people sitting in cars and on the grass, as on the winds come the strains of long forgotten overtures, waltzes, and marches as the Cuero Municipal Band played them like no other. For those of us who remember, it was a time of joy and pleasure, those Friday night Band Concerts. We can still hear the tooting of horns as each piece ended and our memories linger on and on and on atime never to be forgotten.

Davy is located in northwestern DeWitt County near the Karnes County Line. In its day there was a post office (opened in 1895), a blacksmith shop, drug store, and a general store. Also, there was a blueing factory operated by Isaac Walton Griffin which was very well known. In 1885, Fred House gave land on the east side of Salt Creek for a school and church. Trustees at that time were William Burt, W.A. Smalley, and J.T. Holdermann.

Other family names for the area were Sunday, Poetter, Morrison, Hartmann, Powell, Byram and Grun.

The post office discontinued service in the 1930's, and the town gradually closed.

In 1894 Louis Seifert and his bride came to Davy where five of their twelve children were born.

There is a store on highway 119 that marks the site of "New Davy". (1990)

DEER CREEK

T67

Deer Creek is a short tributary of the Sandies, and is located in central DeWitt County. In 1847, Mrs. Elizabeth Smith Calhoun taught the Deer Creek School near this stream, and one of her pupils was a daughter of Captain John York. This community school did not continue long. In the 1930's Deer Creek School was the black school of the Lindeneau School district.

The School was located in the H.C. Slade Survey.

EDGAR

T68

In 1853 James and Selah Edgar came to Texas from Tennessee to settle on the land grant of their son, Joseph Smith Edgar. Joseph had participated in the Battle of San Jacinto but had died before he claimed his land grant. The grant was in northeastern DeWitt County.

Edgar School

Other early settlers were the Browns, Milligans, Claytons, Kennedys, Parkers, Boothes, Barthes, Stells and Bachelors. The population was never more than three hundred at its best. In the late 1800's, Edgar had its own post office, telegraph and depot. Their first school was called the Grassbur School. It was taught by Joe Covey and J.W. Cook.

Businesses included a cotton gin, grocery store, blacksmith shop, and railroad spur to the gin. By the 1950's the population had decreased so that the post office was closed. Farming and ranching were always continuing in the area. There were two churches in Edgar, the Presbyterian and the Mt. Zion Baptist Church. The Mt. Zion Baptist is still being used in 1990. It was built in 1869 for the black population of the area. Charter members of this church were Nelson Parks, Jack Harryway, Liddie Green, Winnie Webb, Margaret Crawford, Matilda Calvin, Mary Hunt, Marinda Hunt, Marinda Douglass, and Easter Drake. In 1890 the church was located south of the Cuero-Yoakum Highway at Edgar. This church received a Historical Marker in 1985.

Edgar is no longer a business community. All that remains are the cemeteries to remind one of days gone by.

FIVE MILE

Five Mile School

In 1849 a group of four families came to DeWitt County from Germany to make their homes. They settled on Five Mile Creek in central DeWitt County. These families were: the Gus Holzapfels, the Carl Schleuters, the Henry Hildebrands and the Herman Holzapfels. These families were all very well educated and were proficient in the Latin language. Because of their knowledge of Latin, the community was first called Latimer.

In 1850 the first families were joined by Captain Robert Kleberg. Others who followed were the Edward Holzapfel family, the Frederick Grothaus family, Charles Lang family, Carl and Gus Schrade families and the Julius Schorre family. By this time the area was referred to as the Five Mile Community.

Robert Kleberg was a lawyer by profession and Gus Holzapfel was an editor and a naturalist. Carl Scholeuter was a teacher. Carl Schrade and George Brandt were chemists. This group also operated a freight line from Indianola to San Antonio and to Austin.

About the year 1860, Mrs. Ottilie Ploeger taught school in her home. The first schoolhouse was built on land in the George W. Brooks Survey, donated by Gus Holzapfel and was called Five Mile School. Its first teacher was Carl Schleuter, one of the original settlers. Over the next several years the school was moved twice to be nearer the public road.

As was typical in that era, the schoolhouse served as more than a place of instruction. It was also a community center, and a church house. The German Methodist Church met on Sundays.

In 1872, the school became a public school with John Pflug as its first teacher.

In 1921 a new school was built on the Ratcliffe farm which was on the Clinton-Weesatche Road. The Five Mile school children then attended the new school called Ratcliffe School.

FRIEDLAND

T70

Friedland School building

On December 4, 1807 Joseph and Agnes Bohac gave one acre of land in the Northeast corner of section 9 of the Indianola Railroad Company land to trustees Anton Fojtec, Philip Rohan and Joseph R. Bohac. This land was given with the understanding that if the land ceased being used for school purposes, it would revert back to the Grantors. This acre of land was part of a tract of 178 acres conveyed to Joseph Bohac by Mrs. Sophie Weldon by deed on October 30, 1897. Friedland School was nine miles northeast of Yorktown and was a one teacher school. It was discontinued in the 1950's.

There was a thriving community of Czechs in Friedland, located off the Westhoff highway between Yorktown and Westhoff. The National Cemetery is still a reminder of the Czech heritage of the area.

The Friedland school was a one room structure which Ethel Simecek taught for some time.

GARFIELD

John Schneider, Charles Gaebler and Ed Buschek were the first settlers of Garfield. Later settlers were Borchers, Gohlke, Wulf, Richter, Harper, Huck, Morris,Rannefeld, Hackfeld, Block, Bruns, Schroeder, Hengst, Garfield School

Radicke, Meischen, Thieme, Peters, Helmers and Weischwill.

These settlers were progressive with many ideas to improve their community. They built the schoolhouse and had church services in the same building, organized the Shooting Club, built the dance hall, organized a butcher club to provide fresh meat once a week, built their own telephone line into Yorktown and organized the Garfield Farm Mutual Insurance Association, now headquartered in Karnes City.

In later years a brass band was organized by August Hengst. Also, a dance orchestra called the Braun-Thieme Orchestra, directed by John Thieme. A Garfield Athletic Club was organized under the management of Otto Hengst.

A small country store was operated by F.M. Banks who was also the school teacher. Later this store was purchased by O.A. Audilet and a larger building was erected and a gasoline filling station was added.

In 1921 another brass band was organized and called the Garfield-Gruenau Band and later, it was called the Farmers Band under the direction of Hugo Meischen. By 1940 another brass band was organized under the direction of Ben Meischen.

When the first settlers moved to the Garfield area it was open country, no fences. Cattle rustling was quite common. There were many shootouts between the ranchers and rustlers. In those days a pistol was man's best friend. In one instance a man by the name of Mack and another named Tannel had a shootout about two miles west of the Garfield Hall on the Gaebler ranch near a dry creek. This creek still bears the name Mack-Tannel. This was where Mack shot and killed Tannel.

After barbed wire was invented the area around Garfield was fenced and as more people moved into the area the land became farmland and cotton and corn were the leading crops.

The Garfield School District consolidated with the Yorktown School District and the Garfield School building now serves as the American Legion Post Home in Yorktown.

After losing the school and the store, there would be no Garfield if it were not for the dance hall, the Shooting Club and the Garfield Mutual Fire and Storm Assn. and the ladies organizations.

President James A. Garfield would have liked his namesake.

GOHLKE SCHOOL

T72

Gohlke School

This school was named for William Gohlke who donated the land. It was on the John Hall Survey in northwestern DeWitt County. It began in 1900 with Jim Buch as the teacher. In 1918 a modern two room building was erected. In 1948 it was a small one teacher school. It was discontinued in the 1950's.

On June 2, 1924, the first county commencement exercise was held. Tests were given in the different subjects in 1922, 1923 and 1924, by the teachers and the County Superintendent, H.B. Montgomery. Whenever a student had passed the tests satisfactorily on all the subjects, they became eligible to enter any High School no matter what class or age.

The following received certificates to High School in 1924: Edna Mae Nilsson (1923) from Lone Tree School; Elmo Boehl from Green DeWitt School; Ella Brandt and Ora Lee Bluntzer from the Upper Meyersville School; Jesse Parks and Ralph Dubose from the Ratcliffe School; Frieda Krueger and Leona Sager from Arneckeville School; Julius Schaefer from Meyersville; Della Gifford from Cabeza School; Olga Wagner and Anita Schroeder from Gohlke School; Gertrude Reichert from Nordheim; Robert Mickus from Lone Tree School; Reinhold Mueller from Lindenau; Eva Adcock, Blanche Milligan from Thomaston; and Roberta Preston from Buchel School.

GOLLY HOLLOW

Golly Hollow, 1985

The Golly Hollow School stands today on the one acre of land donated to the trustees of the school, Mr. Gideon Dryer and Mr. Michael Jacobs, by Mrs. Theresa Hubersburger. This deed was recorded on July 18, 1884. A part of the Mumford House League, located approximately four miles southwest of Arneckeville and five miles northwest of Meyersville.

Around the year 1847, the first settlers came to live in this area leaving their homeland across the sea. Their children were taught at home by the parents. By the year of 1876, a building near the Boggy Branch was used as a school. Because of the distance, the circuit minister serving Arneckeville Lutheran Church came here to teach the children that gathered at the church. These children had only gone to school a few days in their entire lifetime.

When more families settled in this area it became necessary for a school to be built nearby. Some settlers before 1884 were the Afflerbach, Peavy, Hubersburger, Semmler, Dryer, Jacobs, and Golly families. These families banded together and constructed a small school on private property about one-half mile west of the present location. The school devised its name Golly Hollow from an early settler, Antone Golly who helped build the school but died before it was completed. Mrs. Theresa Hubersburger, out of the love for free school and the support thereof, donated this one acre of land so the schoolhouse could be moved to higher ground. The school was a private school until about 1893 when the public school system of Texas came into being.

All needs of the teacher and students were met by the community, namely trustees and parents. Water was hauled to the school in wooden barrels on sleds and the children would each carry their own drinking water. If the teachers were not from the immediate area, they would live with a family that lived near the school. The community members paid for the teacher's salary in the very early days.

The population in the area continued to grow by the early 1900's and the structure had to be enlarged. Then a few years later a cistern was bought and gutters were put on the building so the school children had rain water to drink and use.

All through the years the school and the community would work together to achieve their purpose. In 1929, a club was formed with thirty-two members that met in the homes, for the purpose of working together to help one another and to help with the school needs. Records show they did both. Among their money projects, one was the presentation of a three act play and the selling of cake, pie, etc. This play was also presented in other communities and the proceeds were used to put a water well at the school. The club paid for the many extra needs that the teachers would request to be filled. Blackboard chalk, playground equipment, seesaws, new teacher's chairs, lunch cabinets, telephones - to name a few.

In 1946 with only four students to be enrolled, Golly Hollow School closed its doors and was consolidated with the Arneckeville School. However, the Golly Community Club stayed active and continued to help Arneckeville School with some supplies for the children.

Since August of 1952 the old Golly School building has been used as a community center. The few able club members worked together again to improve and repair the closed building. Window panes were replaced, minor carpenter work was done and Golly was made to shine again. After Arneckeville consolidated with Meyersville, work was done on the school district properties. In 1966, the Meyersville School trustees deeded this old school property to the Golly Community Club to be used as their center.

In 1982, the active Golly Club planned and had a reunion for all former students of Golly Hollow School. It was well attended with students sharing their happy school day memories.

In July 1984, the 100th anniversary of the school was observed. On September 1, 1985, the Golly Hollow School and the community dedicated an official Texas Historical Marker.

The Golly Community Center is used for small family affairs and as the club meeting place. Records show that perhaps this is one of the oldest school buildings still standing in this area.

GREEN DEWITT SCHOOL

February 3, 1900 was a momentous day for the Green DeWitt Community at the time, as well as, for the future generations. On this day, Louis Koenig deeded an acre of land in his front pasture to Ferdinand Hartman, Louis Koenig, and Arthur LeSage, trustees of the Green DeWitt League School Community for the purpose of establishing a school. It has been passed down orally that the trustees bought the Calhoun Community School which had been built on Judge Koenig's place around 1870. It was then moved to the Heard land near the Heard Bridge over the Guadalupe River. From the Heard site, it was moved to the center of the Green DeWitt Survey and called the Green DeWitt School. The first-generation children of the Koenig, Hartman, Goebel, Rath, Boehl, Raak, Wolf, Hoffmann, Sauer, Hiller, Hotz, and Mueller families — walking, riding horses, or driving buggies — came to this school. Many of the same families came as second-generation children to the Green DeWitt School but not in the original structure.

This structure was built in 1929 for the Green DeWitt School after a fire completely burned the original building February 11, 1929. It is now used as the Green DeWitt Community Club House.

Cook, Annie (Hartman) Krage, Nadine (Billingsly) Reichmuth, Ruebie (Collier) Wheeler, Frieda (Gohlke) Boehl, Zara Miller, Mary (Shimer) Koenig, Elnita Nagel, Lola (Schleicher) Edwards, Winifred (Kuehl) Russel, and in 1929 Edith (Loos) Hans. History stopped for this structure on February 11, 1929 when it burned. It was said that the community raised funds and built the new schoolhouse with ". . . never a penny of tax money." In the meantime, the students were channeled to Walter and Mary Koenig's place where classes were held in a vacant farm-worker house. Mary, at 91 years, recounted, "When the recess bell rang, Charles and Edward Koenig raced to the water pump in our yard; filled their bucket; put the long-handled dipper in; and walked back carefully so that the rest of the students could "dipper" a drink. Then at noon, it might have been Eugene and Armin Wolf's turn. My fouryear-old son, Louis, would often return with the "water carriers" to visit and he still recalls that Miss Loos taught him to draw a beautiful rabbit wonderfully well."

But times were changing for small one-room schools and on June 20, 1949 by consent of the DeWitt County School Board of Trustees, Green DeWitt and Arneckeville were consolidated into Green DeWitt-Arneckeville School.

Since the families of the Green DeWitt School children wanted to continue as a community, they formed the Green DeWitt Community Club. The schoolhouse became the center for many social gatherings—from birthday parties to annual Fourth of July chicken barbeques. When Louis Koenig deeded the land in 1900, it was stipulated that "if said Land at any time cease to be used for school purposes, it should revert to said Louis Koenig or his heirs." Since the structure needed repairs, the club discussed purchasing the land. Through the efforts of the trustees, Erwin Rath, J.B. McAlister, Rudolph Goebel, Mary (Shimer) Koenig, and Marguertie (Goebel) Johnson the acre of land was purchased February 16, 1966. The first option to buy was given to the Koenig heirs should the site cease to be a community club. In the years following, modern improvements have been made — the latest a fenced-in and roofed-over barbeque area adjoining the property. Olivia (Bitterly) Rath donated the land for this in 1987. The same spirit that moved the first generation to found the school, has moved the second and third generations to preserve it.

GRUENAU COMMUNITY

Gruenau, which means green meadow, is located in the rich blackland prairie six miles north of Yorktown. It was settled by frugal German farmers as early as 1872. David Stanchos, then residing in Yorktown, owned a large tract of land reaching into the Gruenau vicinity and can be considered the first family that settled in the area. Vachel Weldon, Sr. acquired land from the Indianola Railroad Company and opened it for development in 1890.

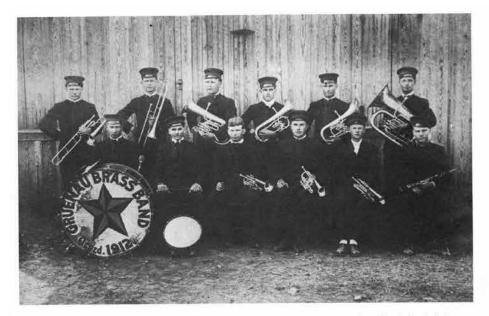

Descendants of many of the early German settlers still reside in the area. Names like Koopman, Warmuth, Mueller, Jansen, Buesing, Remmers, Stanchos, Straube, Kimmel and others are familiar to all of us today.

The sons of these various early settlers organized what was known as the Turnverein, an athletic organization, and practice began in 1897. Gymnastics and calisthentics were a popular sport with German folks as were shooting clubs. Along with these athletic and shooting events were coronations, brass band music and dancing and feasting. These are some of the traditions still carried on by the Gruenau Verein although the athletic events have been disbanded down through the years.

In 1927 the first Turn and Schuetzen Verein building was torn down and the present spacious hall was built. Many additions and conveniences have been added down through the years.

No longer is the area around Gruenau the "Green Meadow" it once was for the purpose of hay making from native grass. The rich soil has been heavily cultivated and while at one time cotton was king, it also yielded to flax, grain sorghums, corn forage, and wheat.

Soon after his arrival to the Gruenau area around 1895, George Langley built a store and saloon at a site just east of the southwest corner of Section 12 of the J.H. Richter Survey across the road from the Heinrich Mueller farm. He called it the Little Chicago Store. The first school in the area was built across the road in the southeast corner of Section 13 Indianola RR Survey, which was later known as the Blake Ranch. The area became the center of social activities where the first Brass Band was organized under the leadership of Mr. Langley. This band played for most functions in the area for many years until Mr. Langley moved to Westhoff around 1908. There was also a Lincke Band composed of clarinet. Since the feasts were always held on Sunday, the rifle competition would start in the morning. The Brass Band would also begin playing in the morning for which they received their supper. For the night dance, each member was paid $4.00. In 1917 Otto Lamprecht received his call to the U.S. Army. The Brass Band accompanied him to Cuero and played at the train depot before he left. He was replaced in the band by his nephew Otto Koopmann, on the bass drum, until his return in April of 1919. In later years as several of the members married and moved away from the area, the band eventually dispersed. Since the automobile had become the major source of travel and it was more convenient to travel further distances, most of the former members joined the Nordheim Brass Band, which played for the after-concerts at the Gruenau feasts into the 1950's. Also some of the members organized the Joe Richter Orchestra which played for the night dances in the area for many years.

Gruenau Hall — 1989

GUILFORD

Guilford School

The people of a farming community in north central DeWitt County attended the Clear Creek Methodist Church, located north of Clear Creek, from 1885 to 1935. The children attended a school taught in this church for some ten or twelve years. In 1898 Charles Wofford donated an acre of land for a school about four miles from the church and on the south side of Clear Creek. It was named Guilford for his wife, Guilford (Whitsett) Wofford. He also opened a store there in 1898. For a number of years Guilford Community had this store, a gin, and a community post office. There was a Woodmen of the World organization which held its meetings in a room upstairs over the school house. In 1942 Guilford School consolidated with the nearby Lindenau School.

In 1911, according to the County School Superintendent's Records, there was one teacher here, Miss Sophia Schroeder. Other teachers through the years were: Walter Wehman, J.F. Petter, Miss Minnie Linn Vaugh, Lillian Stolleis, Josie Pieper, Emmett Ferguson, Gertrude Chamrad, Emma Chamrad, Una Mae Eck, Thelma Wright, F.A. Crisp, Estella Clark, Lela Wehman, Grace Wallis, Amy Hoffman, Ella Brandt, and Mrs. A. W. Schaffner and Lela Aschen.

HEBRON COMMUNITY

In the late 1840's pioneers in ox wagons came from the eastern states looking for a good place to settle. When they arrived in the southeastern part of DeWitt and Lavaca Counties, they found a good place to settle. They settled near Bear Creek and Little Brushy Creek both having clean, clear running water. They settled in both counties and near both creeks.

area, and the Indians were not too bad at this time.

In those days a man's wealth was in a good horse. Land was cheap and it has been told by some, a man once traded a good horse for one section of land, 640 acres.

Among the first settlers were the Granberry, Hargrove, Shows, Bissett, Squyres, Hollan, Hill, Byars, Williams, Goode, Cook, Carroll, McDonald, Garrett, Cooper and Brown families.

Hebron Baptist Church

History passed down by the church members says that the first church was the Hebron Baptist Church which was a one room log building with split log benches. This church was established in 1852.

Then in 1855 it was moved to the present site and was organized into a cooperating missionary Baptist Church. Hebron Baptist joined the Colorado Baptist Association in 1856 and reported a membership of 136.

In 1855 Adam Shows, a carpenter, was hired to build the church with the help of others in the community. In that day lumber had to be brought from Florida to Texas by boat, from Indianola, 75 miles by ox cart to Hebron.

On November 30, 1867 Amos Granberry, Sr. and John G. Hargrove donated to Hebron Baptist Church and the deacons of said church Amos Hill and L. Bissett, two acres more or less on which the house of worship now stands. The deed was recorded March 13, 1868.

On May 19, 1890 W.P. Carroll, W.A. Goode, and Lou Goode, his wife, deeded in trust to Sam M. Hollan for Hebron Baptist Church one acre of land more or less. This deed was recorded December 30, 1891.

Pastors of this church were: Wade Hollan, Henry Crocker, J.D. Cook, L.L. Bissett, B.F. McDonald, J.F. Carson, S.M. Hollan, J.M. Barnes, G.W. Newsom, W.P. Carroll, W.D. Fleming, W.E. Self, P.T. McGahagin, J.A. Munson, Frank Deavers, William Bearfield, William Walker, Ellis Epps, David Moore, Lynn Maudlin, Charles Gilliam, Richard Mayberry, and Buddy Means.

Hebron Cemetery is next to the Hebron Baptist Church. It is thought that a cowboy may have been the first to be buried in the cemetery, but there was no marker or record of his name. Nancy Shows is the first recorded person to be buried in the Hebron Cemetery. She was the daughter of Amos Granberry, Sr. She died at age 38 April 29, 1867. She was the wife of Adam Shows.

There is an Official Historical Marker for Hebron Community, Church, Cemetery and School.

School was held at Hebron until 1884 but not on a regular basis. In 1884 land was donated for a school in the area which was named Bear Creek School.

HEINZEVILLE

T78

Heinzeville School

In southwestern DeWitt county near the Goliad County Line, a one teacher, one room school was started in 1888. A Mr. Engelke was the first teacher. The first trustees were Edward Lundschen, August Baake, and M. Kerlick. Some other nearby settlers were Louis Menn, George Lundschen and Fritz Heinze, on whose land the school was located and for whom it was named.

During the 1890's, Rev. A. Falgenberg held Lutheran services in the school building. The first child baptized was Ed. G. Lundschen, who received his education in the Heinzeville School and was one of its trustees for many years. From 1901-1912, William Lundschen ran a store there. There was also a community blacksmith and a "syrup-maker". A two room school was built in 1932. Mattie Hodges was also one of the teachers who taught at Heinzeville School.

HOCHHEIM

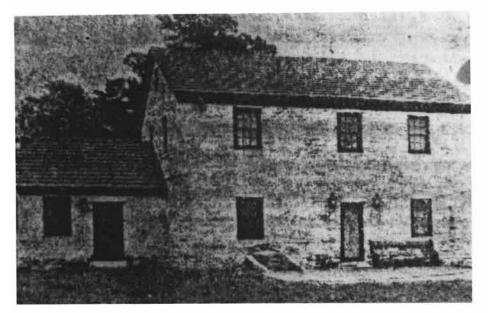

T79

Hochheim is east of the Guadalupe River on the J.D. Clements survey, in northeastern DeWitt County near the Gonzales County line.

It was named Hochheim (Hoch home) for Valentine Hoch who, in 1857, built a two story home there of rock quarried from surrounding hills.

In 1864 the Hoch's built a German Methodist Church which was also used as a school until one was built in 1875. The first teachers were a Mr. and Mrs. Wright.

In 1895 Hochheim consisted of two general stores, a hardware, saddle and blacksmith shop, saloon, drug store, post office and hotel. The Cumberland Presbyterians had a church here and the Methodists also had monthly services. There was also a large gin run by Herman F. Raetzsch. The druggist was F.K. Lynch and some of the doctors were Dr. A.A. Ross and Dr. Finley Blackwell. Other families in the area were the Hulse, Morris, Baker, Glass, Bellamy, O'Banion, Moore, Swayze, Krumm, Blackwell, Braden, Allen.

Hochheim Cemetery and School

Rachel S. and eldest son of John Alexander Crawford deeded 4 1/2 acres of land in DeWitt County, Texas being a part of the Samuel McCoy's 1/4 league survey on May 16, 1876 to be used for a school, cemetery and church for the Hochheim Community. Rachel S. was not satisfied with her husband, James A. Crawford, being buried in the Concrete Cemetery, some six miles away. A portion was set aside for a cemetery and Rachel S. had James A.'s remains moved from Concrete to the Hochheim Cemetery, as the first person buried there. Also, John W. Moore, a son-in-law, husband of Rachel Emma Crawford, body was moved from Concrete to Hochheim Cemetery.

There are five generations of Crawfords buried in the Hochheim Cemetery. Also, generations of many other pioneer families are buried there, as the: Cunninghams, Green, Blackwell, Flemming, McCormick, St. Clair, Hoch, Steen, Boothe, Jacob, Granberry, Mayfield, Wilson, Schwab, Jaeger, Schweitzer, Pittman, Laufer, Parks, Talley, Neuiszer, Timm's and others. There are a number of unmarked graves, some of the early immigrants and settlers that no one remembers. Also, buried there are Veterans of the Civil War, the Spanish American War and World War I and II. The Yoakum V.F.W. Post 2456, places a USA flag on the veteran's graves each year for Decoration Day.

I can remember as a child in the 1920's, when the families gathered for a day of work and cleaning the cemetery with lunch on the grounds, usually the Saturday before Decoration (Memorial) Day, was on Sunday. We would go to a spring-fed creek back of the old Crawford home and gather wash tubs of native (wild) Boston Fern from the creek banks to be used with zinna's, roses or other yard flowers to make bouquets for the graves in the cemetery.

The Hochheim Cemetery Association was later organized. There have been many faithful workers and they have kept the cemetery clean and in good repair and we are thankful for these dedicated people. At present, Lewis Y. Saunders is Custodian and Mrs Chester M. St. Clair, Secretary-Treasurer. Hochheim Cemetry has Decoration Day the first Sunday in May each year.

A Texas Historical Marker was placed at the Hochheim Cemetery, May 6, 1984. Sponsored by the Hochheim Cemetery Association and the DeWitt County Historical Commission. The Victoria Advocate newspaper carried a write-up of the Official Dedication in Henry's Journal, by Henry Wolff, Jr., May 13, 1984.

The old Hochheim School building that is by the cemetery is a two story building made of cypress. No one is sure if this building was built in the late 1870's or 1880's. However, my father Charlie L. Crawford attended school in this building in the early 1890's.

When the land was given for a school by Rachel and John Alex. Crawford May 16, 1876, three school trustees were named, as follows: L.B. Green, James L. Crawford and J.A. Cunningham. I think some kind of building was made available almost immediately for a school, as there were many young children living in the community. Rachel had ten or more grandchildren and the trustees had children of school age. The school had three teachers and taught through the ninth grade and closed in 1923, when a new three room school was built at another location in Hochheim. Later, Mexican-American children attended school in the building for a few years.

The Hochheim Masonic Lodge No. 182 used this building for meetings for over a hundred years. In the eighteen hundreds a school building or church building usually held school on the week days, church on Sunday and any other community meeting was also held there. The Masonic Lodge has done a wonderful job in maintaining the building and the grounds.

HOCHHEIM PRAIRIE

Hochheim Prairie School

Hochheim Prairie, located on the James King survey six miles west of Yoakum, was so named because of its being in a prairie region near where the Hoch family settled.

A one room frame school building was built in 1893 and Minnie Rieder was the only teacher until 1897 when a two room school was built and Ettie Coppedge became her assistant.

A two room stucco building was erected in 1925. At its peak Hochheim Prairie School had an enrollment of 125.

The first public building in Hochheim Prairie was the Turnverein, which was put up for athletic purposes in 1892. Since 1897 it has been known as Turner Hall.

Early settlers of the community were Jacob Poth, John Weigelt, William Eschenburg and H.M. Glass.

Mr. Poth gave land for St. Ann's Catholic Church which started in 1906.

Hochheim Prairie Lodge #90

The Peter F. Ludwig Hermann Sons Lodge #90 was organized on March 26, 184 at the German farming community of Hochheim Prairie. The first officers were elected the same day. Ditrich Othold, Ex Pres.; C.P. Timm, Pres.; F. Schmidt, V. Pres.; William Schmidt, Sec.; Adolph Hagans, Treas.; August Nieman, Trustee-18 months; William Runge, Trustee 12 months; August Polzin, Trustee-6 months; John Blank, Guide or Fuhrer; Geo. VonHaefen, Inner Guard; Robert Riedle, Outer Guard.

The original membership rosters, financial records and lists of officers from 1894 through 1903 were written in German and preserved by Mrs. Walter Schmidt. In 1894 there was 16 members. This membership was soon joined by W. Wagner, Jan. 2, 1895; Herman Raetzsch, Apr. 16, 95; F. Denker, F. Boening, Gerhard Warling, J.J. Kuck, R. Gloor all in 1895. In 1896 Otto Wagener, M. Rathkamp and Gerhard Suhr became members.

Dues were $1.50 per month of which $1.00 per month was forwarded to the Grand Lodge to cover the death benefit. So local dues were $6.00 per year. The secretary salary or gehalt, was $1.00 per month. By 1897 the lodge had grown to 28 members and the secretary salary was raised to $1.50 per month. Some of the new members of that year included F. Till, Dietrich Backermann, and Heinrich Toenjes, who transferred from Lindenau, Lodge #83. He lived there in 1886 because M. Rathkamp walked from San Antonio to Toenjes that year.

By 1900 the officers were, C.F. Timm, Ex Pres.; F. Boening, Pres.; Henry Toenjes, V. Pres.; William Schmidt, Sec.; Adolph Hagans, Treas.; Dietrich Backermann, John Blank, John Kuck I, Trustees; Otto Wagner, J.J. Kuck and Herman Schmidt, Finance Committee; Fred Schmidt, Guide; Henry Ahrens (father of Jo Albrecht), Inner Guard and M. Rathkamp, Outer Guard.

By 1901 the lodge had grown to 41 members. Some were Gerhart Gerdes, A. Raetsch, Fred Schmidt (father of Carl and Gus), Henry G. Schmidt ("Shemmel" father of Elsie Schmidt), Carl Herm (father of Flora Bressel), Herman Schmidt, Henry Hagans, Wm. Bruns, Ernst Hagans, Frank Konecny, Joe Till, Frank Till, and Eilert Schumacher.

On May 3, 1908 the Frohsinn Schwaster (Cheerful Sister) Lodge #49 was organized. Mrs. Henry Toenjes was Pres. and Mrs. Stamer, mother of Mrs. Gerhardt Koehler was Sec.

These lodges met in the Hochheim Prairie Turn Verein. In December of 1894, the Hochheim Prairie Turn Verein headed by Fred Boening (grandfather of Dr. Louis Boening) bought one acre of land adjacent to and west of the Hochheim Prairie School property. The building built was called Turner Hall. A turner is defined as a tumbler or gymnast, also as a member of a turn verein. This was an athletic society, some of whose members moved here from Half Moon. However, some members soon moved away and the turn verein became inac-

On July 3, 1909, the Peter F. Ludwig Verein bought the land and hall from the Hochheim Prairie Turn Verein. This was the Hermann Sons Lodge #90. They tore down the 1894 hall and built a larger one. This was the second Turner Hall and the name Turner Hall stuck. It was used for dances and school functions. This hall was built by Henry Toenjes. This hall burned on May 21, 1927, the day Lindberg flew the Atlantic. Hugo Rathkamp remembers that J.J. Kuck was so disgusted that he threw a good board in the coals and ashes and said, "You might as well burn up too".

They soon got busy with a plan to raise money to build the third hall, which was built by Geo. Jansen of Shiner. From this plan the Hochheim Prairie Hall Association was formed, now called Hochheim Prairie Hermann Sons Hall Association. $6,000.00 stock was sold to Hermann Son members only. The deed conveying the land from the Peter Ludwig Verein was signed by J.J. Kuck, (father of Mrs. Edmund (Lenore) Langhoff and Otto Kuck), for a price of $150.00. In the purchase of this, the Hochheim Prairie Hall Assn. was represented by J.J. Kuck, Eilert Kuck, Henry Toenjes, M. Rathkamp and H.H. Stratmann. A successful opening day celebration raised over $1,000.00 to pay off the balance due on the building program. The program the hall association sponsored was to provide dancing entertainment for the community, which it still does.

The land for Hochheim Prairie Hermann Sons Cemetery was donated by Robert Riedle in 1894 or 1895. The first grave site was sold on February 2, 1885. The cost of a site was $0.75. The care and upkeep of the cemetery is now supported by endowments.

HOPKINSVILLE

Hopkinsville is located about seven miles south of Cuero and about three miles west of Arneckeville. This black community was started in 1872 when the first land was acquired by Henry Hopkins. This land was on the west side of the Guadalupe River on Five Mile Coleto Creek. The land was purchased from William and Louis Barton.

The Hopkins family came to Texas in 1854 as slaves of Judge Henry Clay Pleasants. They came from Virginia and settled with Judge Pleasants near Clinton, DeWitt County, Texas. There were ten members of the Hopkins, Scott Hopkins, Simon Hopkins, Nat Hopkins, Scott Hopkins, Simon Hopkins, Alfred Hopkins, Ellen Hopkins (Mrs. Jerry Jones), Onie Hopkins (Mrs. Salford), Julia Hopkins (Mrs. Jim Johnson), Betsy Hopkins (Mrs. Green Williams), and Lucy Hopkins (Mrs. Walter Hopkins). Eight of the original family members settled in DeWitt County after the Emancipation Proclamation in 1863.

Antioch Baptist Church was organized in 1873. Trustees were Jerry Jones, Henry Hopkins and Thomas Friar. The church was built on a hill at Middletown, just below the county seat of Clinton. In 1899 the church site was moved to another hill located to the east of the original site. The land was sold to the church by Henry Hopkins, Sr. for $1.00 and included five acres. The existing church building was built in 1900 and the cornerstone has the names of F. Hopkins, H. Hopkins, J. Jones, G. Mike, G. Elliott, N. Lyarels, and T. Friar, with Rev. Styles, Pastor, inscribed in the stone. A cemetery is also located on the grounds. There was also a cemetery at the location of the first church.

On September 10, 1881, Henry Hopkins purchased a one-half acre tract from D.B. Peavy for a "Free and Public School". The school site was located near the center of the community. This school was deeded to the county judge which made it a part of the County School System. A one room school building was erected. When the schools began consolidating, Hopkinsville school became a part of the Arneckeville-Green DeWitt School District. Mrs. Zula Houston, great granddaughter of Lucy Hopkins was the last teacher in 1955-56 school year. The school building was converted into an addition to the Antioch Church building.

This community received a Historical Marker in 1983.

LANDER

Lander School

Lander School in southeastern DeWitt County was on land in the J.A. Moody survey. In 1905 J.A. Lander gave an acre of land for the school so the school is named after him. In 1934 it became DeWitt County's first rural state aid school and from then on until it was discontinued in 1944, it was a grade school with modern buildings and splendid equipment. Children of the area were later transported by bus to Yoakum. A Church of Christ congregation held services in the vacant school building.

LINDENAU

Lindenau, in central DeWitt County, was established by German farm families in 1891 near the junction of the Sandies Creek and the Guadalupe River. When the early farmers settled this community, it had no name. The large oak trees reminded Charles and Daniel Wild of Linden trees that grow in Germany and the white cotton reminded them of a little town in Germany so they named it Lindenau.

According to courthouse records, much of the land sold to the German families was John T. Wofford land. Wofford was here much earlier. Much of his land was purchased by Frank and Elnora Brockhaus and John Brockhaus and they sold it to the German farmers. Most of the farmers came from Germany but some were born in America.

Some of the early German settlers were: Brockhaus, Henry Rau, Fritz Kruse, Charles Wild, Daniel Wild, Joe Blascke, Henry Menke, John Arndt, Anton Thormahlen, Rudolph Gloor, August Olle, Henry Rogge, Henry Buchhorn, Herman Buchhorn, Charlie Juenger, Joe Boehm, John DeReese, Budde, Henry Duevel, Gustav F. Schrade, Joe Dieringer, Frederick Schroeder, Carl G. Wild, Fritz Meyer, K.D. Bolting, Gerhard Finke, Herman Currlin, Henry A. Doell, Wm. T. Eicholz, F.A. Goehring, Warling, Meischen, Biedermann, Schlinke, Kuester, Hingst, Robert Kolert, August Pheil, Adolph Mueller, Rudolph Kahlich, Wehman and Boethel. Descendants of most of these still owned the land in 1978-79.

Early non-German families who owned land and whose descendants still own land are: Wofford, Lane, Hamilton, Blackwell, Card, Smith and Murphree.

Due to changes in farming practices, descendents of many early families still live on the old farms and earn their living by commuting to nearby cities and industries to work.

There was no school or church in Lindenau when the early Germans came. They were thrifty householders who saved their money to educate their children. Children old enough helped with the chores before and after school. Chores such as, milking cows, separating the milk from the cream which they churned into butter or made into cheese, feeding animals, butchering hogs to make sausage, bacon, ham and lard, raising chickens for meat and eggs, making soap for washing clothes, planting large gardens to can the vegetables. There were fruit trees, and grapes to be made into jelly or wine. Wine was used for cooking and medicine. When children came home from school in cold or wet weather the mother had a cup of hot wine for each child to drink. She also had warm fresh baked bread and coffee cake for them to enjoy. Father went to town once a month to buy a barrel of flour, sugar, and other staple items the family needed. As roads and transportation improved, they went to town more often.

At one time cotton was the largest crop grown. Corn and grain were grown for the animals. Sugar cane was grown to make barrels of molasses. Corn was ground into meal to be made into cornbread. The corn husks or shucks were used to make mattresses for their beds. Later, before the cotton gin, children would pick the seed out of the cotton and the cotton was used to make mattresses, pillows and quilts. They raised geese from which they plucked the down for pillows, feather beds, and quilt comforts. These were very warm. The geese were also eaten for food.

Before the railroad came, Daniel Wild used large wagons and oxen to transport goods to and from San Antonio and Galveston according to Mrs. Charlotte Wild Knocke.

The largest general mercantile store in Lindenau was owned by Mr. and Mrs. John Hollenman. They stocked groceries, dry goods, all farm equipment, plows, cultivators, planters, anything that was needed on a farm. He also owned the drugstore. He bought the cotton from the farmers and shipped it to Galveston.

Cotton loaded on railroad cars - Lindenau

In 1913, Hollenman bought all the cotton, a big crop, shipped it to Galveston where a storm destroyed all the cotton and he went bankrupt. This information was received from Mrs. Leona Bookers.

There was a doctor in Lindenau, Dr. Roth, who lived in the August Olle home. There was a public scale and public water well between the Hollenman and Joe Dieringer Stores.

George Franke built the first blacksmith shop in Lindenau. He could build a complete wagon. Later, Chris Menning owned the shop. Then Walter Ummelman worked in the shop. Peter Roggenkamp and his father later bought the business. Ben Roggenkamp worked in it.

Fritz Kuester was the constable. There was no calaboose. He would lock any law breakers to his porch post until they could be taken to

The German men formed an organization they called Lindenau Schuetzen Verein, in 1901 (The Lindenau Shooting Club). Each member bought a share. They built a long building and called it a hall. They would have a shooting contest to determine the best marksman. They also held gatherings at the hall for anyone who wanted to come called "fest", feast, and dances. They would sell food and these gatherings grew into sausage feasts. Later their club became the Lindenau Rifle Club. A new hall was built in May of 1926, with Roscoe Smith as contractor. Many members helped. Ernest Leubert did much of the building. The Lindenau Hall is still a voting box for elections. Dances are held in the hall, both private and public. It is also rented out for birthday and wedding celebrations, receptions and family reunions.

Even to this day the sausage is cooked in big kettles — first wood was used and now butane to heat the kettles. The sausage suppers are for the benefit of the rifle club. As more settlers came and the railroad came, the shooting had to cease because of the danger, even though they had a target to shoot. Some of the settlers moved close to the hall. Robert Kolert took care of the hall.

Mr. & Mrs. Robert Kolert had a post office in their home. Mr. Fissel went to Cuero twice a week with a cart pulled by a horse to get the mail. At that time there were no public roads so the farmers let him drive through their land to go back and forth for the mail. All the farmers made gates so they could cross one another's land.

In 1906, the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroad bought 5.26 acres of land from Joseph Boehm, for $210.40. When the railroad started buying and building the railroad the settlers decided to move Lindenau closer to the railroad, its present location. Robert Kolert moved to Cuero. William Buchborn who had the first saloon, moved it to Westhoff.

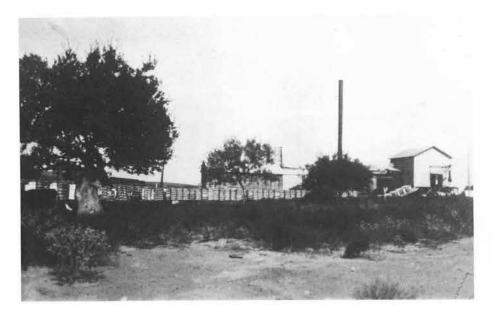

After Lindenau was moved, Joe Dieringer continued with the mail that was delivered by Mr. Fissel. After the railroad was finished, the "Dinkie" (train) brought the mail. In 1916, William Wehman went into the cotton ginning business with his brother Max for 5 years. In 1925 he opened a store. Then in 1933, William became postmaster until 1947. In 1921 Henry Hingst was assistant postmaster and worked until 1947 when the post office was closed.

August Olle owned the first saloon at the new Lindenau location. Then Bill Meischen owned it and Kolerts moved back and took ownership. Later Joe Dieringer owned it and added a pool table. Then the saloon was turned into a grocery store. Later Albert and Annie Dieringer Kuester took over the store. Albert also bought cotton and wool. This was the last store that stayed and it later burned.

All that's left of Lindenau now is the hall and nearby homes. Land is owned by 1st, 2nd, and 3rd generation descendants of the early settlers, whose homes are well kept. Only one place has been sold to someone from Houston, and one place sold to a firm in Yoakum (1978-79).

Lindenau School

The first tract of land for Lindenau School was purchased on Dec. 9, 1893, from Frank Brockhaus and wife Elenora for $60. It was purchased by Gus Schrade, August Phiel and Henry Rau, who were Lindenau Trustees at that time. This land is part of the H.G. Slade and John T. Wofford Survey. Money to build the school was collected from settlers who lived in the Lindenau District. The school house was built large enough to make two rooms by using a dividing wall. Later the settlers also built a home for the teachers to live in, and a barn for horses and buggies on the school property. The water supply was drawn by bucket from hand dug wells.

Lindenau Cotton Gin

Lindenau Lutheran Church

Records show that teachers were paid by days taught instead of months as early school was not held for nine months. Epidemics, cold weather, and field work interfered. Almost complete records in the DeWitt County Courthouse cover 1897 to 1951, showing trustees and teachers, salaries, etc. In 1938, Guilford School consolidated with Lindenau School, and in 1951, Lindenau consolidated with Westhoff School.

The original school house was used for other purposes than instruction. Before St. John Lutheran Church was built, services were held in homes as stated before, but when the school house was constructed, services were held in it. Pastor William Utesch came from Cuero once or twice a month to hold Sunday services. He came by wagon pulled by a pair of horses. The pastor also taught the Germans reading, writing, and arithmetic. The school building was used for the Grand Lodge of Order of the Sons of Hermann meetings organized Feb. 7, 1897 and Hochheim Prairie Fire Insurance meetings, organized in 1916.

Teachers had children put on plays and Christmas programs for the community. Schools went all out for sports like baseball, volleyball, and track events. The school participated in community meets with other schools. Another entertainment was the box supper. Girls prepared sandwiches, cake and fruit, decorated the boxes and auctioned them. The young men who bought the lunches shared it with the girl who prepared it.

Later the school house was a three room, three teacher school. Children walked, rode horseback and, after consolidation, rode buses. Teacher salaries started low, increased, then decreased during the depression, then in the 1940's increased again.

The author, V.J. Banis wrote in his novel, SAN ANTONE, "If God had anything in mind when he made Texas, it must have been to let a man know what freedom feels like".

This word "freedom" was probably the driving force that led a group of Lithuanian immigrants to leave their homes and loved ones and travel to the unknown frontier of Texas to establish new homes for themselves and their families.

Between the years of 1850 and 1860 these families arrived on the Texas coast and made their way to DeWitt County. Most of them ultimately became farmers and settled on land near Smith (Schmidt) Creek near Yorktown, Texas.

Descendants of these families have told stories of gold buried somewhere along the banks of the creek. Others tell of a grist mill that was constructed there and in later years the grinding stone was placed in front of the fire station in Yorktown. For years this stone was used as a stand to support the annual Christmas Tree. There are countless stories concerning a tragedy that occured in October 1869 in which two lawmen and two Kirlicks brothers were killed. (See related story.) There is a lone grave along the creek bank, and one can faintly read the name, E-Praetz, b. 1790 d. 1864, on the old weathered tombstone. Why was this person buried here, instead of in a cemetery that was only a short distance away?

Related stories concerning the Kerlick (Kirlicks), Stanchos, Scholze, Lundschen (Lundzin), Mertine (Mertien), Jonischckies, and Geldzus (Gelsus) families can be found elsewhere.

Other families were:

Michael Raguszus b. 25 Sept. 1806, Kreis Heydekrug, Lithuania landed at New Orleans in November 1852 and reached DeWitt County in February 1853. His wife, Schulie (Julie) (Lapp/Loup/Lobs) b. 15 Dec. 1798, Kreis Heydekrug, Lithuania and three children came with him.

Only two of the children lived to maturity. . . Katherine b. about 1830 married Heinrich Mertins in DeWitt Co. on 13 Apr. 1855. Another daughter, Anna (Emma) b. about 1836 married Ludwig Heinrich. Their son, Frederick Wilhelm Heinrich, became mayor of Yorktown in April 1913.

Michael Raguszus did 27 June 1869 and his wife, Schulie died 22 Feb. 1875. They are buried in the Jonischkis Cemetery near Yorktown, Texas.

Heinrich Mertins (b. 18 Feb. 1825, in Schakuenan, Lithuania) landed at Indianola, Texas on 18 Feb. 1853. (Note . . . Albert Mertins who was one of the founders of Yorktown may have been his brother. Albert Mertins married Mary Praenz (Praetz) on 21 March 1859 in DeWitt Co., Tx. Their son, Charles had a grocery store in Yorktown at one time. He also was a justice of the peace and a very active notary.)

Heinrich Mertins married Katherine Ragaszus on 13 Apr. 1855 in DeWitt County. Their children were: Gustav, Daniel, Rudolph, Richard, Mary, Berthold, Amelia, and Friedrich. They were members of St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Yorktown, Texas. Heinrich Mertins was a member of the DeWitt County Confederate Co. I, 6th Reg. Texas Infantry.

Jurgis (George) Praetz (b. 18 Dec. 1917 in Prussia) immigrated on 5 Nov. 1856. His wife was named Anna, b. about 1815 in Prussia. There were two known children: Elizabeth b. about 1840 who married Juluis Quast on 5 June 1860 in DeWitt County and Fredericke (no info).

LITTLE CHICAGO

Little Chicago was a German farm community located in northwestern DeWitt Community near Gruenau. This was seven miles north of Yorktown. A store was built by George Langley. Little Chicago was known for its athletic activity such as most German settlements started.

About 1897 athletic practice began at the Brandt farm continuing until May 1898. This was the section that became known as Little Chicago. A school was also established. Members of the first community athletic organization were the Brandts, George, Adolph and John; the Koopmanns, Willie, John and Anton; John Pundt; Arthur Haertig; Henry Remmers, and Henry Buesing.

LITTLE ST. LOUIS

Little St. Louis was on the northern edge of Yorktown. It consisted of a saloon, restaurant, dance hall, cotton gin, blacksmith shop and a produce business. Some of the names familiar to the area were: Hengst, Klecka, Geffert, Rugge, Schumacher, and Riemenschneider.

The saloon was in front of the building owned by Mr. & Mrs. Ferd Geffert with a walkway between the saloon and cafe. Tables for domino playing were set up in the walkway. Known as the Little St. Louis Saloon the business offered cold beer and soda water.

Later, the old buildings were torn down and Little St. Louis Inn was built. Lumber from the old dance hall was used to construct the first Yorktown Community Dance Hall.

Little St. Louis was only thriving for a short time but it is remembered by many people.

LITTLE MILWAUKEE

The site known as Little Milwaukee was located about one mile south of Yorktown on the Goliad Highway. Herman Gruenewald had a dance hall at this location in about 1925.

LONE TREE

Lone Tree School

Lone Tree School was located six miles northwest of Yoakum on the west side of the Petersville Road. Some early settlers whose names appeared in the school attendance were William Huth, Adolph and E. Hagens, F. Kaspare, R. Helrveg, Joe Horn, John Hrecek, Otto Kerchaff and Henry Ahrems. In 1896, by a lone tree on the prairie area of the county, the local people established a school with Fred Schmidt as the first teacher. The Lone Tree School later became part of the Yoakum Independent School District.

LOCKHART

T90

The Lockhart Black School was located east of the Guadalupe River on the Cuero-Gonzales Highway in about the center of the Samuel Lockhart Survey. It was started in 1902. The Lockhart Cemetery is about two miles to the north of the school on the George W. Davis league, which lies just north of Samuel Lockhart's survey and the cemetery is almost on its southern boundary. The New Hope Baptist Church was started in 1903 and is near the cemetery. The teacher who taught the longest was G.W. James. Other teachers were Lexie Wimbish and Callie (McNary) Grant.

LOST CREEK

Lost Creek was located west of Cuero on the Old San Antonio Highway. The only remaining reminder is the Lost Creek Cemetery. In 1911, the County School Board of Education for DeWitt County designated District 8 as Lost Creek School District. It was classified as an Intermediate School.

Names of the area included Chaddock, Nichols, Albright, Boldt, Hartman, Schlinke and Pullen.

METTING

T92

The first reference to Metting School was found in the school records of 1901-1902. Miss Alevine Gerhardt was employed to teach in Metting for a period of six months. The Metting school took the place of the Shiloh school and was located on land of the J.T. Callahan Survey. It was named for H. Metting who had owned the land. This was a one teacher school until it joined the Yorktown Independent School District in 1949.

On August 28, 1909, the DeWitt County Commissioners' Court subdivided the County into school districts and formed a school district of Callahan and Metting with both schools in one district. On May 2, 1921 the DeWitt County Board of School Trustees redefined the school district boundaries of DeWitt County, divided Callahan and Metting into two school districts.

Teachers for the Metting School were Lulla Riley, Pauline Echardt, Lena Hardt, Lydia Jacob, Katie Mainz, Valeska Galle, Jane Schmidt, Carmen Hermes, Irene Wanier, Mattie L. Brown, Josie Pieper, Lillian Placke, Hilda Schroeter, C.M. Jacobs, Millie Jacobs, Opal Powell, Frances Lau, Flora Grun, Edna P. Jacob, Annie Sue Murray, Frances Morgenroth, Milton L. Thuem, Edna Semper, Mrs. Edgar Dittfurth, Georgia Smalley, Georgia Kneifel, Leona Pieper, Frieda Nurnberger, Ellenora Baca, Mary Respondek, Mrs. Alton Spies, and Mrs. Eva Schostag.

MEYERSDALE

After the death of Adolph Spies, Sr. in 1919, his ranch was divided among his ten children and cut up into farms. This created a community of young families and the necessity for a school. Old Bomba School, two miles to the east, had been started in 1899 as the school for Upper Meyersville; and the Oakdale School which was near the Goliad County line was started in 1886. Each of these schools had only a few students in attendance. They agreed to join with Spies Ranch Community to form school district number 43.

In 1923, a modern two room schoolhouse was located two miles northwest of Upper Meyersville and two miles northeast of Oakdale on the Yorktown-Meyersville Road (237) and nine miles east of Yorktown. It was named Meyersdale, a combination of Meyersville and Oakdale. For a number of years it had two teachers and was proud to be near the homesite of Captain John York.

Meyersville was the second German settlement to be established in DeWitt County before 1850. German dukes and princes organized in 1844 for the purpose of establishing German families in the new world, selecting the state of Texas as that place. This organization was known as the Mainzer Adels-Verein (the Society for Protection of German Immigrants in Texas). In May 1846, Adolph Meyer, his sister, Mariane, Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Hausman, Mr. and Mrs. August Rabke, and Fr. Hoermann/ and family arrived and settled along the twelve mile Coleto Creek. Meyersville was named after Adolph Meyer and Mr. F. Hausman is considered co-founder. By December of 1846 other families in Meyersville were those of Ludwig Franke, W. Goebert, A. Haun, Henrich Rosener, Chr. Moeller, and Chr. Thieme.

Among those who followed soon after, we find the names of Adickes, Albrecht, Arnecke, Arnold, Atzenhoefer, Bluntzer, Braunig, Buecking, Buehrig, Buesing, Diebel, Dreier, Doehrman, Egg, Gerbert, Gohmert, Hasdorff, Hiller, Ideus; Jacob, Jonischkie, Junker, Krone, Landgrebe, Letterman, Lockhauser, Manngold, Marr, Mauer, Meisenhelder, Mohr, Preus, Rath, Reinhardt, Roeder, Rauch, Sager, Schaeg, Schaefer, Schlorlemmer, Schiwetz, Seiler, Talmje, Wacher, Wendel, Wilms, Westhoff, Wolf, Wurz and York.

sea voyages. On one such rough sea oyage of about two months, it is reported that immigrants prayed to their God for protection and vowed, if granted safe arrival in their new homeland, to build a church in His honor. Their prayers were heard and their petitions granted. The immigrants kept their promise and built the Lord a House of Worship, as soon as circumstances permitted. This was the beginning of Meyersville.

Meyersville is located about ten miles south of Cuero. Meyersville at one time had several stores, a drug store, a mattress factory, woodwork shop, saddlery, tailor shop, hotel, blacksmiths, cotton gins, a gristmill, powered by a Dutch type windmill, and a castor bean oil press. The oil was used on saddles, harnesses, and other leather goods.

By 1855 some settlers built two story rock and wood homes with a basement to use for food and wine storage. They dug their water wells by hand.

When war came, men enlisted in Captain Robert Kleberg's Coleto Home Guards Reserve Company Texas Militia which was organized in 1858 to repel invaders. Headquarters were made in Meyersville in 1861. During the Civil War, teamsters hauled cotton by wagon to Mexico, taking about three month's time for the round trip.

During the post Civil War days when the Union Soldiers came through to ransack the homes, the children would hide and the pioneers would protect some of their beginnings by hiding them in large trees and cellars.

After the close of the Civil War, a Brass Band was organized and practiced in the upstairs of the drug store. Twice a week a Stage Coach carried passengers and mail from San Antonio to Indianola through Meyersville. Many of the early pioneers hauled freight from Indianola to San Antonio for a livelihood.

The 1860 Agricultural Census for Meyersville showed that seventy two of its eighty landowners were of German background.

In the early years, the community was served by a butcher who would pack the meat neatly in covered wooden box beds on a horse drawn spring wagon. Deliveries were made to the homes. Cost of choice roasts was six to eight cents per pound.

In the horse and buggy days when the days work was done and the cool evening breeze was laden with the scent of blooming flowers, families would gather on the front porch and sing favorite songs and hymns.

Doctors who practiced in Meyersville were Dr. Thompson, Dr. Bartlett, Dr. Voelkel, Dr. Payne, Dr. Shimer, Dr. Bonham, Dr. Mernitz, Dr. Curry and Dr. Sutton.

Meyersville is a community of people where neighbor helps neighbor when there is a need. There is a devotion to a noble cause. It provides recreation for the body and food for the soul. A Historical Marker was dedicated on March 14, 1971 in Meyersville to honor our ancestors and to provide hope for the future.

MEYERSVILLE, POST OFFICE

Meyersville Post Office can trace its beginning to the city of Hanover, Germany, the birthplace of Johann Heinrich Adolphius (Adolph) Meyer. He was born there in 1813, and later became the first postmaster of Meyersville, Texas. Early in the 1840's, Adolph Meyer decided to take advantage of an offer of the "Mainzer Adelsverein" an organization of a group of German noblemen, whose purpose it was to secure land in Texas for Germans and other Europeans wishing to settle in this "land of opportunity". The head of each household was to be entitled to 320 acres of land and other benefits, as well. So, on September 9e, 1845 Meyer and two sisters set sail for America, landing in Galveston December 4, 1845. They traveled to Indianola, and then, inland to Coleto Creek. They arrived there May 28, 1846, being some of the first settlers there. Others soon followed.

Meyer built his home where the LaBahia Road crossed the Coleto. On its regular trips from Goliad to San Antonio, the stage would stop at the Meyer home to change horses and leave mail. This led to the establishment of a United States Post Office at this site on December 22, 1851, with Meyer appointed as Postmaster. His sister, Mariana Meyer, lived with him and helped him in the post office. The settlement became known as "Meyersville".

In 1856 a mail route was established from Cuero, through Meyersville, to Goliad. The post office was moved from the Meyer home to the Wm. Westhoff Store, which later became the Kron Store. In 1866 Adolph Meyer was succeeded by his sister, Mariana, who served as postmistress until her death May 21, 1872. John Kron was appointed to take her place, but served only until November 1872, at which time he was succeeded by Henry Hausman.

At this time a mail route was established between Cuero and Arneckeville, Meyersville, Weser and Goliad, and the post office was moved again, this time about three miles, to its present location, the Isaac Egg Store. From that time on, even though Henry Hausman was officially the postmaster, Isaac Egg tended the post office, Mr. Egg was officially appointed postmaster December 9, 1879.

Isaac Egg was the first of a long line of the Egg family to serve as postmaster in Meyersville. He served until his death on July 20, 1909. His oldest son, Edwin Egg, succeeded him on November 10, 1909. Edwin served until his death, after which his brother, Rudolph Egg, was appointed on January 12, 1912. He served until his death on February 4, 1934, after which his son, Isaac E. Egg, served as acting postmaster until he was officially appointed as postmaster on August 29, 1934.

During World War II, while Isaac served his country in the U.S. Army, his twin brother, Henry Egg, served as postmaster until Isaac returned from the military service and resumed his position as postmaster. After Isaac's' retirement on June 30,1975, his brother, Walter Egg was appointed to fill the position. He is still the postmaster in Meyersville today. His daughter, Barbara (Egg) Mueller, serves as Assistant Postal Clerk.

The Meyersville Post Office is one of the few Fourth Class Post Offices left in the area. Here, in Meyersville, are several families who still have boxes, and pick up their daily mail at the Post Office rather than have it delivered to them on the Meyersville Star Route, which covers a number of miles of state and county roads. Many others utilize the post office for purchasing stamps, money orders, and other services which the post office provides. This small post office may not be the busiest post office in the area but it serves the community well, and the services it provides are appreciated by all local residents.

MEYERSVILLE SCHOOL HISTORY

Adolph Meyer, his wife, and his sister, Freda Hausman, were the first settlers in Meyersville. They came all the way from Germany in 1846. Meyer and the other German immigrants settled along the 12 Mile Coleto Creek. At first, they only had a school at the church. Later, they built the public school.

Meyersville Independent German English School was created July 22, 1889, when the community bought 4 acres of land from Mary Hausman for $60. On October 1, 1898, two tracts of land from the estate of Henry Rossner were added to the school district. In 1899 two schools were built at Meyersville, one for the younger children and one for the older children. Between 1906 and 1914 the two buildings were expanded to accommodate four grade levels in each.

From 1920 until 1929, there were nine grades at Meyersville. There was only one building divided into two rooms. There were approximately 40 students enrolled in the school.

From 1930 until 1938, there were eight grades and one building. The grading system used letter grades. They had baseball and volleyball equipment to play with. The summer vacation was three months long. They received punishments such as standing in the corner, writing 100 sentences, and whipping with a paddle. They ate their lunch under the trees. Sometimes in winter, lunch was held around the wood stove. They took their lunches in syrup buckets. School pictures were taken in black and white. In future years, some modernized changes occurred. The school became larger and was able to provide more children with an education.

During the 1940's there were one to three classrooms with about eight or ten students per grade. The curriculum included reading, writing, math, spelling, health, and history. Science, physical education, and fine arts were not part of the curriculum during that time. The school provided no kind of transportation. Children had to walk or ride a horse. Each child was given a book to use for each subject. Sometime a workbook would be made available to a student.

Meyersville School began to grow very rapidly in the next few years and the school went through many changes and improvements. The year 1950 brought the annexation of the New County Line School with Meyersville School.

From 1951 until 1958, students enrolled in first grade at the age of five. During these years, there were 5 to 6 students in every class. On July 28, 1958, the blueprints for the original construction of the present day facility were approved. In order to construct the new facility on school property, the old school building was moved across the road by the St. John's Lutheran Church. Classes continued to be conducted in the old building. One teacher taught students in grades one through four and another taught grades five through eight. The new school was completed in 1959. The old school building became the Parish Hall for the Lutheran Church as it is today. The 1958-59 construction consisted of an office, four classrooms, library, restrooms, cafeteria, and kitchen. The first equipped playground was con-Arneckeville annexed to Meyersville in 1963. That increased the number of students at the Meyersville School.

Between the years 1967-1977, first through eighth grades were taught. Enrollment ranged from 80 to 100 students.

Meyersville Common School District Number 20 became Meyersville Independent School District on September 1, 1978, when the state dissolved the supervision of rural schools by county superintendents. Prior to this date the DeWitt County School Superintendent and a campus principal had overseen the school.

Many improvements were added to the school during the late 70's and the 80's. The kindergarten addition was approved to be built on April 26, 1979. The first kindergarten class started school in 1979-80.

The fourth and fifth grade classrooms were built and became a new addition to the campus in August, 1985. The administration building was then moved to its present site. Air conditioning units were also installed in the school. A gymnasium was constructed and completed in August, 1987. The school experienced growth and had approximately 130 students enrolled.

A satellite dish and receiver were presented to the school by DeWitt County Electric Cooperative for educational programming in 1988. This generous gift has increased educational opportunities for students and the community.

During the 1989-90 school year the Meyersville School serves approximately 150 students in grades K-8 and transfers about 65 high school students to Cuero. The students excel in academics and citizenship. The first nine years of education at Meyersville provide a firm foundation for the students to build upon for years to come. Meyersville Independent School District has high expectations for its students and dedicates its efforts and resources to assure that every student has opportunity to learn.

Historical Highlights

House of God and Gate of Heaven

The Meyersville Catholic Church stands proudly in Upper Meyersville surrounded by giant liveoaks. Its history would come alive if the trees could talk — the were here first. The church building does speak to those who approach it, but in Latin. The Church Motto, inscribed on the cornerstone, says, "House of God and Gate of Heaven."

Unusual Beginning

Is this Church in Meyersville the result of an accident? If we ignore the Providence of God, we will say "Yes." Peter Bluntzer and his family landed on the Texas coast, at Indianola in the year 1842. Their destination was Castro-ville, a few miles west of San Antonio. The trip was by wagon, on a wagon trail. Unfortunately Peter's wagon turned over, and his wife Theresa suffered a broken leg. This accident interrupted their journey, while the other colonists continued on their way to Castroville.

The Bluntzer family lived for a few years in Victoria. They then bought land on Coleto Creek. There they found a German community in the making, near the point where the Goliad-Cuero road crosses the creek. The first of these settlers was Adolph Meyer. Local historians indicate that on December 22, 1851, a Post Office was opened in Meyer's home. — This was the origin of the name Meyersville.

Peter and Theresa Bluntzer are the ancestors of all the Texas Bluntzers. Their claim to fame, however, is their strong Catholic faith, as well as their good effort to preserve that faith. Priests from Victoria came only "once in a while" for Mass and Religious instructions. For some time Mass was celebrated in the Bluntzer home. The need for a church was parish. The settlers had limited means, but they contributed generously. Their first small church building was only 24 by 26 feet. Father J.A. Koenig celebrated the first Mass in the new church on November 4, 1859, and the formal dedication was on New Year's Day, 1860.

It is noteworthy that the accident which stopped the Bluntzers on their way led to the obvious. Mr. Bluntzer took the lead by donating fifteen acres of land, the site of the present

It is noteworthy that the accident which stopped the Bluntzers on their way led to the forming of this new parish in honor of Sts. Peter and Paul. This was the very first Catholic parish in DeWitt County.

Good Times and Bad Times

The first small church served the needs of the parishioners until 1880, when a larger and more convenient building was dedicated. This one, in turn, was destroyed by a storm, but it was promptly rebuilt. In spite of difficulties the parish grew and prospered. Then in 1892 Father Gerlach, a zealous German priest took charge of the parish. He made many improvements, including the building of the first rectory.

Unfortunately, during this time, the Polish people of the congregation withdrew and built their own church, St. Joseph's, three miles west, in the direction of Yorktown. This separation lasted for many years. Complete reunion came only in 1947, when the St. Joseph's Church building was removed completely. Meantime, the people of Sts. Peter and Paul suffered the loss of their church building, by fire, in the year 1938. The people rebounded quickly, and under the administration of Father Benz, they dedicated a new church on July 2, 1939. Monsignor John J. Sheehan was sent by Archbishop Drosserts of San Antonio to officiate at the celebration. The Building Committee for the new church and rectory were the following: W.H. Arnold, Albert Bammert, Wm. Bitterly, Henry Braden, Alvin Doehrman, William Lau, Fred Ohrt, Alfred Semmler and Walter Zengerle. Apparently they did a good job - Father Benz has recorded his commendation, "May God reward your service a hundredfold in this work and in the hereafter."

Modern Times

The new Church of 1939 still serves the Meyersville parishioners. In recent years the parish was served by Fathers Endler, Murski, Flynn, O'Shaughnessy and Smerke. When Father Smerke left in 1976, Father Edward Bartsch was appointed Pastor. Since he lived in Yorktown, Father Henry Moczygemba was assigned to help in Meyersville. Father Bartsch moved into the Meyersville rectory in October, 1982. At the same time he was given charge of St. Aloysius Church in Westhoff. This arrangement continues at the present time. Apparently the people appreciate the present situation. They are donating generously, and have continued to make improvements. Outstanding examples are the new hall in 1980, six extra classrooms in 1983, complete remodeling of the hall kitchen in 1984, new siding on the church in 1987, air-conditioning of the church in 1988. Improvements underway in 1989 are a new roof on the church and on the rectory.

The parish of Sts. Peter and Paul, at the same time, supports the diocese of which it is a part. Since 1982 that diocese has been "Victoria in Texas", with Bishop Charles V. Grahmann its Chief Shepherd. At its beginning the parish was part of the Diocese of Galveston, and then, in 1874, it became part of the Diocese of San Antonio. It has remained in the San Antonio jurisdiction until the creation of the Diocese of Victoria in 1982.

On To The Future

About sixty-five families call the Church of Sts. Peter and Paul their "House of God and Gate of Heaven." Many others attend once in a while, and they feel welcome. The Holy Eucharist is celebrated not only on Sundays, but also on weekdays, except Thursdays, when the pastor goes to his other parish in Westhoff.

History can record numbers, buildings and events. Between the lines, however, one finds the good will of the people. To survive the community must have a strong faith in God. The present generation has built on the faith of their ancestors. They now continue to build for the future.

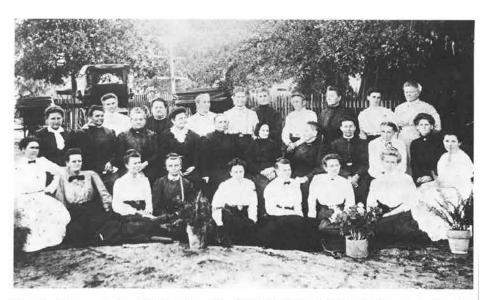

The spiritual life of the Meyersville parishioners stands out in the Religion Program for youth, and Adult Education Program, Rosary Group, continuing Confirmation Instruction, Fatima Devotions, Advent and Lenten Projects, and other events according to the Church Calendar. This writer begs the Good Lord to bless these and the many other good efforts of many loyal parishioners!

Church of Meyersville, Tx is the Old Stone Church, which stands under the massive old live oak trees, beside the cemetery where so many of its faithful members have been laid to rest.

The Stone Church was the second of three sanctuaries in which this congregation has worshipped. The first, a little log church, was built in 1850, even before the church was organized into a congregation. It served as a place of worship and as a schoolhouse until after the end of the Civil War.

In spite of many hardships endured before, during, and after the War, the congregation, on Ascension Day in 1866, passed this resolution: "As a thankoffering for peace which we now enjoy and for the fruitful times, a new house of worship is to be built for the Lord." The following were appointed as a building committee: Jacob Schiwetz, Ludwig Franke, Aaron Adickes, Christian Hartman, Freidrich Hausmann, and Carl Schaefer. Lists were posted in neighborhood stores where members and friends could sign up for pledges for contributions.

The building was to be 46 feet long, 28 feet wide, and the walls 14 feet high and 2 feet thick. Mr. Seiler and Mr. Badinger were given the contract for quarrying the stones from a nearby quarry for $200.00. Friedrich Hausmann got the contract to erect the walls for $650.00, which included the hauling of sand and water. Members of the congregation hauled the stones free of charge. Cost of the church was $3,000.00.

The bell for the church had arrived some time before the building was finished and was kept in the Hausman's Store. If customers wanted to hear the tone of the bell, Mr. Hausman would ring it for a dime. Those dimes helped pay for the bell, which now hangs in the steeple of the present church and still calls the faithful to come to worship the Lord each Sunday morning.

The cornerstone of the Church was laid Sunday, Sept. 30, 1866. After the constitution was read, 44 members signed it, and it was placed into a container, which was then put into a tin box, made by William Schorlemmer. This was placed into the cornerstone and lowered into the foundation, accompanied by the customary three strokes of the hammer.

The Church was dedicated to the Glory of God on May 12, 1867. Pastor Roehm, president of the Texas Synod, led the service of dedication. It was, indeed, a day filled with great joy.

Since, after thirty years, the church was in need of repairs, it was completely renovated in 1896. The ceiling was raised 6 feet, a new roof was put on, and the steeple with a cross was built 17 feet higher. Other improvements were made, both inside and outside. The Ladies Aid, which had recently been organized, in 1895, bought the pulpit, altar and the pews. Cost of the renovation was approximately $1,000.00. Three worship services were held on the day of rededication, June 21, 1896. That year was also the 50th anniversary of the founding of Meyersville, and the 30th anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of this stone church.

But with the passing of time, all things deteriorate, and so it was with the Old Stone Church. And since the congregation had also outgrown this small building, in 1919 a resolution was passed to make no more repairs on it. So a large brick church with basement was built. The last service in the Old Stone Church was held in May, 1921, and on July 20, 1921, the new sanctuary was dedicated. It still serves the congregation today.

However, the Stone Church was still being used. It served as a storage place for tools and other items, and as a place to eat when there was picnics or other church gatherings. But after years of neglect, in July, 1951, it was decided to dismantle it if or when that became necessary.

However, many older members and friends refused to accept this decision, and when the DeWitt Co. Historic Commission inquired about leasing the old building to convert it into a county museum, the feeling that we should keep the church under our control was stronger than ever.

In the spring of 1957, lightning struck the steeple, doing considerable damage, which made it clear, either restore the old building or dismantle it. In 1958 the congregation reconsidered, and rescinded the motion of 1951, and decided to restore the Old Stone Church.

Work was begun immediately, and on Oct. 26, 1958, a rededication service was held, combined with a Historic and Homecoming Celebration for St. John members and friends. In Jan. 1959, a Stone Church Restoration Committee was appointed to continue the restoration and to keep up what had been done.

August 12, 1961 this landmark was awarded a Texas Historic Building Medallion by the Texas State Historical Survey Committee.

September 29, 1968 the thirteenth Texas Restoration Award was presented to the Old Stone Church by the DeWitt County Historical Survey Commission.

Today the Stone Church is St. John's Museum, containing many old Bibles, documents, books and other artifacts from this church and the Little Log Cabin Church. They are on display in large display cases. The old pulpit and altar stand in their original spots.

Here on this historic and hallowed ground, under the great oak trees, stands the Old Stone Church of 1867 as a memorial of gratitude for Divine Blessings to the Glory of God.

St. John Evangelical Lutheran Church of Meyersville, TX

In 1846, a group of German Lutherans sailed across the stormy Atlantic, to America. It was a difficult voyage across the turbulent sea. They made a vow to God that, if He would bring them safely to their destination, they would build for Him a house of worship. He answered their prayers, and soon they had built the church, a little log cabin church, with a dirt floor, a door on each end and a window on each side. In 1856, a wood floor was installed. Christoph Thieme, one of the settlers, had donated one acre of land as the site for the church. Later, the congregation bought 5 more acres from him for $1.00 an acre.

Since there was no Lutheran pastor in the area, a Methodist, Pastor Bauer, probably a Circuit Preacher, served them. One of the settlers, Mr. Dreier, had met him in Victoria, and had told him of their great need for spiritual help in times of illness, stress and death. Later Mr. Grote, also a Methodist, served them.

But these Germans were of the Lutheran faith, and when they heard that two young Lutheran missionaries had been sent from Basel Switzerland to Victoria to minister to the Indians and others in the area, Wilhelm Schorlemmer went to Victoria to ask one of them to come to their aid. So, Christoph Adam Sager came to work in Meyersville, where, in 1851, he organized the Lutherans into a congregation. This was the beginning of St. John Evangelical Lutheran Church of Meyersville. A constitution was drawn up. Friedrich Hasdorf and Christian Hartman were the first Church Council. A log cabin parsonage was built and a cemetery was laid out. A school was opened, classes being held in the church, with the pastor as teacher. In 1859 a Mr. Barnes was hired to teach in the English language, with the pastor teaching German, Pastor Sager left Meyersville in 1855 to serve elsewhere.

The constitution was revised in 1859 and was signed by 46 members (heads of households only). So it seems that the church in Meyersville was well established by this time. In 1864 a house was bought for $100.00 to replace the log parsonage. It was moved to its new location by a team of oxen.

In 1867, a new stone church was dedicated to God as a thankoffering for peace after the Civil War. This story, with pictures, is given separately.

The years following the war were years of growth and development.

1884 — The Pastor Stricker organized a congregation in Kilgore with the help of St. John and served both congregations.

1895 — Pastor Westerhoff organized the Ladies Aid, and in 1886, he started Saturday School for religious instruction for the children

1899 — A Mission Festival was held, with an offering being sent to starving people in India. This led to the custom of having an annual Mission Festival. It is still observed with a mission offering and a potluck dinner after services.

1904 — Pastor Gerstman organized the Sunday School.

1918 — Pastor Gogolin organized the Luther League, an organization for the Youth.

1920 — One English worship service was held each month, but Sunday School and confirmation Instruction were continued in the German, as they had been.

1920-1922 — A new church, made of cement bricks, was built, and was dedicated on June 20, 1922. The bricks were made on the church grounds. It was of Gothic style and had a basement. The cost of the church was $24,000.00. It is the church in which the congregation still worships. It has been renovated several times. The last time was in 1987, at which time, a new roof was put on, the cross on the steeple was replaced with a new one, walls were repaired and painted, and other major repairs were made.

1923 — Widows and other single women were given the right to vote. It was not until forty years later, 1973, that this right to vote and the right to hold office was extended to include all women of the congregation.

1934 — Three worship services a month were held in English. Thirty years later, in 1964, all German services were discontinued, even though many older members opposed this.

1940 — The first Summer Vacation Bible School was held, 3 teachers and 46 pupils were enrolled.

1941 — A new parsonage, the fourth and the present one, of stucco, was built.

1948 — A two manual pipe organ was built for the church and installed. In 1953 chimes were added.

1951 — The congregation celebrated its 100th anniversary.

1959 — The congregation bought the Meyersville Schoolhouse, moved it to the church, remodeled it and added on to it. It was dedicated to serve as a Parish House for the church.

1975 — The 125th Anniversary of the congregation was celebrated.

1986 — Nancy Egg Maeker was ordained as a Lutheran pastor. She was the first of St. John's members born and reared in Meyersville, to join the ranks of the Lutheran clergy.

Through the years of its long history, this congregation has been served by eighteen pastors. The church now has 354 members. Sunday School and worship services are held each Sunday morning, with Holy Communion on the first Sunday of the month. Dedicated Christians serve as teachers and leaders in the Sunday School and in the various organizations within the church, which include something for everyone.

May the Lord continue to bless St. John Evangelical Lutheran Church of Meyersville for many more years, as He has done in the past.

MORRIS

Morris School

Morris settlement was located about five miles southwest of Yoakum off of Highway 77A. The land was from the Fream League and the Joseph H. Wood Survey. It was originally bought by J.P. Morris and he sold parts of it to settlers in the late 1800's.

Three trustees were elected for the purpose of overseeing a school for the children of the settlers. J.P. Morris gave two acres to the trustees, J. Peters, Chas. Frels, P.R. Witte, on June 24, 1891. A one room building with a porch was erected in 1891 and was used for a school for several years. Another room was added later to make it a two room school which was used until 1928 for a school. This was a two teacher school for five months of the year and a one teacher school for two months of the year. School was also taught at night for children who worked in the fields at a fee of $100 per month. Classes were first grade through seventh grade.

Besides the two room school building on these two acres, was a three room house and porch for the teacher, a small barn which stored hay, buggy and horse, and two toilet facilities. There was also a hand dug cistern for drinking water. About 1907, a well was drilled and a hand pump was installed.

Some of the families who sent children to Morris School were: Petering, Leist, Hickey, Pilzner, Schmidt, Buesing, Onhaiser, Peters, Friedel, Pargmann, Edgar, Maresch, Brosch, Cudd, Walicek, Benys, Drabeck, Prause, Allen, Stevens, Duke, McCoy, Wendel, Coldeway, Thomas, Barre, DeDear, Erdelt, Baros, Boening, Ceesa, Peterick, Orsak, Hodges, Rice, Urban, Drozd, Long, Rinn, Kuechler, Hanzelka, Witte, Mudd, DeeReese, Hilmers and others.

The Yoakum School Trustees gave this school and improvements to the Morris Community in 1953 and in 1965, the Center School District gave their nearby school building to add to the Morris building. Today the Morris Center Community Center consists of four large rooms, with running water, butane and wood heat, and two fans for cooling.

This Community Center has been a success because so many have given of their time, talent and means to keep this Community Center active.

NOPAL (SASSEVILLE)

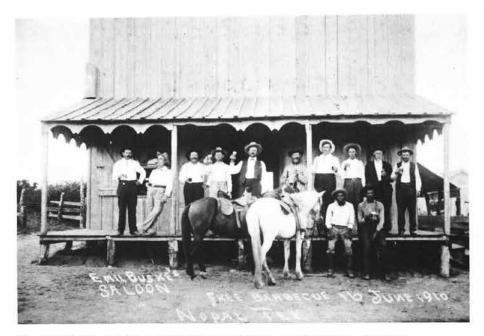

The community of Nopal was at one time a relatively important asset to the local area residents. It is located on present day FM 108, between Smiley and Yorktown, just inside DeWitt County, near the DeWitt/Gonzales County boundary.

At one time W.H. Graham and Geo. J. Schliecher owned 301 acres in the Francisco Gonzales League on Clear Creek. They probably were growing cotton in the area, and may have built the grocery store/saloon. They sold the 301 acres to Emil Sasse on Dec. 5, 1890, for the sum of $2,633.75, which they financed at 10% interest. The deed specifies that the lien is against the premises and improvements, suggesting that some part of the community may have already been built.

On December 11, 1896, Emil Sasse and his wife sold 8 acres of land to F. Huebner. This 8 acres was located in the southwest corner of the 301 acre tract. One of the stipulations in the deed was that the cotton gin cannot be removed. And that it cannot be used for any other purpose than what it was then being used. It is evident that during the period 1890-1896, was when Emil Sasse had operated a grocery store as well as the cotton gin, and the community came to be known as Sasseville.

Several years later Sam Schwab had become owner of the Sasseville community, and on May 14, 1902, Sam Schwab etal sold the community to Buske and Buchhorn for the amount of $4,500. The deed states that the sale includes the cotton gin, and all tools and equipment, all houses, fences, and all improvements. Also in 1902 the same Sasseville was changed to Nopal (Spanish for cactus) when a post office was moved there. Besides the post office, the community had a German Lutheran church, a gin, blacksmith shop, two general stores, drug store, and a school was also established.

by 1910, Emil Buske was operating the old Sasse Grocery as "Emil Buske's Saloon", as evidence by the photograph. A close examination of the photograph reveals that the name "C.E. Sasse", along with the word "Groceries", on the bottom, is still visible on the sign-board of the building front, although it is very faded. This building is evidently the original Sasse Grocery store. In the 1910 photograph the building appears to already have been quite a few years old judging from its condition, and may have been built prior to 1890. Also note that the porch roof is board and batten construction instead of being covered with shingles, which were in common use by this time.

The object on the left end of the porch roof is a beer advertisement, possibly of "Triple X Lager Beer".

Past the right side of the saloon, a fairly large house and picket fence can be seen in the distant background, beyond the attached leanto shed for horses or buggies.

Barely visible under the middle of the porch, beyond the legs of the horses, is someone's white and tan hound, busy sleeping the day away.

Nopal School

The Nopal School was started about 1902. The children of the area had at one time attended a school called "Sandgate School". Also, there was an area nearby called Sasseville whose children attended Sandgate. In 1902, the Nopal School began by combining Sandgate and Sasseville and continued as a public school until it united with nearby Clear Creek School in 1925.

NORDHEIM – DEWITT COUNTY, TEXAS

T102

At the southwest end of DeWitt County and at the northern base of historic Pilot Knob nestles the little town of Nordheim. Old-timers insisted that the treacherous Mannehuilla Creek had its beginning with the ponds in Nordheim and flowed around the eastern side of Pilot Knob southward into the San Antonio River. This may very well be true, because The Handbook of Texas locates the creek's beginning in southwest DeWitt County and flowing into the San Antonio River.

There has always been this typically German, hard to define but pervasive, style of complacent fellowship best described as "Deutche Gemutlichkeit". You sense it at socials, card and domino games, conversations at street corners, and over beer and coffee. But don't misread Nordheimers completely — they also know how to live it up with good food, beer and music in an "Immer Lustig" fashion. Usually, non-Germans have had little difficulty adjusting and becoming a part of it all. Many former Nordheimers, plus some newcomers, have chosen to quit the "rat-race" and retired in laid-back Nordheim. Young people have chosen to come back to live and raise their children in Nordheim, and they strive to keep the old spirit and customs alive.

Typically, there are no modernized store fronts on main street — only a few metal awnings have been removed and the old boardwalks have been replaced with concrete sidewalks. There are even a few old hitching posts and rings left to remind the visitor of the day of the horse. Wim Wenders, a German movie producer, decided Nordheim was the perfect place to film part of his movie, Paris, Texas, when passing through. Main Street, the Washateria and The Broadway Bar, with its original bar, brass rail and its undisturbed interior, became an integrated part of the movie.

Early Beginnings

This area of DeWitt County was first surveyed by the Goliad Land District in 1838 and was patented to Robert Galletty in 1841, while Texas was an independent Republic. In 1879 Vachel Weldon began acquiring the land from Gus Osterloh two story store and living quarters. Built in 1897 in Nordheim. The newer store on the left was built later.

Burow Bros. — Carl, August, and Bruno came to Nordheim in 1870's the R. Galletty heirs. By 1881 the R. Galletty heirs and V. Weldon had sold out a large part of their holdings to H. Runge and Co. of Cuero.

There were numerous settlers in the area before the town was laid out in 1895. August Burow bought land two miles east of the present town in the 1870's. Henry Meyer acquired land about two miles north of the present town in 1887. Parts of these early land holdings are owned and operated by heirs today; namely, the Heldt Estate on Burow land and Edmund and Mildred (Meyer-Huck) Mueller on H. Meyer land. Three silver-inlaid Mexican spurs were recently found on the Meyer land by Edmund Mueller. After the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railroad was completed in 1886, many more settlers bought land and moved into the area. In 1897 the Railroad built a blind siding near the entrance to the H. Runge & Co. Ranch and the name Weldon Switch was given the area by the railroad. Early Texas maps showed the name Weldon where Nordheim is now located. William Frobese of the H. Runge & Co. Ranch changed the name to Nordheim after his hometown of Northeim in Hanover, Germany. The U.S. Post Office Department officially recognized the name of Nordheim in 1898.

It was H. Runge & Co., particularly William Frobese and Walter Reiffert, that had a great impact on the early development of Nordheim. The company laid out the town site in 1895 and settlers and speculators were soon buying up the blocks and lots for building or resale. H. Runge & Co. "sold" two acres of land on Pilot Knob for $10 to a group of men organized to establish a cemetery. This beautiful cemetery has been regularly enlarged by popular demand, because so many former Nordheimers want to "return" to be buried there. The Company also donated land for the erection of a Lutheran Church in 1908 and a Catholic Church in 1922. Land was also given for the building of a one-room frame school house located where the FFA sheds are now situated. In 1922 city block #14 was presented to the town of Nordheim for a park as a silver Jubilee gift from H. Runge & Co.

The first business block was bought by Henry Schlosser, Sr. in 1895. He erected the first store building and in 1897 the first post office was set up in the store with Henry Schlosser, Sr. as Nordheim's first postmaster. The building is still in existence and is now owned by the Garland Wagenschein family. Mrs. Henry Schlosser, Sr. was named "The Mother of Nordheim" and appropriately so, for the H. Schlosser's daughter, Lillie, was the first child born in the town of Nordheim. Sadly, Mr. Schlosser suffered a premature death in 1911.

In 1895 August Kasten bought a section of land south of Pilot Knob and acquired the first residence lot in the new town. In the same year he erected the first cotton gin with Ernst Westphal and Paul Ullrich as operators. In 1902 August Kasten financed a general mercantile store for William Kasten and Edward Wied. In 1904 Kasten & Wied brought the Cabeza gin, operated by Otto Kasten, into Nordheim and, as active cotton buyers and ginners, they contributed their share to bringing Nordheim into prominence as a cotton market. That same year the business was divided with Ed Wied owning the gin while the mercantile store was owned by William and Louise (Westphal) Kasten, the parents of Arno Kasten, first boy and second child born in Nordheim.

Gustav Osterloh cast his lot with Nordheim by buying part of block #1 and erecting a two story wood building thereon in 1897, the lower story was used for a general store while the upper story served as a temporary residence for the family. Another store building was erected on the north side of the original one and the Osterloh store stock was greatly expanded. Leo C. Neutzler came to Nordheim as a teacher in 1903 but in 1906 he joined Gus Osterloh in the mercantile business. In that same year (1906) they established Nordheim's first bank. In 1911 they erected Nordheim's first brick store building, but Gus Osterloh did not get to enjoy the new building for long, since he tragically died of food poisoning the same year. The title of "Father of Nordheim" was deservedly bestowed upon Gustav Osterloh, for his energy and devotion helped set Nordheim in motion as a prosperous pioneer town.

Carl Burow erected a gin in 1898 which eventually became the Farmers Union Gin Co., then the Farmers Co-op and today is operated as a Feed Mart.

The above mentioned individuals are usually considered the founding "movers and shakers" by early local historians. However, there were many more farmers, ranchers, and businessmen who played an important role in Nordheim's beginning, growth and survival. Many of the early families remained to help build, nurture and sustain Nordheim through two, three or four generations while others stayed a short time and moved on. Some additional names of permanent settlers that appear up to 1900 were Washow, Sonneborn, Hohn, Dahlman, Schulz, Schlbach, Teiwes, Morisse, Janssen, Pevestorff, Helmers, Wolf, G. Mueller, D. Bolting and Fritz Thormaehlen.

During 1901 and 1902 there was an upsurge of families who tried their hand at all the services necessary to serve a community's survival such as: Heer, well driller; Blanton, newspaper; Grosse, store; Steinbach, hosiery factory and cafe; Dr. Buehring, drug store; Pundt, saloon and Frohsinn Hall; Heldt, butcher and saddlery; Osterloh, lumber yard; Gaedke farmer; Haertig, hotel; Schulz, blacksmith and Scuher, builder.

Producer-Director of "Paris, Texas", Wim Wenders (on right) and a crewman

The years beginning in 1903 to 1920 brought an enormous influx of people anxious to ply their trade in a new settlement. Some such names were Pace, Charpentier, Gohmert, Reinhardt, December, Wied, Boeer, Laging, Bruken-hoefer, Bode, Fuhrken, Riedesel, Stuermer, Bues, Onken, Meischen, Reichert, Huck, Rabenaldt, Mueller, Buesing, Ammermann, Wolpman, Katzmark, Duderstadt, Woods, Menn, Wagenschein, Riedel, Schuenemann, Ladner, Pfeifer, Stirl, Krause, Zedler, Schnabel, Emanuel, Blaschke, Schaefer, Butschek, Leister, Jochen, Klaevemann, Stoever, Voelkel, Beinhauer, Schroller, Boerm, Harms, Natho, Pilsner, Gips, Ckodre and Reibschlaeger.

1920 to 1990

Immediately before and after the 1920's a number of businesses were begun in Nordheim which remained in continuous operation by the family until death or retirement, even into the 1980's.

The Wagenschein family had been in continuous business operation for 62 years — from 1913 until 1975. Ervin Wagenschein started in the undertaking and hardware business in 1913 and his son, Garland Wagenshein continued the hardware part until retirement in 1975.

Another businessman, C.B. Dean, practiced his tinning and plumbing trade for 52 years with a clientele all over south Texas. He opened Dean's Tin Shop in Nordheim in 1918 and it continued in operation until his death in 1970.

In 1920 the J.G. Steiger family moved to Nordheim and opened a bakery which they operated for more than 40 years.

Everest Kolodziejczyk purchased the Nordheim Barber Shop in January 1926 and operated the business for 57 years until his death in 1983.

The Charpentier Brothers (Monroe and Leon) began a confectionery in May 1926 and expanded to drugs and then groceries until they retired in 1973. This business existed for 47 years.

Another business in the longevity category was the W.P. Schulz Grocery which opened in 1926 and closed in 1979 — a span of 53 years. The son, Lawrence Schulz, was 13 years old when he began helping in the store, and he took it over at his father's death in 1961.

There was Dr. D.C. Sheffler who, after graduating from dental college, opened a dental office in Nordheim on February 1, 1930. His highly successful practice extended over a large part of south Texas and continued for 54 years until his retirement in 1984.

The Amos and Andy Cafe was opened in 1931 by Emily Wolf and Leona Krause. Emily Wolf Mullins soon was the sole owner, and the business was in constant operation for 58 years until her retirement in 1989.

Mrs. Bruno (Jane Schmidt) Morisse bought the Nordheim View from J.W. Blanton in 1938 and published the newspaper in Nordheim until 1951. At that time "Miss Jane", as she was affectionately known, and her brother, Paul Schmidt of Yorktown, agreed upon a joint venture of their newspapers and the new publication was called The DeWitt County View. The new paper was published in Yorktown but Miss Jane maintained a branch office in Nordheim until her retirement in 1970. She enjoyed 32 years of newspaper ownership but had worked with newspapers long before.

At this writing in 1990 most of the owners, wives or direct descendants of the above business people are still living in the community.

There have been many more business men and endless numbers of farmers who have been a part of the Nordheim scene from before the 1920's and since to the 1990's. Lack of space does not permit the naming of everyone, and the writer's apologies go to them. Perhaps they have claimed their place in history by turning in their family histories to this book.

Economic Summary

Beginning approximately in 1910 there seems to be evidence of many turnovers in business ownership in Nordheim. It is hard to determine whether this was due to native restlessness or simply difficulty to realize a reasonable profit from their business enterprises. Cotton and corn were the backbone of the economy, and the German farmers easily diversified by raising and shipping chickens, turkeys and eggs out by railroad. In 1906 the cotton farming industry yielded 5,000 bales, while in 1924 four gins put out 10,000 bales, Nordheim's biggest cotton crop ever. However, the Depression of 1929 played havoc with Nordheim's economic base — the growing of cotton. The advent of the boll weevil also crippled the cotton industry and in 1934 only 2,000 bales were ginned by two operational gins. Today there are no gins and no cotton is grown.

Great changes were in store for Nordheim due to the discovery of oil and gas south of town in 1934. This new oil industry was the mainstay of Nordheim's economy until the international oil glut of the late 1970's and 1980's. Today mostly businesses essential for local needs and enjoyment are in operation while the farmers concentrates on cattle, feed, maize, corn, peanuts, melons and dairy farming.

Social Aspects

Despite Nordheim's laid-back appearance, the populace, from earliest times, was always looking for an opportunity to party or celebrate. The beginning community had an ideal place to stage their celebration; namely, on Pilot Knob, situated on the edge of town and overlooking the country-side in every direction for miles. By 1910 most activities had moved down into town, for a local theatrical club called the Fortschritt Verein had built Frohsinn Hall, which became the main entertainment center. The new center sparked renewed interest in forming a brass band and musician, Alfred Zedler, soon had such a band of young men practicing and entertaining. In 1903 a group of men organized a rifle club known as the Schuetzenverein (Shooting Club) which built a target range and dance platform on Pilot Knob. This club sponsored the annual May and October Feasts and still does so at this writing. Fraternal lodges such as the Herman Sons, Woodmen, Modern Order of Praetorians and Rome Circle were organized as social and beneficiary societies. Today the Garden Club supervises the City Park and Pavilion and the recently organized Friends of Nordheim promotes many community projects and activities. The Broadway Bar, Smokies, The Wagon Wheel, and The Cactus Drivein serve as centers for group gatherings at this time.

Cultural Aspects

Nordheim does not neglect its cultural needs which are satisfied through its school programs, the museum and projects of the Garden Club, Extension Clubs, churches and the Friends of Nordheim. The first school was built in 1897, a one room frame building enlarged to two rooms in 1908. This building also served as a church and a cultural center as well as a school. Today Nordheim is proud of its modern educational plant.

The Nordheim Historical Museum was dedicated in 1986 and depicts all aspects of life in the Nordheim area from its early settlement. The community has been very responsive by providing the museum with significant articles and objects for exhibit. Nordheim is also proud of its historical markers which are located on Pilot Knob, the cemetery, at the Jubilee Park Pavilion and at the Nordheim Shooting Club.

The community works diligently to support its two churches which are St. Paul Evangelical Lutheran Church and St. Ann's Catholic Church. These two churches provide the community with spiritual as well as cultural inspiration.

Special Events 1990

According to Alvin Teiwes the first telephones in Nordheim were furnished by the Eureka Telephone Co. which had its headquarters in the two-story Hill Building erected in 1898. The building became the home of Amos and Andy Cafe in 1937.

1901

The SA&AP Railroad built a depot at Nordheim and erected a sign with the following legend: "Pilot Knob, highest located point between Houston and San Antonio on the old SA&AP including the Waco branch." The swank passenger train that came through Nordheim was referred to as the "Davy Crockett."

1902

Nordheim's first and only newspaper called The Nordheim View was established with James W. Blanton as publisher.

The Nordheim Hosiery Factory was set up with Robert Steinbach in charge.

John Pundt opened a saloon with an open dance platform and operated Frohsinn Hall often referred as The Opera House.

1903

SA&AP Railroad installed first telegraph office and a permanent ticket agent was sent to Nordheim. This meant that Nordheim ceased to be a flag station.

L.C. Neutzler moved to Nordheim and built the largest home ever erected in Nordheim. Fire destroyed the home in 1922.

According to a youth magazine Nordheim had the youngest telegrapher in the country. He was 13 year old Jesse L. Yelvington whose brother-in-law was telegraph operated in Nordheim and he had taught Jesse the telegraph code. When tending the depot alone, young Jesse took a persistent emergency call and saved a freight train several hours of delay.

1905

A canning factory was put into operation in Nordheim with George Bode in charge. The factory would run every day in July and 6,000 or 7,000 cans of tomatoes were expected to be filled. The factory paid 25¢ per bushel for tomatoes.

Nordheim also had a cigar factory and a soda water bottling works in operation.

At this time the town's first waterworks were installed by Hugo Rabenaldt for the purpose of protecting his own property but he did furnish other settlers with water. The present system was installed in 1927.

1911

Nordheim's first sidewalks were built and some were board walks while others were concrete with railings for tying horses. There were also water troughs at intervals so customers could "water their horses" while in town.

1915

O.P. Schnabel worked for Ben Zedler in his grocery store. O.P. later moved to San Antonio and became famous for his "Keep San Antonio Clean" campaigns.

1922

Nordheim celebrated its Silver Jubilee for three days with a beautiful parade, meals for 25¢ each day and a dance each night.

1924

Central Power & Light Co. completed power lines into Nordheim from Yorktown and for Nordheim citizens "The Lights Were Here!"

1936

The Texas Centennial was celebrated by Nordheim in a big way with a parade and the planting of trees in Jubilee Park. Seven trees were planted in memory of the seven founders of Nordheim who had passed away. The founders were Henry Schlosser, SR., Gus Osterloh, Fritz Thormaehlen, Fritz Schulz, Sr., Paul Ullrich, W.J. Kasten and Ernst Westphal.

1947

Nordheim celebrated its Golden Jubilee in its usual big way with an opening parade and two days of exhibits, speakers, bands, Firemen's Races, dances and an abundance of food.

1972

There was a huge one day bash on September 16, when Nordheim celebrated its Diamond Jubilee honoring 75 years of existence.

1986

The Nordheim community was approved by the Texas Sesquicentennial Committee to function as a Texas Independence Community. Organizations and groups carried out Sesquicentennial projects during the whole year.

One beneficial outcome for the whole community was the organization of the Friends of Nordheim which has remained a permanent organization. They have remained active in sponsoring community projects such as the float, street Christmas decorations, community Christmas tree, Easter Egg Hunts and much more.

ST. PAUL EVANGELICAL CHURCH

T103

Nordheim Lutheran Church 1908

Nordheim, Texas

In 1896 the St. Paul Lutheran Church of Nordheim was organized by Rev. J.K. Poch of Yorktown. The first service was held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schlosser by Rev. C. Freling who was a traveling missionary. He then moved to Nordheim from Sasseville and served until 1898. By then services were held in the schoolhouse and the first baptism was performed on Nov. 22, 1896. The child was Bertha Helmers who died at 20 months.

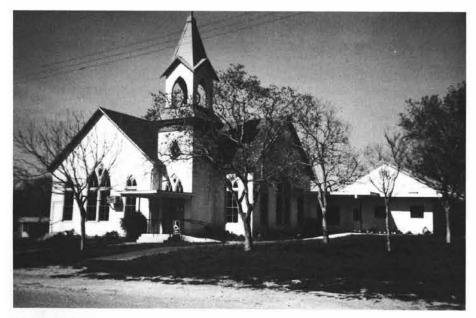

Rev. John Harder conducted services from June 1898 to May 1899 confirming the first confirmation class on March 26, 1899 with 36 confirmants taking their first communion on March 31, 1899. Rev. J.K. Poch came to serve as pastor from 1899 to 1913.

The earliest membership list of which there is a record was made in 1901. The following families were listed: F. Ullrich; E. Westphal, G. Helmers; F. Heldt; F. Buering; John Gaedke; H. Harms; F. Bruns; L.C. Neutzler; Franz Heer; F. Schlenstadt; Alf. Mueller; W. Kasten; Aug. Kasten; H. Wied; Chas. Wied; L. Riedesel; A. Dahlmann; W. Pevestorff; J.F.A. Mueller; H. Meier; A. Havermann; Henry Meyer; H. Schlosser; and F. Hilmer.

At the first congregational meeting held on Jan. 20, 1901, A. Dahlmann was elected president; W. Kasten treasurer; and W. Pevestorff secretary. The first two marriages were Paul Schulz and Lena Heine on Sept. 21, 1899 and Edward Wied and Emma Kaelke on Oct. 24, 1899.

On June 16, 1901 Runge and Company donated a half block of land for a church site and on Dec. 26, 1908 the congregation decided to build a building which was erected for $1500.00 with Robert Sucher as contractor. The building was dedicated on March 2, 1909 by Pastor Poch. A charter was received from the Secretary of State of Texas on oct. 21, 1909 and given the name of Evangelical Lutheran St. Paul Congregation of Nordheim. But in Jan. 1917 the building was blown off of its foundation by a windstorm and rebuilt with an annex which Nordheim and Runge became a joint parish. He first lived in Runge, later moving to Nordheim because of health reasons. The Nordheim Parsonage was built in 1914. The first English service was held in 1914 and Sunday School classes were also started then. The Ladies Aid was started by the ladies in 1913 with 17 members. Rev. Jud's resignation was accepted in Aug. 1916 and Rev. C.P. Haskarl came until 1920. German services were discontinued in Sept. 1918 but were resumed by Rev. A.T. Kluge in 1920. He left Nordheim on April 1, 1928. Then Rev. T.J. Roth came and served until 1937. By then it was decided on English services only on the last Sunday of the month. On Jan. 24, 1934 the church celebrated their silver jubilee with Rev. J.K. Pock as the central figure of the celebration. By then there had been 748 baptisms, 568 confirmations, 183 marriages, 196 burials. The membership was 110 members.

Rev. O.R. Schawe succeeded Rev. Roth in Nov. 1937 and served until Oct. 10, 1941 when he became a chaplain in the U.S. Army. By now the minutes of the church were written in English. In 1941 the Parish House was also built. Rev. Louis Kramer served as supply pastor until 1942 when Rev. Max Heinrich came and served until 1945. Rev. Kramer came back and served again until 1948. In 1949 Rev. William Durkoph became pastor until 1953. He had the pleasure of ordaining his son David into the ministry, while here. Rev. Manno Shatto served until 1954 after which Rev. Martin Burow came in 1955. During his stay repairs were made to the parsonage, additions to the parish house, and the inside of the church was renovated and modernized. The 50th anniversary of the church building was celebrated on July 12, 1969. Rev. Burow passed away suddenly in 1966 and Rev. Renslo came to serve until Rev. Nelson Klar came on March 1, 1967. Rev. Klar stayed until 1974 when he decided to return to his native Nebraska. Pastor Jeffrey Thompson became our pastor on July 14, 1974. He stayed until 1981 after which Rev. Russell Vardell came to serve, followed by Rev. Charles Mantey, and Rev. Don Fredine. During Rev. Fredine tenure a fellowship lounge was added between the church and the parish house connecting the two buildings. After the retirement of Rev. Fredine on Jan. 31, 1989 the church was again served by supply pastors until Rev. J.R. Westerfield accepted the call to serve on August 1,

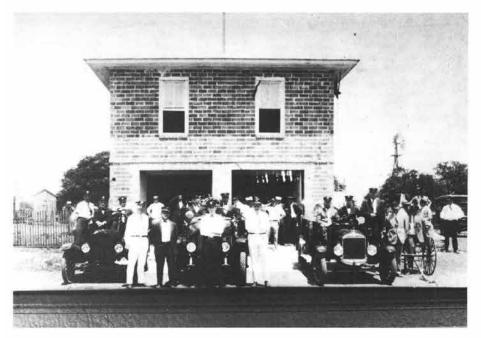

In 1984 the Ladies Aid Society was disbanded. However, the Evening Circle and the Circle of Hope continue to serve the church.

A native son, Nolan Sucher, was ordained into the ministry by Rev. D. Lee Muehlbrad on June 30, 1968. Two other sons of the congregation that served the church were Rev. Henry Mueller and his brother, Rev. William Mueller.

NORDHEIM MUSEUM

The little town of Nordheim's creation of an exceptional museum has been called a true "Labor of Love". Mr. Neil Hanson was impressed by the rich collections, peculiar to the community's rich heritage, he had noted in some local homes. Believing these items should be preserved for posterity, he approached the writer and together we sparked the interest which culminated in the present museum.

A group of interested people with the backing of Mayor Herbert Mutchler and Banker Lindy Voelkel began to meet at the bank and discuss the possibilities of a museum. Those present resolved themselves into a committee with Lula B. Kolodziejczyk as president, Bernice Charpentier as secretary and Caroline Klaevemann as treasurer.

On September 3, 1976 Mr. John Wilson, Museum Consultant from the Texas Historical Commission of Austin and Mrs. A.W. Schaffner of the DeWitt County Historical Commission, met with the executive committee. Mr. Wilson gave valuable advice, materials and guidelines for establishing a small museum.

At a meeting with Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hanson the committee received much encouragement from them. The Hansons extended the use of their old lumber yard building plus financial aid for the securement of a state charter. The museum committee gratefully accepted the offers.

The committee held many lengthy sessions at which they drew up by-laws, a constitution and Articles of Incorporation. An application for a charter was sent to the Texas Secretary of State and in January 1977 was granted, which meant the Nordheim Historical Museum was now a reality on paper.

The following were the charter members of the first board of directors: President, Lula B. Kolodziejczyk; Vice-President, Rev. Jeffery Thompson; Secretary, Bernice Charpentier; Treasurer, Caroline Klaevemann and Vance Frosch, Gilbert Pargman, James Audilet, Leola Stirl and Sobena Wied. Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hanson are honorary members of the board at this writing.

After some delays and apprehensions over using a wooden building, Mr. Neil Hanson offered to build the city a metal storage building in return for leasing the old Fire Station to the Museum Association. The old tile fire Station was built in 1923, is two-story and makes an excellent museum building.

The present members of the Nordheim Historical Museum Board of Directors are Pres.,

Lula B. Kolodziejczyk; Vice-President, Alfreda Huck; Secretary, Bernice Charpentier; Treasurer, Vance Frosch and Gilbert Pargmann, Bernice Pilsner, Elsa Leister, Georgie Voelkel and Mildred Mueller. Co-directors of the museum are Mildred Mueller and Lula B. Kolodziejczyk.

The Nordheim Community and former Nordheim residents have been very supportive of the museum project. All the renovation, arrangement of exhibits and yard maintenance have been accomplished through volunteer work and monetary donations. The museum operates from membership dues, donations, fund raisers and memorials.

On April 28, 1985 a "sneak preview of the museum was held on Cemetery Decoration Day on the first floor. The many visitors were so impressed that articles for exhibit began pouring in until today we are literally bursting at the seams. As a Sesquicentennial project the official dedication was held one year later on April 27, 1986 and a huge crowd had high praise for the museum.

The museum is proud of a Sesquicentennial gift presented by Bruce and Barbara (Scheffler) Morisse, honoring family members. The gift included microfilms of The Nordheim View and a reader on which the microfilms can be projected. Many come to do family research in the old newspapers.

The Nordheim Historical Museum is fortunate in having many fine items for exhibit. There are the many instruments used by the famous Nordheim Brass Band displayed in a miniature band stand, the beautiful old wedding dresses hanging in an original Osterloh & Neutzler Store glass wardrobe, and the tin bathtubs, designed and built by tinner C.B. Dean, which took not only Nordheim residents but surrounding settlements out of the Saturday Nite wash tub bath. There is much more reminiscent of early pioneer life in the Nordheim area. On display is the Feather Christmas Tree which was Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Stover's first Christmas tree when they married in 1927. These artificial trees were first made in Germany and the leaves or needles are made of green dyed feathers. The old tree was coaxed into shape by Bernice Pilsner and Wilma Clark and decorated artistically with old ornaments and metal holders with candles inserted. There is an old bedroom and kitchen on display plus and interesting exhibit of the history of The Nordheim View. The visitor can view many, many old photographs plus an excellent display from the Cabeza Community.

A visit to this interesting museum would not be regretted. If the museum is not open there are numbers listed on the door to be called.

PILOT KNOB

T105

A high hill known as Pilot Knob towers at the southern edge of the town of Nordheim in western DeWitt County on Highway 72. As far back as early ranchers and settlers could remember people recounted tales of Pilot Knob. Since the area was all prairie land with oaks scattered here and there, the hill could be seen from long distances. The earliest travelers spoke of charred rocks and Indian relics seen on the hill, which alerted them that Indians might not be far away - what an ideal lookout point and place for sending smoke signals. Old "Judge" Gillon of Runge, Texas would tell young Conrad Tips of seeing remains of Indian Camps on Pilot Knob when he came through the area at a very early date.

From the early 1800's through the turn of the century, Pilot Knob served as a guide for travelers and settlers on their way inland from Indianola and the coastal plain to Goliad, San Antonio and points West.

This area, including Pilot Knob, was first surveyed in 1838 by surveyors from the Goliad Land District and patented to Robert Galletty in 1841 by the Republic of Texas. In 1879 Vachel Weldon acquired the area from the R. Galletty heirs. In 1880 V. Weldon sold out to H. Runge & Company based in Cuero, Texas.

V. Weldon had specified that Pilot Knob was never to be sold to private owners but be reserved for the public's use. No documentation has been found to date concerning V. Weldon's specification, but most of the older citizens attested to the fact. About one-fourth of the top was reserved for Nordheim's Cemetery but the other portions are now owned by private individuals.

The San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railroad was built in 1886 along the northern edge of Pilot Knob with a blind siding named Weldon Switch built one-half mile westward. Railroad surveyor discovered that Weldon Switch (Nordheim), nestling at the northwest base of the hill, had an elevation of 400 feet above sea level while Pilot Knob had an elevation of 447 feet. The railroad later erected a sign which read, "Nordheim, the highest located town along the S.A.&A.P. Railroad from Houston to San Antonio including the Waco Branch."

Many German settlers were attracted to this area from the 1870's to the 1920's. The first settlers held all their public gatherings and socials on Pilot Knob during the late 1800's and early 1900's. The flat top with its sturdy live oaks afforded a commanding and exhilarating view of the country-side. The only buildings ever erected were a dance platform and refreshment stands and by 1910 all activities had been moved down to the town.

Two of Nordheim's oldest organizations were formed on Pilot Knob. They were the famous Nordheim Brass Band in 1898, now disbanded, and the Nordheim Schuetzen Verein which is now the Nordheim Shooting Club.

A historical marker was erected on the crest of Pilot Knob in 1968 to forever remind travelers of its significance.

Many interesting social and human interest stories have been told and recorded connected with people's enjoyment of Pilot Knob.

Illustrating the feasts held there is the following abbreviated local newspaper account of a celebration held in 1902. "Big school feast held at Pilot Knob the Sunday before. Two thousand people present: Music by Yorktown Ideal Band. Speaking by Edward Kleberg, Esq. of Yorktown and Prof. Eicholz of Cuero, Texas. Ten head of cattle barbecued. Forty-two kegs of beer and fifty cases of soda sold. Grand ball at night. Major Gohmert and Miss Lena Kate Duer of Yorktown leading the grand march.

Also there is the account of a "tragedy" which befell a little girl: Mrs. Louise Steinbach Boldt remembered as a child of 7 or 8 walking up to Pilot Knob to a feast with a nickel tied in the corner of her handkerchief. Little Louise enjoyed herself, for just before time to go home, she would untie the nickel and buy candy to share with her smaller sisters; but; alas, the nickel was gone and a heart-broken little girl went home empty-handed.

Mrs. Sobena Schulz Wied remembers her grandmother, Mrs. Fritz Schulz, telling of young people, including her own, straggling home from all-night dances on Pilot Knob about the time she went out to milk the cow and do her early morning chores.

JUBILEE PARK PAVILION

T106

During the month of April, 1923 a long awaited dream of the people of Nordheim became a reality. Their well-known Nordheim Brass Band now had an official home for its practice sessions and concerts. A pavilion or bandstand in the center of the park was begun and finished along with immediate plans for beautification of the park. The Brass Band had promised an occasional summer night free concert therein, which the people of the community enjoyed intensely. The uniqueness of this pavilion is not necessarily its age, but the fact that its same Nordheim Brass Band is still in existence today. Old settlers claim that the very first Brass Band in Nordheim was organized in 1896. The park site was presented to Nordheim as a surprise birthday gift during the ceremonies of Nordheim's Silver Jubilee celebration on September 25, 1922. The presentation of Block No. 14 for a park site was made by Walter Reiffert, President of Nordheim Townsite Co., a subsidiary of H. Runge & Co. which owned most of the land in this area at one time. However, a special provision in the deed specified that the block would revert to H. Runge & Co. if it was not maintained and used as a park.

From the proceeds of the Jubilee celebration, a fund of $400 was placed at the disposal of the newly formed Park Committee composed of L.P.F. Hohn, L.C. Neutzler, Chas. W. Gohmert, H.J. Laging, John Wolf, M.G. Mueller and August Mueller. This committee decided a pavilion was a prime necessity for the park, particularly since Nordheim had a Brass Band and much community activity centered around bandstands during early times.

Lumber, which had been used for the floats in the Silver Jubilee parade was also donated to the pavilion project. Henry J. Laging, local builder, and a crew of workers erected the structure, and Martin Osterloh remembers delivering the lumber to the pavilion site on a wagon from the Osterloh Bros. Lumber Co. The pavilion was octagon in shape and 24 ft. in diameter with a flag pole projecting from the top center of the roof. The Central Power and Light Co. equipped the building with lights free of charge.

According to old Nordheim View records, the first social function held in the park with the new pavilion was an all school picnic with the Brass Band rendering a program of concert music from the bandstand. Through the years many band concerts, socials and even practice sessions by the band were enjoyed by citizens of Nordheim and neighboring communities in the cool of the evenings as well as on all-day affairs. Likewise, the local high school band has rendered concerts from the bandstand. Many May Pole dances, children's parties, school and private, were held on the pavilion even up to the present time.

The Nordheim Garden Club took over the operation and maintenance of Jubilee park in 1952. One of the first acts of the Garden Club was to repair the roof of the pavilion.

In 1961 winds of hurricane Carla caused the pavilion to lean to one side, but it was not repaired for some time. However, in 1968 the Nordheim Garden Club undertook the project of repairing and painting the old structure. The Garden Club also sponsored the obtaining of a Historical site marker for the interesting old bandstand.

NORDHEIM SHOOTING CLUB

T107

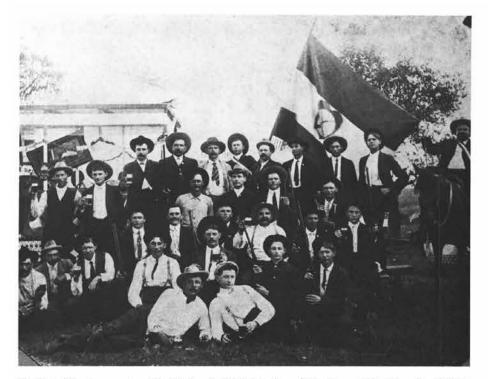

Shooting Club Flag

In March of 1927, the Nordheim Schuetzen Verein joined with the Nordheim Fortschritt Verein to become one club known as the "Nordheim Schuetzen Verein." This union was by mutual agreement since most of the men were members of both clubs and the remaining members were given full membership in the Schuetzen Verein. The original Schuetzen Verein was organized in 1902 with seventeen members. In 1930 the Nordheim Verein was incorporated and took the name of "The Nordheim Shooting Club."

Shooting matches for members were held often, usually on Sundays. Prior to each May Feast a King Shoot was held and the best marksman was named king of the May Feast. He then selected the Queen of the Feast, if single. If married, his wife was the Queen. Invitations were sent to neighboring shooting clubs to participate in their regular target shoot. They used regular target rifles for these shoots.

The Nordheim Schuetzen Verein adopted its own Flag and Emblem which is symbolic of the competitive marksmanship shoots between men. The colors being red for bravery and courage; green for youth and hope for eternal life; and white for faith and purity. This flag was used in parades and other activities.

In 1908 the club built its first hall, modeled after the shooting clubs of Germany, as a community amusement center just west of town. In those early days it was already the "Mecca" of amusement seekers for miles around.

In March 1939, the entire dance hall was razed and the O.D.H.S. halls were razed and rebuilt into a recreation hall which is now used for banquets, reunions and meeting places for various organizations. The whole complex is one of the largest amusement halls in South Texas.

To date the Club has approximately 300 members. The Nordheim Shooting Club is Nordheim's oldest organization that is still in existence.

MAJESTIC DANCE ORCHESTRA

T108

The Majestic Four Orchestra was formed around 1924 in Nordheim, Texas. As the band grew larger, it became known as the Majestic Dance Orchestra and was managed by Edwin and Bennie Klaevemann. The Majestic was loved and admired by thousands of South and South Central Texans. Edwin would write some of the music for the members of the band.

They played shottisches, polkas, waltzes, and many other old-time and popular numbers. Radio listeners also enjoyed their popular music for several years. The band dispersed around 1947-1949.

Members of the band were: Paul Dittfurth, who played banjo; Herbert Klaevemann, who placed the concertina and E-flat clarinet; Bennie Klaevemann, who played the drums; Edwin C. Klaevemann, who played the trumpet and violin; and Eddie Stoever, who played the trombone. On occasions, Mrs. Edwin (Caroline Peters) Klaevemann would accompany the band by playing the piano and singing.

The Nordheim Brass Band, in all probability, was the only continuous pioneer German type brass band that existed in Texas for so many years, or perhaps in the nation that we know of. When formed, city bands were common everywhere, but not for long. A musical organization of which Nordheim and all DeWitt County is justly proud.

The only "pay" members of the Band received was free beer and a free meal when they played at Country Feasts. The band's principal source of income, and this was a small amount, was donations from individuals. A few fund raising projects and sometimes a dance was held and the profit was given to the band. All funds were used to buy new uniforms, music, music stands, and occasionally, instruments that remained the property of the Brass Band. Some of the instruments were in use for 40 to 50 years. Only one year the band had a sponsor, The Nordheim Fire Department.

Some old settlers claim the band was organized at Nordheim in 1896 with Louis Wied, Charles Waltersdorff, August Waltersdorff, Frank Riedesel, Henry Riedesel, Richard Riedesel and John Roessler, leader. In 1898 the band grew with Louis Pheil, Louis Wied, Louis Henge, Emil Wied, Willie Bues, Hugo Rabanaldt, Willie Klaevemann, George Steinbach, Ben Zedler, Paul Ullrich, Alfred Zedler, Emil December and George Bode, with Adolph Janssen, then school teacher at Nordheim, as band leader.

The band held its membership from 14 to 16 members, being at its lowest in the year 1913 when it numbered only 13 members. It was at this time that San Antonio staged a State Band Contest in which 42 of the State's best bands competed. The Brass Band entered the contest and played the popular numbers March, Fort Popham, Serenade and Passing Thought. They captured second place!

After that the Band began to grow and in a short time brought the membership to 25 members. Then came years when bands and band concerts were in great demand and the band soon accumulated enough money to purchase new instruments.

Three of its members served as first class

Nordheim's Firemen's Band

musicians during World War I. E.A. Stirl served with 360th Infantry Band, Bruno Morisse with the 344th Field Artillery, and Henry Morisse with the 70th Field Artillery, while the whole band was enlisted by the Council of Defense and played for every rally in the County.

In one of the write-ups found on the Brass Band, it stated the total number of musicians who had been in the band since 1896 ranged from 120 to 150. We are trying very hard to find out who these members were so we can list them in our "History of the Nordheim Brass Band."

The most active months for the organization were May, September, and October. They played for the feasts held throughout this area. During these months the band practiced twice a month.

These boys passed through long ordeals, most bravely and many compliments were passed on their music. It was doubtlessly one of the most continuous practices on record.

The past Brass Band leaders were: John Roessler, Professor Adolph Janssen, Emil December, A.M. Zedler, Dr. S.V. Kahn, Dick Morisse, Paul Koerner, C.A. Meischen, E.A. Stirl and Bruno Morisse.

The Brass Band members when it was disbanded after a colorful history were: Edwin Klaevemann, Wilson Jacobs, Caesar Metting, William Hartman, Alfred Butschek, Bennie Klaevemann, Stephen Schroeder, Ben Meischen, Harold Stirl, Eddie Stoever, Alfred Marquis, Albert Stirl, Fred Stirl, Roy Brunkenhoefer, Robert Jacobs and Frank Katzmark.

A token of remembrance was presented each of the surviving members of that great Brass Band.

Living Band members, some of which attended the celebration are: Alfred Brieger, Bennie Meishcen, Alfred Butschek, Caesar Metting, LeRoy Mueller, Louis Stoever, Eddie Stoever, Harold Stirl, Carl Bolting, Eddie Hengst, Wilson Jacobs, Stephen Schroeder, Robert Jacobs, William Hartman, Alfred Hartman, Carlos Klaevemann, Floyd Nickelson, L.A. Sloma, Bill Smolik, Herbert Klaevemann, Bennie Prause, Sr., E.A. Davidson, Clark Clindinings, Robert Meischen, Otto Pieper, Werner December, and last, but not least, Mr. Emil Onken who is the oldest living member, 94 years old, who started playing with the Band in 1908, being a member for three years.

A memorial plaque was hung in the recreation hall as a reminder of the many, many hours of pleasure these men have given to our community.

Many of its members have passed to the Great Beyond, and many have moved to other parts, but the Band still lives on in our memory and the community can be proud of the honor of having had an organization as this, at one time. Maybe some day it can be done again.

PIERPONT STAGECOACH STOP

T10

DeWitt County, Texas

William Pierpont married Elizabeth (Ellet) Austin Parrott in the mid-1840's. She was the widow of John Austin, hero of Velasco, and of Dr. T.F.L. Parrott. It was she who sold one-half of John Austin's league of land on Buffalo Bayou to the Allen brothers who founded the city of Houston.

William and Elizabeth moved to the newly created DeWitt County, in 1846, where, at the junction of Five Mile Coleto Creek with Twelve Mile Coleto Creek, they erected a log store and stagecoach stop on the route between Indianola and San Antonio over which wagon trains and stagecoaches bearing freight and immigrants travelled to the interior of the state.

In 1868 while Texas was still occupied by Federal Troops after the war, William Pierpont died mysteriously or was killed in Wharton County while enroute to Houston. Some said he might have been murdered for the money and deeds in his possession. His wife Elizabeth and their son John Austin had long preceded him in death. She is believed to be buried near the stagestop.

PLEASANTVILLE

T110

Pleasantville was a black community intermingled with the Edgar community. The cemetery is located West of the community of Edgar in a pasture on private property. Names in this cemetery are of inhabitants of this area such as Allen, Battles, Blackwell, Brown, Calloway, Coleman, Cook, Davis, Edwards, Enoch, Ford, Green, Hardy, Harper, Henderson, Hunter, Jackson, Johnson, Lewis, Lucas, Pleasants, Manuel, Price, Steen, Thomas, Williams, Wim-bish, Young and others. The cemetery is well kept and fenced.

Mt. Zion Baptist Church is east of highway 77A and is still active. It received a historical marker in 1988.

Pleasantville School was started in 1904 on the K.W. Barton Survey and was part of the Edgar School District. Mr. G.L. Prince was one of the teachers.

PRAIRIE HILL

Prairie Hill School

This school was on the John J. May Survey in North eastern DeWitt County and was six miles south of Yoakum. It was started as a community school in 1885. The neighborhood was at that time sometimes called "Dog Town". On August 11, 1897 James Hickey sold an acre of land on which to establish the Prairie Hill Public School. A one room school house was located there on the Yoakum-Terryville road on an elevated part of the prairie. That is the reason for the name. In 1920 a two room school was erected. By 1948 the students had dwindled and the school was a one teacher school.

Two of the teachers were Mae Middlebrook and Nora Stevens.

PRAIRIE VIEW

T112

Prairie View School

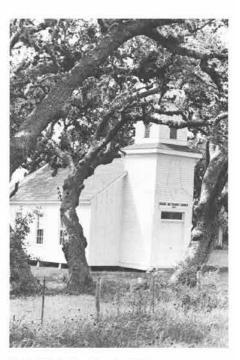

This community was established in northeastern DeWitt County by the families of William Schmidt, Eilert Schumacher, William Burns, John Hagens and Charles Herns.

In 1900 they established a school in a one room frame house located ten miles northwest of Yoakum, William Schmidt was trustee from 1902 to 1919. A modern two room school was built in 1924. This building was used until the district consolidated with Yoakum Independent School District.

RABKE

Five Rabke families came to DeWitt County to settle in 1845 but did not form a community until 1883 when land was acquired by Adolph Rabke, Sr. from Thomas W. Bell. Here on 300 acres of land, Adolph built a dirt floored log cabin in an oak grove near the present site of the Rabke Cemetery. Adolph lived until 1889 and is buried in the Rabke Cemetery.

In 1894, Reverend Fredrich Vordenbaum, a widower, was united in marriage with Dorothea Rabke, widow of Adolph Rabke, the pioneer settler. On March 27, 1894, land was donated for a church by William C. Gohlke and his wife, Joanna (Rabke) Gohlke. A small one room church was built by the efforts of the whole community.

In 1896 Edward T. Rabke opened a grocery store to serve the community. He built a two story building across from the church. The upper story was used as a meeting place for the Woodmen's Lodge. On April 14, 1898, the store was designated as a United States Post Office with Edward Rabke as postmaster. The post office was closed in 1905 and the store closed in

Until 1921, the children of Rabke went to the Twelve Mile School about two miles west of Rabke. Then the Rabke children went to the Ratcliffe School.

The Rabke Cemetery was established in 1900 by the gift of one acre of land by Edward Rabke to the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The Rabke Methodist Church is still standing today (1990) as a reminder of busier days. Church services are still held occasionally on special occasions.

RATCLIFFE SCHOOL

In 1921 a school was built on the Ratcliffe farm on the Clinton-Weesatche Road. The Five Mile School pupils and the Rabke pupils from the Twelve Mile School moved into this school. In 1923, the rest of the Twelve Mile School children came to the new Ratcliffe school. In 1923 the Brown Ranch School also joined the Ratcliffe school. This school operated until the 1950's when the children were sent to Cuero Independent School District.

School trustees through the years were: E.T. Rabke, F. Parks, A.G. Schorre, H.E. Murray, C.A. Waldeck, C.C. Gohlke, Albert White, Will Schorre, Gus Pflug, Ben Parma, Walter Pieper, Heinie Bade, and David Murray.

ROSEVILLE

T115

Roseville School

A rural school was located in southeastern DeWitt County on the Squire Burns Survey, five miles east of Cuero. So many wild roses bloomed there that it was named Roseville School. It was started in 1874 and continued as a one teacher school for many years. Some early settlers of the community were the Jeff Morrows, and the William Meadows who came in 1876. Roseville School closed in the early 1950's.

During the year 1896-1897, Miss Willie Alexander taught there.

From 1880 until 1913 the Baptists had services in the Live Oak grove church which Columbus Burns built in the Roseville community. The Columbus Burns family had moved into this area from Concrete in 1873.

SHILOH

This community was located four miles east of Yorktown in western DeWitt County. In 1847 Hence McBride Pridgen bought 200 acres of Callahan survey land. Soon he had thirty acres under cultivation. There were three log cabins and a well on his land. Some other early families were Hamiltons, McFarlands, Andersons, Odoms, and Woods. In 1851 John Keith Rankin called together what is reputed to have been "the first worshiping band west of the Guadalupe River". Near the grove where they met, a Methodist Church was built in 1852 and given the name Shiloh. This church continued to have services until 1910. Then the Methodist Conference sold the lot and building.

Shiloh school was established in 1856 and kept open until 1914. At first Shiloh school was a community school in a log house. On December 16, 1884, for one dollar, Isabella Woods deeded acre of land to trustees C.G. Hartmann, and C.F.W. Hewing for a school. A frame building was built and Shiloh Public School started. Some of the teachers were William (Bill) Kissack, William Badago, Willie Ryan, Jim Buck, Tastus Hedges, Phil Howard, Laura Hudson, Annie Gips, Lena Gerhardt, and for many years Anne Ferguson. Shiloh became Metting School. In 1884 there was a black school established on the Callahan Survey. This school was called Sunset School.

To aid the Confederate cause the "Shiloh Home Guards" were organized under Capt. H.G. Woods. On December 25, 1861 they were included in Brigade District 24 of the State Troops.

In 1990 only the Woods cemetery and the Shannon cemetery were left to remind us of Shiloh. A historical marker was erected in 1983 for Shiloh.

STRATTON

Stratton School Building

Stratton is located on the James G. Swisher League ten miles east of Cuero in northeastern DeWitt County. A Post Office was established there in November of 1887. The name Stratton came from a well known Cuero saddle maker, John Stratton, who had land in the Stratton area. For about two years, Charlie Middlebrook used his home as the Post Office. In 1890, William W. McKissack built a store and then he became postmaster and had the Post Office in his store. This store closed in 1943. The Post Office was discontinued on February 28, 1905. Mail is now delivered from Cuero and Yoakum by rural delivery.

Prior to the Civil War the farming community of this area had a cotton gin. It was built and first owned by Mrs. Bill Pierson who had formerly been Mrs. Benbow. W. Jasper McManus bought this gin and ran it until he moved to the Thomaston section in 1885. Later Charlie Middlebrook and G.J. Neil moved this gin into the village of Stratton and operated it there. In 1883 William Luhrsen fenced his nearby land with barbed wire — the first to be used in that section. Scott Smith had an early day blacksmith shop. Lassig had one later.

W.A. McKissack taught the first Stratton School in a rented house in 1891. A one room school was built in 1893. A.J. Neel gave land for the site of the school. In 1925 Stratton became the first consolidated rural school of DeWitt County. A modern two room building was built in 1948. This school was discontinued in the 1950's. Kate Wallace was one of the teachers in the late 1890's.

Pilgrim's Rest Primitive Baptist Church (Stratton)

In August 1883, an arm of Mulberry Church in Fayette County, Texas was extended to a group of members meeting in the school house at Burnt Camp, three miles south of Sweet Home in Lavaca County. In November 1883, Elder J.G. Curington was appointed by Mulberry Church to serve in the presbytery to constitute this group into a church.

On December 01, 1883, Pilgrim's Rest Primitive Baptist Church was constituted by Elders J.G. Curington and J.W. Shook, at Burnt Camp school house, with the following members: Elder and Sister J.G. Curington, L. Curington, J.S. and Miranda C. Newman, Wesley Vick, Sarah Price, M.E. Day, H.C. Curington and M.J. Curington.

In 1889, the Church moved to DeWitt County, first to the Crossenville School, and then to the Stratton School located on the Harry Neal place, two miles east of present location on Farm Road 1447.

In 1920, the Smiley Primitive Baptist Church building was bought, dismantled and shipped by boxcar to Cuero and erected on the Marcus Morrow place, about ¼ mile east of the present location. On October 29, 1921, Marcus and Mollie Morrow acknowledged and confessed their love for Pilgrim's Rest Church and its membership by conveying to the Church and its Trustees 1.5 acres of land. In 1927, the building was moved by log rollers and mules to its present site. This small sanctuary — lighted with kerosene lamps until 1938, and heated by a pot-bellied stove — served the congregation for many years.

On January 16, 1957, 2 additional acres were given to the Church and her Trustees — C.T. "Pete" Matthew and Alex Benbow — by deed of gift by Mrs. Marcus Morrow and family; the Stratton School building was purchased, and the auditorium was built. The older part of the building, with a 12-foot addition to the west end added in 1938, was converted into a dining area with modern kitchen facilities.

In 1969, the entire building was remodeled and a baptistry was built behind the pulpit. Previously, baptisms by immersion were held in nearby stock tanks.

In 1974, the Church voted to erect a large tabernacle on the south side of the church building. Friends and neighbors from far and near volunteered their labor. It is used for camp meetings and other outdoor gatherings.

Incidental to the history of the Primitive Baptists in Stratton is the story of the elm tree services. As children, J.S. Newman and his little sister, Martha Frances, planted an elm seedling near their home in 1867. Joe carried water and dug the hole, while Fannie gathered corn cobs in her apron to use for mulch to hold moisture around the delicate roots. Years later, following his ordination, Joe and his sister made a return visit to their old home place. The buildings were gone, but they found a towering elm tree surviving. For many years, Joe, the minister, conducted an annual worship service beneath the spreading branches. It became widely known as the "Tree Meeting" and was held each July from 1926 through 1935, with hundreds attending. Elder Newman died in October 1935.

Primitive Baptists do not use musical instruments in their worship service, nor do they have Sunday School. Adults and children alike are taught by the Elders from the pulpit, using the scriptures as the only printed reference. Irene Matthew Alexander, who joined the Church in 1914, and Lula Hefner in 1916, are among the oldest living members.

Pastors: J.G. Curington (1883-1893); J.S. Newman (1893-1897); R.W. Harrell (1897-); J.A. Moore (1914-1930); J.S. Newman (1930-1935); J.C. Morgan (1936-1944); Ariel West (1944-1945); W.J. TERRYVILLE

Terryville was first located on the Michael Devine Survey in eastern DeWitt County. One of the first settlers was Robert "Bob" Alexander who arrived in 1850 from Mississippi and built a blacksmith shop.

In 1852, James D. Terry and John Terry selected a site among the oak trees and built a mercantile store. This was when the settlement was given the name Terryville.

The community soon grew to include a steam operated cotton gin and grist mill, a physician and a school and a sawmill. The sawmill was run by Charles Hume.

On June 22, 1861, Capt. Andrew Jackson Scarborough raised the Scarborough's Davis Guard, a volunteer cavalry company at Terryville. They were in support of the Confederacy. Later part of this group was known as the 4th Regiment Texas Mounted Volunteers. Some of the men joined Sibley's Brigade and went with Sibley to New Mexico.

The first mail to the community was brought by men who rode horseback to Victoria; the round trip took two days. On September 1, 1868, Eli F. McDonald applied to the US Post Office Department to establish a Post Office at Terryville. It was approved and the Terryville Post Office was established February 15, 1869, with Eli F. McDonald as the first postmaster. On September 27, 1881, the post office was moved to a new location on the L. Dunbar League, two ½ miles northeast of the first post office. Here John J. Woodrome built a store and the post office was in this store.

Store owners in the Terryville area were James and John Terry, John J. Woodrome, Mrs. Dora Woodrome, G.A. Woodrome, D.W. Doss, Sam Alexander, R.M. Dodd, B.F. McDonald, Eli McDonald, and W.J. Hodges. Also, John Hargrove, C.W. Dickinson, W.C. Thrift, Perry E. Edgar, John Squyres, Alonzo Cooper, Joseph Cook and Horace Cook, Luther Williams and Mrs. Luther Williams.

The gin and grist mill was run by B.L. Tanksley, G.A. Woodrome, and Caswell W. Cook and son. Alonzo Cooper also ran the grist mill. Lawyers were T. Cameron and D.L. Cameron. Constables were Will Goodson and N.B. "Pole" Hollan. The blacksmith shop was rung by Bob Alexander, F.J. Schubert and Walter Scott Smythe. Hugh J. Stephenson was the Notary. Doctors were Dr. D.A. Pressley, Dr. R.H. Weyman, Dr. W.H. O'Banion, Dr. Cagle, Dr. W.J. Drake.

By 1884 most of the businesses had moved from Old Terryville to the new location.

August 14, 1884, Joseph Cook and wife

Laura Goode Cook and Joseph Byars and wife Saphronia C. Byars donated two acres of land in the Michael Devine Survey to Judge James D. Terry, to be used for a common free school. The school house was built by Sam Stevens, John Hawkins Goode and other men of the community. The school was given the name Bear Creek School. The Old Terryville School and the Hebron Church School merged with the new Bear Creek School. Some of the teachers at the Terryville school were J. Covey, Mr. and Mrs. Baukman, W.J. McManus, W.J. Simpson, J.L. Garrett, and D.R. Carroll.

By 1885 all that remained of Old Terryville was the cemetery with seventy five or eighty graves. Most were marked with rocks, concrete slabs, concrete curbs or Cypress boards. About twenty graves had monuments.

About 1889 the new site of Terryville reached its peak population prosperity, which continued past the turn of the century. The population was about 120. Today all that remains is a Baptist Church and a few houses.

A Texas State Historical Marker was placed on FM682 in 1986 near the site of Old Terryville.

THOMASTON

T119

Thomaston is located eleven miles south of Cuero and seventeen miles north of Victoria on Highway 87.

An interesting historical report of the Thomaston area was found by County Auditor Nic Ladner and apparently is the work of a previous auditor L.G. Covey. Part of that historical sketch follows.

When the first settlers came to the Thomaston area, fords were ready for their use across the Guadalupe River. They were known as the

Bolivar Pridgen Home

Mrs. John L. Pridgen and Ethel Pridgen 1908 Thomaston

Power, Cottingham and McCrabb fords. The Power ford early became the main crossing between Mission Valley and the settlers east of the river. For untold years thousands of buffaloes came from the north in the spring. Their biannual trampings across the Cottingham ford made the banks low, and it was much used by the early colonists in passing from Goliad to Austin's colony on the Colorado and Brazos rivers.

Early settlers found scattered about millions of bleached bones of wild animals and perchance, those of some unfortunate human beings. Later these ghostly reminders of death were sold for fertilizer and brought many needed dollars to the settlers.

Of the log houses built in the 1840's, 1850's and 1860's by the Twohigs, Houstons, Judge Harris, McDonalds, Judge Irvin, Cottinghams, Wrights, and Pridgens, none are standing today. The Frank Rabel home west of the river was built about 1848 of undressed lumber by Richard Power. The lower story of the R.E. Clegg home on Price's Creek was put up about 1849 of native rock for David Murphree, noted for prize winning horses and mules. The Ruby Pridgen place just north of Thomaston was first built in 1852 by Boliver Pridgen, Republican Senator under Governor Davis, and was rebuilt when "pappy got back from the senate." Irvin Anderson's home, three miles north of Thomaston, was built by Carpenter Berry for Ivens Weisiger about 1860. The Eatman home, one mile north of Thomaston, built in 1849 by Wiley Pridgen, father of Bolivar, was burned in 1928.

Our first School was in a log house on the Lockhart land. The teacher was a Mr. Moore from Missouri. Oscar and Willie Pridgen and Alex and James Owen Murphree attended this school. Students from Mission Valley came across the Power ford to attend. A later log School was near the Buck McCrabb home, teachers were Miss Sallie Sangster and then a Mr. Bagget.

McDonald Log House near Price's Creek

Other early settlers were Meyers, Neels, Lowes, and Suttons.

In 1872 Colonel Nathan Thomas planned to donate land for the townsite of Thomaston, hence the name. General McCulloch who had charge of the railroad construction, located the station on the northern border of the Thomas tract instead of farther south where the Colonel wanted it. Angered almost to the fighting point Colonel Thomas refused to give any land. Mrs. John P. Wright made large donations of the land inherited from her father, Charles Lockhart and Thomaston was placed on the map. This was written about? by L.G. Covey.

Thomaston grew to include a gin, owned by Mr. W.J. McManus, a blacksmith shop owned by Mr. Thomas W. Lanmon, a lumber business owned by Mr. George W. Ferguson, a newspaper run by Mr. Eatman, a Doctor, Dr. J.E. Pridgen and many other fine farmers and ranchmen.

At one time there were three churches in Thomaston, the Methodist, the Presbyterian and the Baptist. All held regular services. There was also a black African Methodist Episcopal Church and later the Mount Bethany Church. The latter is still in existence today.

By 1906, the school building at Thomaston was a three room structure. Some of the teachers were E.C. Haskell and L.L. Haskell, Anne Ferguson and J.W. Carroll. Also, Janie Finch, Rev. Z.B. Graves, and Legrand Covey.

The black community also had a school. One of their teachers was Julia Johnson.

Later families who came to Thomaston were the Calliham, DeDear, Adcock, Atkinson, Brown, Caldwell, Conwell, Edgar and Fanett. oyd Pridgen

Dr. John L. Pridgen

Two brothers came from Alabama to settle at Thomaston in 1872. They were James Hill Pridgen (1840-1937), a confederate veteran, and John Bowden Pridgen (1853-1896). James had married Margaret Hart before coming to Texas. John was a bachelor but married Margaret Lucinda Wilson, a grand-daughter of Charles Lockhart, on October 10, 1876.

From these two families came five doctors. James "Jim" had two sons who became medical doctors. They were Drs. James Edward, I and

Dr. James Howard Pridgen

James Howard Pridgen, Their other children were Warren, Ethel, Lucille, and Jennie. John also had two sons who became M.D.s. They were Drs. John L. and Ross Edwin Pridgen. Other children were Floyd, Wilson, Ethel, Mary and Pearl.

Dr. and Mrs. James Howard Pridgen had a son who also became a noted surgeon. He is Dr. James Edward "Jim", II of San Antonio, Texas.

Dr. John L. (1884-1961) received his medical degree from Tulane University in 1905. He married Mozelle Beatty shortly thereafter. They made their home in San Antonio. He practiced medicine for fifty-two years. The Bexar County Medical Association honored him with a fiftieth anniversary party at the San Antonio Country Club. The theme of the party was "From the Horse and Buggy to the Jet Age". He was most beloved by his patients and friends. Dr. John Pridgen was a 32nd. degree mason, member of the Bexar County and American Medical Associations and Xi Sigma Xi Medical Fraternity. He and Mrs. Pridgen were very active in the Baptist Church, civic, and social organizations. They had a daughter, Mrs. William B. (Evelyn) Ford and a son, John L. Pridgen, Jr.

Dr. Ross Edwin (1888-1921) received his medical degree from Tulane and married Edith Fox. He served as Captain in the Medical Corps during World War I. He had a very successful practice in El Paso, Texas but he unfortunately died at the early age of thirty three at Mayo Clinic. He was 32nd. degree mason.

Dr. James Howard (1882-1957) married Ada Beth Harwood on April 7, 1908. He received his Masters degree in Pharmacy from Tulane and a medical degree in Pathology from Northwestern University. He became associated with Burns Hospital in Cuero, Texas in 1906 and remained on the staff for forty years. He was a steward in the First Methodist Church and was a member of the Cuero Masonic Lodge and the Rotary Club. He and Mrs. Pridgen were very active in civic and social affairs. They were the parents of Dr. James E. "Jim" Pridgen, II of San Antonio, Texas.

Dr. James E. Pridgen

Dr. James Edward "Ed" Pridgen (1873-1934) obtained his medical degree from Texas University and married Josie McManus. He was the beloved great "country" doctor that delivered a large percentage of the babies born in rural south DeWitt and Victoria Counties. He was known for his treatment of pneumonia which ran rampant in those days and for his great diagnostic ability. He was often called out of town to diagnose difficult cases. Dr. Ed was known for his extreme kindness and generosity. He often provided the unfortunate with their medicines as well as attending to their medical needs regardless of the fact that many could never pay him for his services. This writer, at the age of fourteen attended his funeral and has vivid memories of the extremely large gathering, many of the men and women were openly crying. Dr. Ed had a daughter, Mrs. Hugh J. (Jewell) Donnelly.

Dr. James Edward Pridgen, II, the son of Dr. and Mrs. James H. Pridgen, married Betty Rabb. He graduated with a B.A. Degree from Texas University and received his medical degree from Tulane. He went on to Mayo Clinic where he specialized in surgery for five years. He and Betty decided that they wanted to make their home in San Antonio. They are living there at the present time. He has been on the Board of Governors of the American College of Surgeons, Past President of the Texas Surgical Society, Chief of Surgery at Methodist Hospital in San Antonio, and Chief of Staff at the U.T. Medical Hospital in San Antonio. He currently is clinic Professor of Surgery at UTSA Medical School, Consultant of surgery for Brooke General Hospital, Consultant of Surgery for Wilford Hall Hospital in San Antonio, which is the largest Medical Hospital in the world and on the development committee for Mayo Clinic. Jim and Betty are very active in the Methodist Church, civic, and social organizations. They have three children, Mrs. Melvin (Gay) Gray, Mrs. Robert G. (Carol) Storey, III, and Jimmy.

TONQUA

Tonqua School

The Tonqua School was in eastern DeWitt County on land of the L. Dunbar Survey. The community was named after the nearby creek by the name of Tonqua. The creek is believed to have gotten its name from Indians who lived in the area. The earliest White settlers in the area were the Charles and Elizabeth Bradley who had a family of seven girls and one boy. They came in 1846.

The Tonqua School was started in 1878 on land donated by the Bradley family. This school was discontinued in 1944 because of lack of pupils. Two of the teachers were Dora Granberry and Matilda Squires.

A Baptist Church was organized in 1852 but it soon merged with another congregation of a nearby community.

UPPER MEYERSVILLE

Louis C. Bluntzer owned and operated a dance hall in Upper Meyersville for a number of years along with his wife Mary. Mary would bake pies for a couple of days before dance nights and sell them to the dancers. Two pieces of pie and two cups of coffee sold for a total of fifty cents and she often said she made more money than he did selling dance tickets. One night during a dance an argument began between a Shefler and a Duderstat and ended with Schefler being stabbed by Duderstat. He died on a counter in the dance hall. Blood stains remained on the floor for many years until the building was partially remodeled. The building still stands in Upper Meyersville although it has been turned around and moved a short distance to make way for the paving of FM 237. Although now covered with panelling, one of the old walls still bears the names and dates, in the early 1900's, of people believed to be a popular mexican band who played for dances in those early days. For many years now the trail riders from Victoria stop and spend a night on the adjoining property on their way to San Antonio. There are no more dances held here but the trail riders queen is elected here each year.

The building was sold to M.J. and Mary Bluntzer after the dance hall was closed. They turned it into a grocery store and a one pump gasoline stop. Next it was sold to Joe and Annie Migura who ran it as a grocery store, also selling beer and gasoline for a number of years. After Joe and Annie died it was sold to Victor and Theresa Warwas who operate it at the present time as a grocery, beer, and gas stop. Many of the local people and also people who travel through the area stop by to have some refreshments or play a game of dominoes. Some are daily customers.

Valley View School

The Valley View school was started in 1900. The first location of the school was near the Schleicher Bridge and the second site was near Hells Gate Bridge. It was located on land with a lovely view of the Guadalupe River Valley; thus the name. Belle Neighbors taught the first session in 1900. Tina Wimbish was its second teacher.

The first school building burned. The last building was built on the Cheapside road. A one teacher school was maintained until the late 1940's when it became a member of the Cuero Independent School District.

WALLAS RANCH SCHOOL

T124

Wallis Ranch School

Wallis Ranch school was first located on the John Wallis Ranch in northern DeWitt County. The school trustees were John Wallis, Fritz Noelte, and Elias M. Wallace. The school began on September 6, 1886. Around 1910, the school was moved to a second site.

From the records, it seems there sould have been two Wallis Ranch Schools; a second built about 1884 on Cooper Creek, with the first teacher being Miss Helen Reed of Cuero. Then in 1910, the district passed a school bond, purchased an acre and a half of land from E. Christian Lieck for $67.50 and built a two room school building. This was about five and one half miles southwest of Westhoff and combined the children of that community into one school.

The Wallis Ranch School continued until the late 1940's. After that the children of the area attended the Westhoff School.

WELDON SCHOOL

Weldon School Building

When the Indianola Railroad Company abandoned the idea of building a railroad along the Old Indianola Trail, the company sold land to various purchasers. About 1885 Vachel Weldon, Sr. acquired some of this land in western DeWitt County. He opened up his land for settlement in 1890. Soon the Gruenau Community was located on some of the Weldon land, eight miles northwest of Yorktown. On March 9, 1894 V. Weldon, Sr. gave an acre of land for a school. This school became the Weldon School and was the school of the Gruenau area. It was discontinued in the 1950's.

George Langley was one of the teachers.

WESTHOFF (BELLO) T126

Early Westhoff Primary

In 1906 the Southern Pacific Railroad was extended from Cuero to Stockdale. A town was surveyed for a railroad station fifteen miles northwest of Cuero. The men engaged in the task of grading the path of the railroad used "frisnas" drawn by mules. They pitched their tents near the surveying project and called the site "tent city".

The townsite's elevation was 300 feet and its location was in a beautiful section of rolling country which inspired the name of Bello. Bello is Spanish for beautiful. The first passenger train reached Bello on August 8, 1906.

The town grew rapidly. Soon the following businesses and professional services wee established: O.C. Bruening and W.D. Buchhorn, saloon; R.E. Scharnberg, grocery; Hodge & Lord, meat market; F.K. Lynch, drugs; Dr. Milner, physician; A.F. Teller, confectionery; William Emler, sandwiches; Charles Wild, grocery and hardware; Gus Theime general merchandise; Robert Kahlert, furniture; William Bruening, boarding house; I.A. Walker and Charles Mecke, bank; Olenick Brothers. grocery and hardware; H.D. Prusmerfer and Ed Mueller were carpenters; J.E. Denmark, public weigher; J.S. Gentry, drayman; Charles Small, rancher and salesman; Drs. S.P. Boothe and A. Barfield served as physicians; George O. Rehmil and E.T. Teller sold insurance and J.E. Warburton was postmaster.

A post office was established December 10, 1906. Because of the confusion between Bells in Bell County and Bello in DeWitt County, the designation Bello was rejected by the Post Office Dept. in Washington. The citizens of the town were reluctant to change the name of their settlement, and the controversy continued for some time. Finally the name Bello was discontinued and the name Westhoff was given to both the post office and the town, in honor of William Westhoff, Sr.

The town continued to grow and new businesses prospered. William Hillman and Son operated the first gin and it was followed by the Smith and Sons Gin moved from Smiley to Westhoff: later Theo Rogge of Shiner built the third gin. The farmers of the surrounding territory produced large cotton crops requiring all three gins to process from daylight until dark. As many as 4800 bales of cotton were ginned in some seasons before the advent of the boll weevil.

Carter Brothers built a spacious general merchandise business about 1910. George Langley also entered the general merchandise business. Meichen and Seim operated a tin shop, George B. Wird had a saddlery and harness shop; Blaschkel Kutac sold groceries and notions; J.F. Goehring operated a meat market; Mrs. Goehring kept a hotel; Julius Kasper, C.T. Roberts and Albert Gerhold had barber shops; Oscar Wild and F.L. Koehler sold confections; J.J. Bomba sold drugs; Jim Matijok maintained a dry goods store and a millinery shop; John Schober operated a bakery and Walter W. Eatman edited the Westhoff Advertizer, a weekly newspaper. Otto Rau had a saloon.

Tragedy struck the prosperous town of Westhoff in 1913. A midnight fire destroyed 13 business houses and the town never fully recovered its former status.

As the years went by various businesses have prospered in Westhoff. Fuchs Welding and Lumber, Lynn Nessel, welding; Albert Torres, groceries and service station; W.J. Ortman, Big Four Domino hall; George Baros, grocery store; James Allison, service station; Jeanni Real, City Cafe; Raymond Brozozowski, Whiteleghorn Inn restaurant; American Legion Hall; Home State Bank; Westhoff Post Office; volunteer fire department and the school have all survived in Westhoff. Today the main agricultural businesses are poultry and cattle.

In 1972 fire once more took four businesses. A cafe owned by Raymond Brozozowaski, A cafe under the management of Mr. Jodie Cleveland, The Big Four Recreation club owned by W.J. Ortman and Gene Burnett, and the fourth building was a warehouse for Lone Star Beer, owned by E.T. Teller, were all destroyed by fire

In 1988 fire again visited Westhoff and destroyed its sixty year old school. Westhoff's first school was established in the early 1900's when the town was still called Bello. It was in a one room fram building built by subscriptions. The first teacher were Florence Chess and Burns McMurray. In later years Westhoff built a two story four room brick school. This served until 1928, when by another bond issue a modern six room brick building was erected. Long time teachers were Miss Lydia Christiansen, Mrs. Grace Barfield, and Mrs. Leona Bruening.

The school was rebuilt and is going strong in 1990. Mrs. Irene Hahn is the superintendent of the kindergarten through junior high school. The High School age children go to Cuero High School.

The community has had a Presbyterian Church, a Catholic Church, a Lutheran Church, a Methodist Church and a baptist Church as well as a black Baptist Church.

ST. ALOYSIUS CATHOLIC CHURCH

Through Storms And Hard Times 75 Years - Going On 100

Could it be just coincidence that the first Baptismal entry in the St. Aloysius records was "Aloysius"? Born February 18, 1914, this child, named Aloysius Geo, was baptized by Father A.J. Miedanna, on March 15, 1914. His parents were Herman Buchhorn and Anna Wild. An insert on the first page, however, seems to prove that Aloysius was not the first. – An affidavit, witnessed by Father J.V. Hamala, states that Maria Gomez was the first child baptized. Her parents were Florencio Gomez and Nieves Ochoa.

St. Aloysius Church - early Westhoff

The many Baptisms and other priestly ministries in the early years of the Westhoff Mission indicate that there had been an urgent need for a church. One can only imagine the negotiations and petitions by the local Catholics, until Bishop John Shaw gave his permission. The origin of the parish dates from the year 1911, when a generous benefactor Joe Neumann donated ten acres of land for the purpose of building a church.

The land, provided by Mr. Neumann, was just off the Cuero-Westhoff Highway. The church building was completed in 1913, with much volunteer labor, and with the help of a $500.00 donation from the Catholic Church Extension Society. Bishop Shaw came for the dedication, and also the following year for the blessing of the bell. Besides Buchhorn and Neumann, some of the "charter" families were Kutac, Parma, Gallegos, Guzman, Voelkel, Nollkemper, De La Cruz, De La Garza and Raska. These and many more appreciated their new House of Worship, and they supported it cheerfully.

Early in 1915, Father Miedanna was succeeded by a Redemptorist priest, Father Milton P. Cahill. Even though Father Cahill lived in San Antonio, he had more than enough work in Westhoff. He continued this busy schedule for four years. His most "prosperous" year was 1916, in which he baptized 37 babies. This record has stood all through the years, and it is not being challenged now.

The Redemptorist Fathers continued serving Westhoff, as well as Nixon, until the year 1926, when Father Edward Marco was appointed resident pastor in Nixon. From that date, until 1970, St. Aloysius Church in Westhoff was a Mission of St. Joseph's in Nixon.

When the present highway was built through Westhoff, the Church was moved back from its original site to make room. The church building was damaged by storms in 1929 and in 1942. Each time it was restored, and it is still intact.

On October 23, 1955 at Aloysius Church was rededicated by the Rt. Rev. John Gerberman, Dean of the Floresville Deanery. Under the direction of Father J.V. Hamala the building had undergone extensive remodeling – painting both interior and exterior, new pews, new Stations of the Cross. A large crowd attended the dedication, as well as the chicken stew supper which followed.

The 50th anniversary of the Church was reached in 1963, and was commemorated on Sunday, October 20. Under the supervision of the pastor, Father Benton Thurmond, the parish celebrated with a special Mass, and a big feast at the American Legion Hall in Westhoff.

In the late 60's more improvements were made in the St. Aloysius Church building, through the ingenuity of Father John Wagner. Some of the present-day parishioners still speak of the good work done during that time.

The Mission of St. Aloysius was never promoted to be a Parish with its own pastor. In the beginning the priests came from San Antonio and from Nixon. In later years they came from Cuero, for Sunday Mass and religion classes during the week. At present the Mission is attached to Sts. Peter and Paul Parish in Meyersville, with Father Edward C. Bartsch as Pastor. Other priests, not already mentioned, who served the people of Westhoff, were Fathers Maneth, Kolodzie, Galle, Ehlinger, Murski, Kahlich, Pugh, Flynn, Kunz, Mackin, Appleby and Leyva. Some of these have completed their earthly service, and we trust that they are enjoying their eternal reward.

The present pastor, Father Bartsch, is proud to point out that he is well received in Westhoff, and that he is very grateful to all the people there. Even though they are few in number, they are very generous.

St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church - Westhoff

On March 29, 1908, a congregation consisting of five voting members was organized. These five members were: William Bruening, Herman Gaedke, Ludwig Harms, Gustav Thieme, and Albert Veit.

The Birthplace, as well as the place of the first service, was a dance hall. The dance hall, however, was not long to be had for a place of worship. It was sold, and so the congregation had to look around for another place of worship. Two times divine services were held in a saloon. Not a very appropriate place for a divine service, indeed! One service was held under a large live oak tree, as even the saloon was no longer to be had. The small congregation was again without a building in which to worship the triune God. Finally, however, in November, the church was completed. A simple and plain building it was. It consisted of four board walls without being finished on the inside

The congregation grew very, very slowly.

In 1916, the congregation finally decided to have the inside of the church finished and 16 feet added to its length. The pledges were willingly made. The Ladies' Aid had the arch windows installed. The Luther League donated the pulpit and the altar in appropriate harmony.

On December 4, 1920, a resolution was passed to the effect that the congregation be self-supporting, thus relieving the Mission Board. On May 21, 1921, a resolution was passed to buy a parsonage. The present parsonage was bought, to which, however, an addition was later built.

In 1968 the Church Councils of Westhoff and Yorktown and a member of the District office met and decided to share a pastor. In 1969 the Lindenau Congregation was without a pastor and the two churches formed a Parish. This arrangement is still in effect today. In 1978, the Lutheran Book Of Worship was introduced.

At present, there are 202 baptized members and 180 confirmed members.

WESTVILLE

T129

Westville was located two miles south of Cuero on the Victoria Highway. It consisted of a church, school and cemetery. All that remains today (1990) is the cemetery. The church was started in 1887 and was called the Mt. Herman Missionary Baptist Church. The school was the Westville School and it continued until the students were sent to the Cuero schools. One of the teachers was Eliza Day, who taught in the 1890's. Westville was a black community and the cemetery is still used.

HISTORY OF YOAKUM, TEXAS

T130

The history of Yoakum could be summed up in these words: cattle, railroads, tomatoes, leather. From the dangerous days of Indian massacre, to cattle drives, railroad building and bustling prosperity. Later, bleak depression days and railroad decline to a thriving business in green-wrap tomatoes; the gradual development of Yoakum as the Leather Capital of the Southwest. Yoakum has had many devoted and farsighted men and women, all endowed with moral and physical courage.

The area of Yoakum and nearby rural areas was first settled by the John May Family, Patrick Sawey, John Douglas, and a widower named O'Daughtery and Mr. and Mrs. Douglas, their son and daughter in 1836. This was during the "Runaway Scrape" time.

The John May family that settled near Brushy Creek received a grant of a league of land from the government of Coahuila and Mexico shortly before the Texas Revolution.

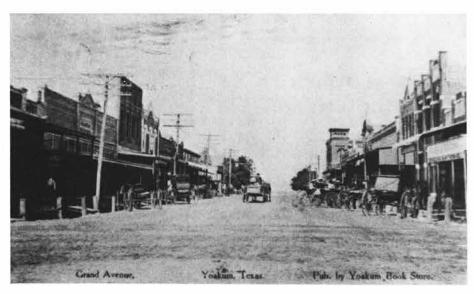

The small settlement was used as a collection point for cattle drives called the Chisholm Trail. A stone monument to these drives is located at the intersection of West Gonzales Street and Highway 77A. It was erected in 1936, the Texas Centennial year.

The dream of a railroad was in every community in the years following the Civil War and Reconstruction. The first railroad was just pushing into Texas at the time of the adoption of the present Texas Constitution in 1876. Before the days of highways, trucks, buses, and passenger cars, not to mention airplanes, railroad service was absolutely essential to the development of growth of a community. The dream was in the minds of the May family.

John May, Sr. did not live to see the realization of his dreams but his son James Xavier "Bud" May, Sr. and Alex May, Sr. donated 200 acres of land for railroad shops and right-ofways for San Antonio-Houston tracks and other facilities. John May, Sr. and Pat May gave every other acre of land for a townsite, and donated land in other areas. It is said that a woman in Concrete, a small community between Hochheim and Cuero, refused to give land for the railroad. Cuero and Hallettsville also refused to give land, and so lost the railroad to Yoakum. Small towns such as Moulton and Sweet Home, which were bypassed in the building of the S.A.A.P., moved to new sites on the railroad.

Colonel Uriah Lott was the great railroad builder and promoter, with his vice president and general manager B.F. Yoakum, for whom the City of Yoakum was named. Mr. Mifflin Kenedy, provided much of the funds for building the S.A.A.P., lending about seven million dollars to develop the road. Captain Richard King of the fabulous King Ranch provided many acres of land and millions of dollars of help to extend the railroad into his area.

The San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railroad came to Yoakum in 1887, this being the official founding date for the city. The main line ran from Houston to San Antonio, a line operated from Yoakum to Waco, northeast of Lockhart, southwest to Corpus Christi, and a branch to Falfurrias.

Grand Avenue - Yoakum

Yoakum - corner of Lott and W. Grand 1900

A Yoakum Townsite Corporation was set up whose president was John G. Kenedy, son of the deceased Mr. Mifflin Kenedy, and lots sold very rapidly.

Yoakum, the working headquarters of the S.A.A.P. grew into a bustling small city in a few short years. According to the Yoakum Weekly Times of a January 1896 edition, which called Yoakum the magic City of the Sunny South, the railroad then was rapidly expanding, there were no empty houses, and all the hotels and boarding houses were filled to capacity. There was a cotton mill, three cotton gins and a compress, a daily and two weekly newspapers. A ten ton ice factory, electric light plant and a cistern factory, telephone system, a National Bank and one private bank, an excellent school system with over 700 pupils. Although only eight years of age, Yoakum business property had a value of one to five thousand dollars per lot exclusive of improvements. U.S. Postal receipts for 1895, were $4,500. This was a pretty tidy sum in 1895 dollars. Railway express receipts were over $5,000 for nine months of 1895.

The First National Bank was organized in 1890, with a capital of $50,000 with John Bennett as President. Ground breaking ceremonies for its new building were held on July 22, 1970. the Bank of Yoakum was established in 1890, with its building at the corner of Lott and West May Street. This building is still standing, but remodeled.

The present Yoakum State Bank, in its new quarters, was organized to replace the First State Bank wich failed during the early days of the Great Depression, along with the Farmers and Merchants State Bank.

D.B. Cain established one of the general merchandise stores in 1894, which continued in operation until 1927. Mr. Cain died only a few years ago. One of his sons, Arthur Cain, is the present manager of the Yoakum Chamber of Commerce.

Yoakum Railroad Park

The government of Yoakum was of the mayor-council type until April of 1915, when the present commission-manager form was adopted by the voters.

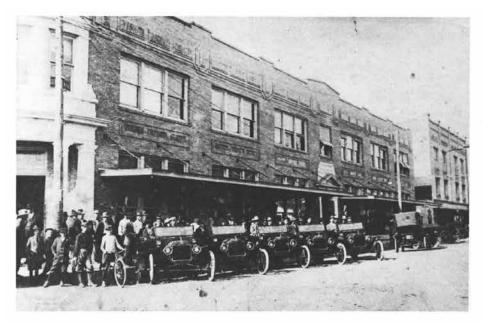

Many churches have been built in Yoakum. The oldest is St. Joseph's Catholic Church, which celebrated its one hundredth anniversary in 1969, though it's first church, now in ruins a short distance outside the city, was built before Yoakum existed. Built in 1869, it was called the Brushy Church. The late Dr. T.J. Hill stated in the Yoakum Daily Herald of July 11, 1932, that stones for the church were hauled by ox cart after being quarried at Hochheim. The mortar used was made from burned stone, which was brought from Rocky Creek near Hallettsville.

The First Baptist Church of Yoakum celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary in 1964. H.M. Rowland was its first pastor. The First Methodist Church was begun in 1889, with T.S. Armstrong as its first pastor. At present there are 21 churches of 10 denominations.

Depression hit Yoakum several hard blows. The railroad shops closed, railroad business declined, two banks failed, and depression conditions hit farming and ranching in the Yoakum trade area. At the height of the season in late spring, several hundred cars of greenwrap tomatoes were shipped to northern markets each year.

The development of Yoakum as the Land of Leather was begun by Mr. Carl Welhausen, who took over a small tanning company and developed it into a company manufacturing saddles, bridles, and harness. Later, belts, billfolds and novelties were made. As its sales extended over the United States, Canada, and Mexico, it became one of the leading leather manufacturing concerns in the United States. Known as Tex-Tan, it later became a part of the giant Tandy Corporation, and a great boom to employment and prosperity in Yoakum.

Other smaller leather firms for the sale and manufacture of leather goods have sprung up to make Yoakum truly the Leather Capital of the Southwest.

1911 - Model T Fords - Lott St. - Yoakum

Meat processing plants and other industries, about 30 in all, have been established in Yoakum. An excellent modern airport has been in operation for several years.

The first school of the Yoakum area was situated in a log building at the east side of Brushy Church. It was built in 1876. The first religious school in the Yoakum City Limits was built about 1889. A standard parochial school was established in 1928, by St. Joseph's parish. The present brick building was completed in 1929, just in time to fell the full blast of the Gread Depression. A high school and elementary school were operated through May of 1970, when the four senior high school grades were discontinued.

The Yoakum Public School system began in 1892, when the city levied its first school tax and took over several private schools which had operated until that time. A block of land was donated by the Townsite Company, and a six room building was constructed. This was the land on which the old East Side Building now stands facing Simpson Street.

West Side School was erected in 1894, with J.W. Cook as principal. By 1896, enrollments had reached 620, and by 1909, one thousand. Park Place Grammar School, a wooden structure for a school was built on Elnora Street, and a two-room elementary school in the "Wye" section.

The three-story brick East Side School, still in use in 1969-1970 as an intermediate school but soon to be demolished, was opened for use in 1912, according to records, but the cornerstone date was 1909.

Brick grammar schools were opened in 1915, at the West Side location on West Grand Avenue, and at the Park Place site. The West Side building was torn down about 15 years ago. the Old Park Place building has been sold to a private owner. The first high school class graduated in 1898. A new high school building was opened at Poth and Cecilia Streets in 1937. There are now six buildings on the Senior High School Campus. A million dollar building program is just being completed, featuring the new airconditioned Junior High building. the Yoakum public schools have been completely racially integrated for several years.

May-Hickey Log House restored by Oliver & Betty McBryde. Near Yoakum

Yoakum now has a modern hospital, two nursing homes and two clinics. It's beautiful and spacious city park has many attractions. Plans are underway for a community and leather museum.

Early in April of each year a Garden club sponsors Wild Flower Trails, with visits to historic sites in the surrounding area. In early June of each year Yoakum presents it's annual Tom-tom celebration, begun in 1929, to remember it's founders and pioneers and to celebrate it's accomplishments. Appropriately, the first Tom-Tom queen was Dorothy May, daughter of Alexander (Eck) May, Jr, of the pioneer May family.

From the dangerous days of Indian raids, to cattle drives and railroad boom and prosperity, Yoakum has survived depression to face a prosperous and confident future.

Holy Cross Lutheran Church

In 1888, one year after Yoakum was founded, some Lutheran pastors came as missionaries to scattered families in this area. In the vicinity of Pilot Grove, Pastors C. Geiger and W. Westerhoff held services in the home of farmer Henry Quast. When German Farmers settled Hochheim Prairie, a little congregation formed, and Pastor Geiger held services in the home of Valentine Hoch.

From available records it appears that Pastor Cornelius Ziesmer, who became pastor of St. Mark's Lutheran Church in Cuero, was instrumental in organizing a congregation in Yoakum Jan. 27, 1891, with about 10 families. Services were first held in homes of members. Later, services were held in the old Opera House, then in the City Hall, and still later, in the old Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

A corner lot at Hochheim and Schwab streets was purchased in 1892 for $250. A church building was dedicated Oct. 29, 1893. A cyclone the next month completely demolished the building. Services, however, were held that afternoon in the home of Christian Schaefer. This small congregation began rebuilding and Jan. 28, 1894, this building was dedicated—heavily laden with a debt of $800. Pastor Ziesmer died a month later; so Pastor Dzewasof Charlottenburg held services twice a month.

Yoakum Lodge #662, AF & AM

The Grand Lodge of Masons in Texas granted a charter on September 29, 1888 for Yoakum Lodge #662 AF & AM in Yoakum, Texas. The first Worshipful Master was RE Bethel, other officers were: William Green, Senior Warden, E Montgomery, Junior Warden, and PP Stephenson, Secretary. The first candidate to receive the Masonic degrees was George H Woodrome.

The first Masonic lodge was located in the second story of the BP Stephenson building at the corner of Grand Avenue and Lott Streets. Then it was moved to the building across the street to the second story of what was the old Yoakum National Bank. There was a fire in that location so the Lodge was moved to the third floor of the Tatum Furniture and Untaking business. The Lodge purchased thid third floor. Then this third floor was burned; so the Lodge was moved again to the second floor of the old Goetz Motor Company. At a later date it was neccessary for the Yoakum Lodge #662 and the Royal Arch Chapter #209 to sign a release to the third floor of the old Tatum building (which was no longer there) so the building could be sold.

In 1916 the corner stone was laid at the corner of West May and Irvin Streets for a Lodge building that was constructed at a cost of $16,000.00. To pay for the building, the Lodge formed a corporation and sold stock to the local members and other Masonic bodies at a cost of some per share.

When the new building was opened in 1916 there were six certified members who taught the Masonic work. At that time the Lodge had a membership of 450. This lodge has been active for more than 100 years and has met twice a month and there has never been a meeting when they failed to have a quorem to meet.

To date there have been 85 Worshipful Masters, several who have served twice. Howard L. Johnson has served three times as Worshipful Master and Grady F Glas has served four times. The Lodge has only had four secretaries: PP Stephenson, JW Cook, FC Schiege and James B Taylor.

The Yoakum Lodge has several paid Endowed Memberships, some are from active members and some have been purchased by the families in memory of their loved ones who are gone but not forgotten.

Yoakum Lodge #662 AF & AM meets on the first and third Thursdays of each month at 7:30 p.m.

During the depression years many members had to drop their membership because they did not have the money to pay their dues. The Chapter dropped the dues to $2.00.

Mrs Maude Raiford helped to organize the Shiner Chapter #272 in 1914. Mrs Raiford also had a pass to ride on the railroad and when no one else could go to Grand Chapter or other meetings, she would represent Yoakum.

The first husband and wife team to serve in the East were Mr and Mrs Merrem in 1933.

In 1936 the School of Instruction for this Section was held in Yoakum. The weather was so cold and the Lodge Hall was not well heated that the school was moved to the home of Mrs Lelia Michot, Worthy Matron, and continued there

In 1942 Mrs Gladys Davis, Mrs Lucille Marek and Mrs Marguerite Witte organized the Rainbow Assembly for girls in Yoakum. This was Assembly #2. It demised a number of years ago.

To date Yoakum Chapter #282 has only had four secretaries: Mrs Emma Stanley, Mrs Lizzie winfree, Mrs Lelia Michot and Mrs Mary W Taylor. All records have been destroyed by fires on two different occasions.

They are Mrs Maude Raiford, Mrs Bernice House, Mrs Gladys Davis, Mrs Pauline Sistrunk, Mrs Mary W Taylor, Mrs Maxine Autrey, and Mrs Eula Mae Jaeger. Mrs Bernice House also held many other Grand Chapter Appointments.

Mrs Mary W Taylor, Past Matron and current Secretary is the only member holding a Life Membership in Yoakum Chapter #282, Order of the Eastern Star.

Each Worthy Matron and Worthy Patron can tell of some experience they had during their term. Each Worthy Matron has tried to leave something behind – the chairs in the reception room were refinished, the kitchen renovated, the ladies room was refurnished, altar cloths and pedestal covers were made, venetian blinds were installed, payments were made on the air conditioner, speaker system and the rug for the Masonic Hall of Yoakum Lodge #662, AF & AM. The Masons allows the Chapter the priviledge of meeting in their lodge hall.

Yoakum Chapter #282 has stated meetings on the 1st and 3rd Tuesdays each month.

HISTORY OF YORKTOWN, TEXAS

T131

The situation in Europe after Napoleon abolished the Holy Roman Empire in the early part of the nineteenth century was chaotic. Many individuals who lived in Germany became disillusioned because a national union of Germany had not been founded and Prussia had become even more powerful than it had been. A Bund, which was merely a league of German rulers, each dependent upon a Diet of diplomatic delegates from independent rulers, was formed to keep peace and order among the thirty-eight states.

Revolutionary movements for Germany unity and liberty broke out in 1848 and 1849. In Frankfurt, a national parliament met to write a constitution for a federal German empire headed by Prussia. When the king of Prussia refused to become the German emperor, the old Bund was restored and thousands of German liberals emigrated to the United States to seek personal freedom.

Other reasons also contributed to the German immigration. Many of those who fled hoped for social betterment in the new land. Religious freedom was an added incentive. Texas presented special opportunities to these immigrants. It was touted as a land of opportunity which would provide a good living. Texas was both a republic and a democracy, an advantage to the Germans who were coming to "the land of milk and honey." Germany itself was overpopulated and underindustrialized. Thus, immigration to Texas provided a growing opportunity for many German individuals.

Lt. J.V. Hecke, a retired Prussian army officer, who came to Texas in 1818 or 1819, is believed to have been the first German to visit the state. When he returned to Berlin, he published in 1821 his Travels in the United States, suggesting the colonization of the state by Prussia.

In 1828 Friedrich Ernst of Barel in Oldenburgh brought his family to Texas and obtained a land grant from the Mexican government.

He wrote a letter back home which pictured Texas in such glowing terms that a group including Joseph Biegel, Robert J. Kleberg, Louis von Roeder, and others from Oldenburgh and Estphalia emigrated to Texas.

Ludwig von Roeder had been an officer in the German army, and when he decided to emigrate with his family in 1834, he sent some of the unmarried children ahead to select a place for all to assemble. The advance party consisted of Louis, Albrecht, and Joachim von Roeder, their sister, Valesca, and a servant.

Several months later on September 30, 1834, the group from Oldenburgh set sail on the sloop Congress, commanded by Captain J. Adams. The party consisted of Ludwig S. von Roeder, Mrs. von Roeder, their children Louise and Caroline von Roeder, Robert Justus Kleberg and wife Rosa von Roeder, Mrs. Otto von Roeder, Antoinette von Donop, John Rennemann and family, William Frels, and others. After a voyage of sixty days, they reached New Orleans where they remained for two weeks and then set sail on the schooner Sabine for Brazoria. On December 22 the vessel wrecked off Galveston Island. After a long delay and a very tedious journey, the passengers finally reached their destination. Louis and Albrecht von Roeder were located in a hut fourteen miles from San Felipe de Austin, emaciated from disease and lack of nourishment. Joachim and Valesca had died.

At San Felipe, while the men were building their log huts and cleaning their fields, the Indians would furnish the Germans with game and skins in exchange for ammunition and trinkets. The company of Oldenburgh farmers under the leadership of Leverenzen settled on Cummings Creek while the Roeder colony located on the lands which had been located by the Roeder party of 1833 at Cat Springs, about seven miles from San Felipe. It was quite hard for the Roeder party to settle down to hard work and accomodate themselves to frontier circumstances. The young von Roeders had pictured pioneer life as one of hunting and fishing and of freedom from restraints of Prussian society; it was hard for them to surrender to the drudgery of splitting rails and grubbing brush and fighting the fever.

Less than a year later, the Texas Revolution began. The younger men promptly joined Captain John York's volunteer company, and under this patriot they participated in the fiercest battle of the revolution — the storming and capture of San Antonio from December 5 to 20, 1835. Later many of these same men fought at San Jacinto.

As far back as 1843 Charles Eckhardt was a merchant in Indianola. He had come from Paasphe, Germany in 1832, fifteen years earlier than his brother Caesar Eckhardt. He also participated in the War of Texas Independence and helped to establish the Republic of Texas under Sam Houston. He began a prosperous mercantile business in the main seaport of Texas — Indianola.

On April 2, 1848, Charles Eckhardt, Theodore Miller, C. DeSchutz, and John L. Mueller bought a tract of land from John York, intending to lay out a new town. Under their agreement to lay out the town at their own expense and allow York to keep each alternate block and acre lot. The agreement stipulated that the town was to be named Yorktown. On July 24, 1848, Eckhardt and his associates wrote York that they were sending him a copy of the town plat. Shortly afterwards the first settlers began to arrive, among them Andreas Strieber, Peter Metz, C.G. Hartmann, and Mrs. Hoppe.

On February 7, 1848, Charles Eckhardt entered into an agreement with John A. King of DeWitt County for $150 in which King agreed to survey a road leading from the town of Victoria to his residence on the eastern branch of the main Coletto, the road to be run as nearly true as practicable, having water on the way no more than fifteen miles apart, and the road not to cross the Guadalupe to the town of New Braunfels. This road became the main thoroughfare, known as the Indianola Trail. Freight leaving Indianola arrive in San Antonio six days later. Yorktown was midway between — an important relay and supply station for freighters and trail drivers.

Pioneers who hauled freight on the Old Indianola Trail were beset by many hardships. An old salve recalled the following:

"I hauled freight between San Antonio and Port Lavaca and also Indianola, or Powder Horn as it was called in Indianola, when the yellow fever epidemic in Texas hit that town.

People died so fast they could not dig graves for them. They just dug a long trench on the beach north of town and buried them in it. When anyone ill with yellow fever began to spit black blood, they was done for. In some cases they were put into boxes before they quit moving. I had to help take two girls off beds and put them in boxes before they quit moving. Only people who had been living there a long time was affected. Those who were from outside like I was wasn't taken sick with the yellow fever.

When we was freighting, we had to guard against robbers and cow skinners all the time. We would make a corral each night and put our steers into them to keep them safe. Cow skinners was sure bad in them days. They would steal anybody's cattle just for the hides. I've seen thousands of carcasses on the prairie north of Yorktown where the skinners had killed them."

Peter Metz and John Frank built the first house in Yorktown in May, 1848 on Block 58. The contract stipulated that the building is "to be a good and substantial block house to be built of good, sound logs hewn to the inside and outside, and well joined together, either weather boarded on the outside ot plastered, the house to be 12 feet front and 20 feet long with a partition and 3 door frames, chimney in the rear room, and the floor well laid out and nailed down and smooth in both rooms."

A.G. Hartmann, who had come to Texas in 1845, had served under August Buchel in the Mexican War and had laid out the town of Indianola in 1845-46, relates how he came to Yorktown:

"In the spring of 1848 Charles Eckhardt, a merchant of Indianola, came to my house and stated that he was in partnership with Captain John York, had surveyed a town and named it Yorktown, and that the first ten settlers had a choice of a lot and ten acres of land, gratis, and requested me to visit the new town. After having visited the place with Mr. Hardt, Jr., I decided to settle permanently. After having disposed of my property in Indianola, I returned in company with William Hardt, Sr., and Henry Hardt, Jr. After arriving with my wife. I built a house on the north corner of Block 31, on the west side of the creek and on the public square. The house being nearly completed, about the first part of August, 1848, I moved in it. This was the first dwelling house put up in Yorktown and occupied." (Yorktown News, "History," October 4, 1923.)

The next family that arrived in Yorktown was that of Johann Andreas Strieber, the father-in-law of Hartmann. Next in 1848-49 came Franz Hoppe, N. Kaufmann, Messrs. Lutenbacher, Goly Julius, and Adolph Gentsch.

"The early settlers were far from having an easy lot. Many and difficult were the obstacles with which they were forced to contend. The houses—or most of them—were not yet built. In the interval many of them were compelled to live in tents. They lacked all the conveniences and comforts of life. The woods were fairly alive with game of all kinds, and a man could well rely on his own gun to supply him with all the meat and lard he needed. Yorktown Creek contained an abundant supply of the purest water the whole year through in its deep crystal pools and it was quite a time before wells were dug." (Yorktown News, "History," October 4, 1923.)

Some time in 1848 a German traveler arrived in DeWitt County and methodically recorded his impressions of the countryside. He was delighted with the stately oaks, the deep black soil, and the rushing streams. He was overjoyed with the beauties of the Guadalupe, and chose his words well in describing it:

"O, the Guadalupe, its water clear as day, flows ten to twenty feet deep over the rocks. The rocks and green luxurious plants and fishes and tortoises and alligators appear not as if they were in the water, but rather as if surrounded by green transparent air. Charmingly restful! And the trees and cliffs, how picture-squely they overhang the stream and bathe their feet in the water! There is no more beautiful stream than the Guadalupe! Who would consider the turbid and slimy waters of the Rhine beautiful after he has seen the Guadalupe! Here the legends of water fairies appear natural; and crystal palaces resting on cliffs of glass are easily imagined."

Several versions of the demise of Captain York in the epic battle with the Indians appear in historical accounts. But the consensus is that Captain York was a gallant pioneer with a portly and commanding presence, a blue-eyed blond with more suavity than is ordinarily attirbuted to men of cabin and forest life. From Indian Wars and Pioneers of Texas comes this account:

"For several years prior to 1848, the country between the Guadalupe and San Antonio Rivers was not annoyed by the Indians. Early in October, 1848, a party of Indians descended from the Cibolo and joined another band, totalling about forty Indians, including some outlawed Mexicans. They had already killed two settlers which alarmed those on the west side of the Guadalupe. A company of 32 men and boys from the west side of the river in DeWitt County assembled to meet and repel the raiders. Captain York, a brave old soldier, was made captain; Richard H. Chisholm, another veteran was his lieutenant. B. McB. Pridgen and Newton Porter were named sergeants, and Joseph Tumlinson was guide.

On the night of October 10, these hastily collected volunteers encamped on the head waters of the Cabesa, 25 miles above Goliad. On the morning of the 11, they travelled up the country, striking the trail of the Indians which led in a southerly route towards the mouth of the Escondido, a tributary of the San Antonio from the southwest side. The Indians had acquired a large group of horses and were leaving the country, so York and his followers quickened their pursuit. The settlers pressed forward rapidly until those in front were ambushed, receiving heavy fire accompanied by yells of imprecations in broken English. The inexperienced company was confused, and those in the rear recoiled. York ordered the men to dismount in a grove of trees and some of his followers returned and kept up the fire.

James Sykes, a stalwart man of reckless daring, dashed up to the dense chaparral in which the Indians were sheltered and was killed. James Bell, son-in-law to Captain York, was shot down between two contending parties. Captain York ran to rescue him and was shot through the kidneys. The brave couple expired in the embrace of each other, and were buried in a single large coffin.

Joseph Tumlinson and Hugh R. Young were severely wounded, and James York, son of the dead captain was shot through the cheeks from side to side. The contest endured about an hour, when both sides retired. So far as is remembered, this was the last raid in that section of the country below the Seguin and San Antonio Road."

Another account of the final battle of Captain York was recorded by Judge Robert Kleberg, who settled in DeWitt County in 1847 and who was elected County Commissioner the following year.

One October morning Captain York and Mrs. Albrecht Roeder, and my brother, Ernst Kleberg, summoned me to go on a party of volunteers to fight a tribe of hostile Indians who were depredating the neighborhood of Yorktown. We were soon mounted and equipped for the place of rendezvous. We reached the Cabeza that night, where our troops, consisting of some thirty men, camped and elected Captain York as commander, and Messrs. William Taylor, Jno Tomlinson, and Rufus Taylor were detailed as spies and skirmishers. Next morning the company as organized, started out to meet the foe, whom we encountered about three o'clock, p.m., on the Escondido east of the San Antonio River about fifteen miles west of the present town of Yorktown, just as our company filed around a point of timber. The Indians, about sixty to seventy strong, lay in ambush. Our company was not marching in rank and file, but in an irregular way, not expecting to meet the enemy so soon. Captain York and Mr. Bell were in front, followed immediately by John Pettus and myself.

The Indians raised up the well-known war whoop and immediately opened up on us with a terrible fire of musketry. The majority of our men took to flight and left not more than ten to twelve of us who made a stand, taking advantage of a little grove nearby where our company returned a sharp fire upon the Indians who still remained in ambush, only exposing their heads now and then as they fired, thus having a decided advantage over the men who were only protected by a few thin trees. It was here the Mr. Bell and Captain York were killed. The former, the son-in-law of Captain York, was shot at the first fire and mortally wounded, but he was carried along to the little mott, where Captain York and myself bent over him to dress is wounds, but he died in our hands. At this juncture, Mr. Jim York, son of Captain York, was shot in the head. Captain York called me to assist him in dressing his son's wounds. I tore off a piece of his shirt and bandaged his wounds as well as possible. Captain York, overcome with grief, ran continually from his son to his son-in-law and thus exposed himself to the fire of the enemy, notwithstanding I kept warning him. A counsel of war was now held by the remaining troops, consisting of eight or nine men all told, and we decided to proceed to a little mound or elevation nearby where we might flank the Indians in their ambush. They soon retired from their position and disappeared from the field. Thus ended probably the last Indian fight in Southwest Texas."

The country surrounding Yorktown was a wilderness, overrun with mustang horses, deer, and other wild animals native to the state. Their clearly marked trail led close to Yorktown. The horses were wiry and tough, and they travelled in pairs as they roamed through the country. Meyersville, Clinton, Victoria, Port Lavaca and Indianola to the east, Goliad to the south, Gonzales to the north, and San Antonio to the west were the nearest settlements.

Fred House came to Yorktown about 1850 riding behind Old Man Campbell on Campbell's mule. He was only thirteen years old. Four families comprised the community then — the Striebers, the Hoppes, the Hardts, and Peter Metz. Probably the first two children born in Yorktown were August Hartmann on September 21, 1848 and Miss Louise Metz on November 16, 1848.

John King lived near the Yorktown settlement, and Fred House hired out to him for a period of two years, doing necessary chores such as chopping wood, driving the team, washing dishes, and whatever else was essential to keep the place going. King was the stage man, and in 1852 he sold out to Friar. The stage started its run from San Antonio to Port Lavaca, and Mr. House saw the first stage pass. For his services, Fred House received ten acres of land, five cows and calves, and a horse.

The first school in the Yorktown section was located between Upper and Lower Yorktown, near where Peter Metz lived. It was erected in 1853 at the cost of $324. The house was originally designed for a residence and had only two sides, both ends being open. The first school was presided over by Mr. Davis, who came from Iowa, although some records state G. Fuchs was the first teacher. The children came from an area of twenty to thirty miles around, accompanied by their parents who camped in the vicinity in order for their children to attend the school sessions.

In 1853 some of the early settlers made a contract with the laying off of what was first called Yorkland, but later changed to Yorktown. The nine articles of this contract were originally written in German, but Professor Otto Schmidt translated them in 1910. The signers of this historic document were Andreas Strieber, Albert Mertins, Franz Hoppe, Johann Range, Caesar Eckhardt, Adolph Schultz, Henry Hardt, Moritz Riedel, Jr., Moritz Riedel, Sr., Carl Gaebler, Wilhelm Hardt, Heinrich Post, F. Hennig, Peter Metz, Ludwig Klotz, Friedrich Bauer, and Julius Gentsch.

The following year the York estate sold the land upon which Yorktown now stands, and seventeen of the inhabitants jointly purchased this tract of land consisting of 2800 acres for $1.00 an acre, thus paying a second time for the property which they had previously bought. The caused the city to be surveyed, and for the benefit of the city they waived their just rights to the land in the streets, parks, and cemeteries.

However, in 1856 three attorneys from Goliad brought suit to recover the 2800 acres of land for the heirs of Stephen Best. They tried to frighten the inhabitants of Yorktown into a compromise, but these early settlers were men of principle. The suit was decided in favor of the citizens, but attorney fees cose them an additional $600. (Yorktown News, October 11, 1923.)

A second version of the land transactions regarding early Yorktown were recorded in an abstract of title owned by George Korczinski:

It appears that John York who laid out the town of Yorktown died some time after laying out the town and before he obtained from the state of Texas a patent to the land on which Yorktown is situated. At the April term of the County Court in 1854, the administrator of the John York estate was ordered to sell at public auction certain of the York lands, including the Yorktown tract.

On the 30th day of July, 1854, the agreement was drawn up by eighteen landowners of Yorktown authorizing Franz Hoppe to buy certain land of the York estate, particularly the streets and public squares of Yorktown if they were to be sold separately. The names of the 18 signers follow: Julius Gentsch, Carl Gaebler, Friedrich Bauer, Heinrich Post, Peter Metz, Moritz Riedel, Wilhelm Stark, F. Hennig, Ludwig Klotz, Andreas Strieber, Franz Hoppe, Caesar Eckhardt, Henry Hardt, Albert Mertins, John Range, Adolph Schutze, Moritz Riedel, Jr., and Wilhelm Hardt.

On the first day of August, 1854, Franz Hoppe bought on the Yorktown tract of 1050 acres at $2.00 an acre and several other tracts at prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.20 an acre. The sale was made at the court house door of old Clinton, then the county seat. On the sale under order of the court, nothing was reserved for streets, public squares or cemetery; so on the seventh day of July, 1856, Franz Hoppe executed a paper giving the streets, the public squares, and the cemetery tract (now Westside Cemetery) to the public.

Franz Hoppe also deeded to each of the other signers several town blocks, five, ten twenty, and seventy acre farm blocks, presumably as a partition of interest they all had in the purchase of the Yorktown tract.

It would appear from these records that Franz Hoppe was the leader, the guiding spirit of these early settlers in the time of stress and trouble when the land they had previously bought and paid for had to be bought again and equitably divided among those entitled to it.

The paper signed by the eighteen landowners does not necessarily mean that they were the only landowners in Yorktown at the time. The land on which the Heissigs, Dahmans, Anton Metz and others, who lived before the Civil War, is on the W.W. Gant survey and was not involved in the troubles of the settlers living on the Stephen Best Survey, on which practically all the present Yorktown is situated, who had to fix title to their possessions. But the eighteen named were the ones that bore the brunt of the troubles. (Yorktown News, October 4, 1923.)

On September 24, 1936, these eighteen founders were honored by having evergreen trees planted in the city park in their honor. In front of each tree was a plaque inscribed with the name of the founder.

With a school in progress and the deeds to the land properly executed, German colonization in Yorktown was well underway although few of these settlers had any of the qualifications for pioneer life. Everything in the new land was different from their former surroundings. Their university knowledge was of little use to them in splitting rails and building homes. Even the methods of farming in Germany were different from those employed in America. But they were hard-working, morally upright individuals who enjoyed wholehearted good fellowship. They found their own amusements and made the best of the new lives they had selected for themselves. They received visits from each other with great delight and shared whatever they had with one another. When an old settler met another at his home, the host would see that the horses of his guests were well fed and would offer his guests the best cheer he could, usually beginning with strong black coffee.

A most important part of the cultural heritage of Germany was a love of music. As early as 1855 balls and parties were held in Strieber's private hall with Mr. Julius Meyer providing the music. Later Heissig's hall in the Upper Town was the site of many balls and parties. Mr. Meyer was the first musician of Yorktown, long before the Civil War. He organized the first band, thus laying the foundation of the Old Band which was organized about 1869 by Messrs. Riedel and Gips.

Gohmert's Theater, having a large dancing hall and a regular stage complete with a curtain and scenery, was constructed in 1856. Mr. Frey created the scenery; he could transform white canvas into an exciting landscape with marvelous rapidity. Once the stage was set, the Gesangsverein was established in 1857 under the leadership of A. Greisen. The amateur theater was under the guidance of Mr. Greisen, and Mr. Heichling directed the Gesangsverein. The first members of the club were Messrs. Heissig, Lenz, Kraege, and Greisen together with Mrs. Greisen and her sister. Although no play books existed in Yorktown at this time. Mr. Greisen made manuscript copies for his casts, and the first performance was the presentation of Einer Muss Heiraten. This success was quickly followed by Zring and Sopf und Schwert.

These performances, given every four weeks by local talent, attracted so much attention that teamsters who traveled between Indianola and San Antonio arranged their business in such a way as to arrive in time to see these amateur performances.

The first church was erected in Yorktown in 1857-58 in a building designed to accommodate the church on the lower level and the Masonic Lodge on the upper level. The surrounding countrside attended church services and Sunday school in this church. Members were baptized in the Coletto Creek. Camp meetings were very popular and the first one ever held in DeWitt County was at Shiloh.

The community by this time had enlarged with the addition of such families as the Bauers, Riedels, Gruns, Zedlers, Gohmerts, Heissigs, Freys, and Lenzes. On September 1, 1856, the legislature of the state chartered Concrete College, a school of learning consisting of male and female departments to be located in the town of Concrete. By 1857 two post offices were listed in DeWitt County — Clinton and Cuero. Five towns had achieved status by 1857: Clinton, Yorktown, Meyersville, Concrete and Cuero. Each of these areas boasted a school which was well-sustained.

On June 10, 1861, a group of Yorktown community citizens organized a Hulan Reserve Company with Caesar Eckhardt as captain. The company was composed of 60 officers and men as certified by Caesar Eckhardt on June 15, 1861: Frederick Bauer, 1st lt.; Louis Zuch, 2nd lt.; Robert Eckhardt, orderly sgt.; C. Gohlke, E. Poetter, and L. Lenz, sgts.; John Sucher, A. Greisen, A. Vorwerk, and F. Moppe, cols.

Julius Meyer, E. Grun, J. Quast, F. Wehe, D. Schneider, Peter Metz, C. Heissig, A. Riedesel, C. Duerr, C. Schweizer, S.C. Spies, A. Kraege, E. Schulze, W. Gohmert, E. Fechner, F. Schroeder, F. Menn, F. Hardt, A. Fechner, F. Frun, Jr., C. Stephan, A. Andelman, L. Riedesel, B. Baecker, J. von Roeder, E. Engels, S. Schneider, R. Spremberg, L. Klotz, F. Gohlke, F. Poetter, S. Gohmert, W. Gohlke, E. Zedler, H. Borchers, A. Strieber, E. Krueger, C. Gips, W. Stark, A. Schulze, J. Neumann, F. Schley, S. Range, C. Hoff, E. Gaitler, and C. Gaebler were privates.

Once the early war excitement had dissipated, DeWitt County settled down to solving the problems posed by the war. On September 13, 1861, the commissioner's court appropriated $150 for clothing and supplies for the Davis Guards. They also appointed a committee to solicit clothes and supplies for the Confederate Army. A war tax was levied and in 1862 the number of arms in DeWitt County fit for use and the number of persons capable of bearing arms was reported to the court. Sugar and coffee became scarce, and many substitutes evolved. Cotton was carded, spun, and women; and garments were made from the resulting cloth. Hair ropes were made to take the place of grass ropes, and palmetto leaf hats became the high style of the moment. In 1864 the citizens protested against the use of the courthouse for military and hospital purposes, probably because this building was used as a place for public church services on Sunday.

Up to the time of the Civil War, Yorktown had enjoyed a slow but steady growth; however, during the war all growth seemed to cease. Once the war was over, the population slowly began to increase, and by 1866 a newer and larger school house was deemed necessary. Although the Yorktowners were noted for their love of peace and respect for the law, after the war Yorktown suffered with the rest of the state from lawlessness and mob rule. Society was torn apart by private feuds such as that of Sutton and Taylor, and for several years the county housed desperadoes who harassed the peaceful citizens of Yorktown. Local committees of safety soon suppressed these activities, and quiet growth replaced the problems of Reconstruction.

From 1866 to 1872 the main portion of Yorktown extended upward from the old Frair Place, and this area was known as Upper Town. Most of the business was located in that part of town. Eckhardt's store was at one time the only business house in Lower Town, while Upper Town contained the business houses of Heissig, Gugenheim, Dahlamann, Stark, and Kilgore, all dealing chiefly with general merchandise. Brassel's Drug Store and the post office were there until Lower Town incorporated in 1871, at which time the post office moved to Lower Town and B. Gohmert was made postmaster. The blacksmith shop was located in Upper Town, but Mr. Fechner had the first smithy in Lower Town. Moritz Riedel erected the first grist mill. When the dam he had constructed to power the mill washed out, Mr. Riedel moved his mill to town and converted to

The first gin was built by Riedel on Smith Creek; however, it was never placed into operation because an overflow tore away the dam which was the source of power. In 1866 the gin was moved to Yorktown, and Joseph and Gustav Riedel operated it until it burned in 1874. It was soon rebuilt, run by C. Strieber, and burned again. Another early gin was operated by Strieber and Zedler, who also owned a wagon factory in connection with it.

August Kraege, Sr. was the first tanner in Yorktown. His tannery was located in west Yorktown. One of his employees, Robert Gohmert, learned the trade and afterwards bought the business from Mr. Kraege, who entered the general mercantile business with B.F. Gohmert.

C.W. Nau, who moved to Yorktown in 1864, went into business with Mr. Bauer. Located on the lower floor of a two-story house, the business was deeded to Mr. Nau's wife by her father, M. Riedel, Sr. The firm's name was C.W. Nau and Co. and handled merchandise and some hardware. Mr. Nau and his family lived upstairs. When the building became too small, Mr. Riedel and Mr. Nau constructed a new building, adding a drugstore, the only previous pharmacy having been operated by Dr. Schulze as a private pharmacy from his residence.

In 1870 Gohmert and Kraege founded a general merchandise business which later became the business of Kraege and Ladner. In about 1872 B. Gohmert also built a stone house on the west side of Coletto Creek which for many years was the seat of the post office.

On April 3, 1861, L. Schumacher opened his school with a beginning enrollment of fourteen students. In spite of the hardships of the Civil War, his school prospered, and by October, 1865, fifty students were enrolled. For twenty-seven years he continued to instruct the students of the Yorktown area, insisting upon a daily handshake with each student.

Materials for the school were difficult to obtain and they were expensive. A slate and a pencil were very precious and were handled with extreme care. If a slate were broken, the pieces were carefully saved and transformed into pencils. The fragments of pencils were placed into goose quills and used until they were entirely worn away. To lose a pencil or to break a slate was a gave offense. Composition books were manufactured at home by sewing together loose sheets of blue paper. In one school in DeWitt County there was but one reader which was known by the name of Waschlappen, (dish rag) used by all the class. Despite these lacks, the students were taught by professors from Germany whose encyclopedic knowledge and fantastic memories provided these pioneer students with knowledge which made them true scholars and lovers of litera-

Although many of the citizens disapproved, the town was incorporated in 1871.

Governor E.J. Davis appointed Robert C. Eckhardt mayor with F. Hoppe, F. Bauer, A. Kraege, F. Zedler, and Robert Gohmert as aldermen. During Eckhardt's administration the Fortschrittsverein built a bell tower adjoining the school house in which was placed a short chronicle of the city of Yorktown which recorded that F. Bauer, Wm. Eckhardt, and Chas. Strieber were entrusted with execution of the plan. The copper point and weather vane were presented by Dr. Schultz. Plumbing was done by Rudolph Gohmert and the woodwork was completed by L. Zuch and Poetter.

The total population in Yorktown in 1872 was 360. Average wages of carpenters were $1.75 to $2.00. Day laborers earned from 75 cents to a dollar a day. Flour cost $11.00 a barrel, and beef sold for 3½ to 4 cents a pound. Pork was 5 to 8 cents a pound, and Indian corn was worth $1.00 to $1.25 a barrel.

Henry Cook a former resident o Yorktown, recalled Yorktown as it was in 1876:

"Yorktown 65 years ago was a nice clean little city of several hundred inhabitants.

There were no churches in the city proper. There was a small Lutheran church on the outskirts of the east side, attended mostly by nearby country folks. Two miles east of the city was, and is today, a very fine Catholic church.

There were four saloons — Louis Lenz, Fritz Riedel, Hoppe and Duerr, and Heissigs with dance halls. Heissigs in Upper Town and Lenz's in Lower Town had theater stages.

There were two general stores — C.C. Eckhardt and Sons and Berthold Gohmert; two butcher shops — Jacob Grun and Noster and Kratz; one tannery — Gohmert; two saddle shops — Anton Metz and Louis Grun; one drug store — C. Nau and Co.; one brass band — Moritz Riedel's Kapelle; one doctor — Dr. Schulz; one tailor shop — Schneider Zuch; two wagon and buggy factories — Zedler and Zuch and the Gips and Heinze Co.; one cotton gin — Joe and Gus Riedel.

The city was populated mostly by Germans. There were only two American families — John Rutledge and Berry Wright. Later Dr. Wallace of Clinton moved to the thriving little city of Yorktown.

Of course, in every small town you find a few "populars" among the ladies. There were four — the Misses Anna Meyer, Malvina Heissig, Emma Stark, and Agnes Range. The writer claims he loved one of them as hard as a mule could kick down hill.

The leading young men of that day and time were Mike Stark, Fritz Kraege, Albert Meyer, Julius Hoff, and Robert Zuch.

I neglected to say there were two tinshops instead of one — the one mentioned above and the Ad. Strieber shop. Also one fine paint shop operated by Ed and Dave Kline of Houston."

In 1877 there was a great shortage of water, so William Eckhardt began boring a well on the edge of a bed in Yorktown Creek, explaining to his wondering companions that he was boring an artesian well from which the water would flow of its own accord. In spite of the disbelief, the artesian well at the crossing near Gohmerts was the result.

As life became somewhat easier and some leisure time became available, various organizations or Vereins were organized. One particularly beneficial group was the Schulverein, organized in 1884. It was an incorporated society which controlled the public schools of the city; and after the public funds were exhausted, it provided a private school until the ten months; session was completed. A fine new school building incorporating the most modern equipment at the cost of $2600 was provided for the students. Some of the following were listed as teachers in the Yorktown schools: Professors von Trenk, Rudolph Kleberg, R.J. Kleberg, T.J. Eichholz, Robert A. Plesants, L. Tampke, Judge Kilgore, and Professor Schmidt. By 1898, 143 students were enrolled in the school which boasted one of the finest libraries of English and German classics in the

Other groups banding together were the Sandwich Club, organized in 1894, and the U.T.D. Club, both social organizations. One of the largest and most enduring groups was the Lesezirkel which included nearly all of the principal families of Yorktown.

In 1886 the railroad came through Yorktown, which marked the beginning of Yorktown as a modern city. This same year a terrific storm which destroyed Indianola completely also incurred much damage in Yorktown on August 20, Witnesses recalled that the storm lasted for most of the evening hours. Many frame houses in Yorktown were damaged or destroyed, and rock houses such as the old C. Eckhardt and Sons store and the old Gohmert store were places of refuge for the children and women during the disturbance.

In 1892 Riedel's Opera House provided Yorktown with as fine an opera house as any town its size in Texas.

1897 saw the christening of the new Strieber Gin. This event was recorded in the Yorktown News of 1897:

From early in the morning until the hour of the ceremonies, people were coming in on the trains and by private conveyance from all adjoining counties. At least 1000 people witnessed the christening and the crowd on the street was nearly as large as ever.

At 4 o'clock the Ideal Band after a short parade of the principal streets halted at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Anton Wanier, brotherin-law and sister of Miss Galle and her "knights," Messrs. J.R. Farris, and Arthur Grun - wearing with unconcealed pride the badge of their office, conducted the young lade and her maids, Misses Lena Zedler and Nettie Mollenhauer, to their carriage. This carriage was certainly a thing of beauty if not a joy forever. It consisted of light running gear surmounted by an ample float and canopy, all richly and artistically decorated with the national colors. Gus Metz officiated as engineer of this resplendent car and his magnificent sorrels furnished the motive power.

The young ladies, having been safely seated, the band playing a lively air the while, the procession made its way down Main Street, across the creek and back the same street to the gin, the band leading.

Arrived at the gin, the procession halted and all listened with the most respectful silence and attention to Miss Galle's address, which was delivered from notes in a tone of silvery distinctness. The address was delivered in German and was quite lengthy, giving first a short history of Yorktown and its founders; then a history of the gin and its destruction by fire on more than one occasion only to rise after each vicissitude to assume a more substantial station among the enterprises of the town. She then spoke in the most respectful tones of the late Mr. Strieber and the numerous improvements that had been added to the gin while under his control.

She wished for his sons a continuation of the unparalleled prosperity and progress which thus far marked their management. In conclusion she spoke in English, modestly assuring her friends of her high appreciation of the compliment rendered in her selection as the one to formally start in motion the new engine.

At the conclusion of her address, Miss Galle and her maids were assisted to alight and escorted to the engine room where she turned the wheel and formally started the ponderous machinery. The band played one of the most thrilling selections and everything worked like a charm.

After the christening ceremonies were over, the crowd repaired to the Riedel Hall and were regaled with a few choice selections by the Ideal Band. Mr. Gus Lenz delighted the expectant audience with his matchelss rendition of a very difficult and classical song entitled The Palms, being accompanied on the piano by Professor Burgy.

Most appropriate and enjoyable was the culmination of the festal day in a magnificent ball at night. The spacious hall was probably never graced by a larger or more cultured assemblage than on this night. The Grand March, led by Miss Galle and Mr. Farris, was participated in by 44 couples and the seats around the hall and upstairs were full.

As an indication of the types of entertainment which prevailed at this period of time, the following excerpt from the November 11, 1897 Yorktown News is highly indicative:

The Mannerchor sang an appropriate song and the play began. English Spoken Here was the name of the piece presented but notwithstanding the significant title the attitudes and gestures of the actors were a great deal more intelligent to this writer than the conversation. The play was a one-act farce comedy and very ludicrous and laughable. The actors, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Schultz, Misses Ida Strieber and Martha Tietz, Mrs. Albert Zuch, and Messrs. Albert Fechner and George Wanier, performed their respective parts in a really meritorious manner.

After the conclusion of the play, throughout the remainder of the evening the Singing Club varied the monotony with an occasional song. The dance began soon after the theater and was continued until two or three o'clock in the morning.

One very novel and interesting feature of the entertainment was the skirt dance executed by Miss Nettie Thuem, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Thuem. This little girl is only 12 or 13 years old, but her matchless execution of the intricate figures of the dance was truly astonishing.

Later in the evening Mr. Gus Lenz favored the audience with one of his popular solos. The Lone Star String Band was on duty both for orchestra and dance music.

On December 7, 1897 the Woodmen presented an original play at Riedel's Hall. Rube Simons of Davy Joining the Woodmen was a presentation of the application, recommendation, election, and initiation of a country boy into the mysteries of Woodcraft. The second act, dealing with the initiation of the frightened candidate, was hilarious.

At the conclusion of the play, the ball opened and all the audience participated in the enjoyment of the music provided by the Lone Star Band.

Early in May, 1900, business men of Yorktown met with H. Hollingsworth of Gonzales, to initiate a subscription drive to raise runds to build an oil mill. The square belonging to C.J. Eckhardt and Sons, near the S.A.A.P. depot was selected as the site. Within ten days the following Yorktown citizens had subscribed the necessary $30,000.

H.B. Hollingsworth $5000, F. Kraege 5000, F. Riedel 1000, F. Dahme 1000, August Burow 1000, Emil Grun 1000, J. von Roeder 1000, Wm.Esthoff 1000 Wm. Eckhardt $5000, M. Riedel 2000, M. Stark 1000, Henry Borchers 1000, Jesse Kasprizik 1000, C.J. Eckhardt 1000, Theo Spies 1000, August Wetphal 500, B.R. Burow 500, L.A. Hohn 200, I.W. Griffin 100, P.C. Stark 100, J.S. Douglas 300, R.H. Eckhardt 200, L.F. Webb 100.

From these investors the following were chosen as officers and board of directors: W. Eckhardt, president; F. Kraege, vice president; J.B. Hollingsworth, manager; C.J. Eckhardt, secretary and treasurer; Wm. Eckhardt, F. Kraege, August Riedel, C.J. Eckhardt, M. Stark, F. Dahme, and J.B. Hollingsworth, directors.

Thus the history of the first fifty years of the city of Yorktown reveals steady growth. From its inception in 1848 with one family's building of a home, Yorktown had grown to a city with many churches, a variety of businesses, a highly-revered school system, numerous homes exhibiting many different types of architecture, cultural activities featuring music, theater, and dancing, and a healthy economic foundation. These early hard-working, dedicated pioneers had created a lasting memorial to their dreams, ideals and goals.

YORKTOWN'S POSTAL SERVICE

T132

Earliest postal service for Yorktown is recorded for 1851 when John A. King became postmaster. The Brassel's Drug Store, near the stage stop in Upper Town was the postoffice for several years before the incorporation of the town in 1871. Other postmasters during that time were: J. Kilgore, 1856; Matthias Kreisle, 1857; John A. King, 1858; William Stark, 1860; and Jacob Guggenheim, 1866.

The first postmaster after the incorporation was Frank B. Gohmert who moved the postoffice to his place of business, a stone house built in 1872 on the west side of the Coleto Creek. (This building once served as a sauerkraut factory and later, 1923-29, for third and fourth grade classes in school.)

When Moritz Riedel became postmaster he moved the postoffice to his drug store in the 100 block of East Main and William J. Stark, in 1910, moved it to his business at 149 East Main. While J.W. Hoff and Charles F. Hoff were postmasters in 1914 and 1915, respectively, the postoffice was situated in the 100 block of South Riedel Street. When Mrs. Ada Ladner became postmistress in 1922, the postoffice was housed in the Eckhardt Bank Building adjacant to the present museum building.

Lou Sloma became postmaster in 1934 and during his 29-year tenure in office, a brick building was dedicated at 106 East 4th Street for a new postoffice in 1957. Cecil Garner became postmaster in 1963; Dale Prescott in 1983 and postmistress Patricia Kaienr was appointed in 1989.

The one cent postal card now costs fifteen

THE YORKTOWN PUBLIC LIBRARY

First attempts in 1934 to organize a public library in Yorktown, finally materialized in 1938 with help from the WPA and the Times Study Club, of which Mrs. R.H. Kraege was president. The library was first housed in the second floor of the old City Hall with Mrs. T.L. Allen as the librarian.

In 1939 the Civic Club, with assistance from the State Library Extension Service, reorganized the library. However, with the start of World War II the library was closed and the books stored in the basement of City Hall.

In 1943 the Yorktown Civic Club reorganized and reopened the library and moved it to a room beneath the gazebo in City Park. This area was enlarged to 1,000 square feet in 1968.

The library became a member of the South Texas Library System in 1977 and was designated a Texas Heritage Resource Center in 1982. when more space was needed for the 10,000 books, the contents of the library were moved temporarily to rooms in the new City Hall in 1985, and the old building was dismantled. It took a great community effort to match the $100,000 grant from the Texas State Library and Archives Commission. Dedication of the new 5,000 square foot brick facility on the same site as the old one, was held on December 7, 1986 at 2:30. The program follows: Welcome by Mayor George Klein; Presentation of Flags by Boy Scout Troop 250; Pledge of Allegiance led by Luellen Smiley, Chairman of the Library Board; Invocation by Pastor Paul Ziese, Austin, Texas, former Library Board Chairman; Recognition of Guests by Mayor George Klein; Address by Ms. Mary Thames Bundy, Coordinator of the South Texas Library System; Presentations included a U.S. Flag and flagpole by Mr. Richard F. Voyer in honor of Dr. Carl Nau; a Sesquicentennial Flag by the Sesquicentennial Committee; a Texas Flag (outdoor) by State Representative Phyllis Robinson; a Texas Flag (indoor), by Mrs. L.C. Sievers for the Yorktown VFW and its Auxiliary; and a cash gift by the First National Bank of Yorktown.

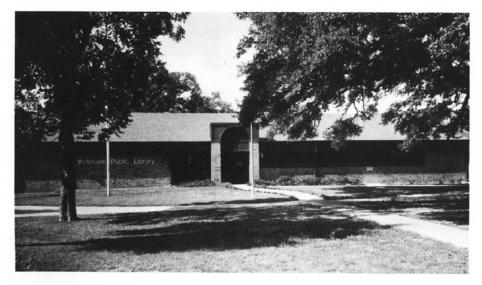

Dedication lines were read by Mayor Klein and Comments were given by Michael Ehrlich, president of the Yorktown Chamber of Commerce; the Keys were presented by Alvarez and Associates and Associated Engineers and Surveyors representatives; the Benediction was given by Mrs. Jean Striedel, Chairman of the Friends of the Library; the ribbon was cut by Mrs. Kurt Hartmann, Librarian; A donor Plaque in memory of Pastor Kurt Hartmann, Sesquicentennial Committee Chairman, was unveiled by Mrs. Dorothy Clements for the committee. Open house and serving of light refreshments followed.

City Council Members in addition to Mayor Klein were Leroy Buelter, Leslie Flessner, Cecil Garner, Lee Roy Griffin, Jr., Robert Grunewald and City Secretary Milton Ledwig. Friends of the Library officers were: Jean Striedel, chairman, Judy Wilder, vice-chairman; Ruby Lee Braun, treasurer and Frances Hartmann, secretary. The Library Fund Raising Committee was Lou Gips, chairman; Eva Frisbie, Wilfred Lamprecht, Ann Schendel, Margaret Weldon and Frances Hartmann. Library Board Members were: Luellen Smiley, chairman; Lorene Migura, secretary; Wilfred Lamprecht, Ann Schendel, Patty Strieber, Betsy Weischwill and Mark Landrum.

Librarians through the years in addition to Mrs. Allene and Mrs. Hartmann include: Mesdames Margaret Weldon, Raymond Meyer, Floyd Reese, Ralph Wofford, Joyce Davis, Toby Boldt, Inge Gohlke and Miss Marguerite Riedel. Luellen Smiley became librarian on June 1, 1988 and Jean Striedel assistant librarian in July 1989.

In its fifty years the library has not only grown in size but also in additional service to the community. While books and magazines were the earlier basics, now also movies, videos, computer and microfilm materials are available to the public. More than a dozen groups use the meeting room alone on a regular basis. The library is a valuable resource center for the community.

Yorktown Memorial Hospital, 1951-1986.

YORKTOWN'S DOCTORS AND HEALTH FACILITIES

Yorktown's first hospital owned by Dr. G.W. Allen stood near Fourth and Riedel Streets. Dr. B.J. Nowierski and Dr. Robert Westphal were among other physicians practicing there. To accommodate a growing number of patients, Dr. Allen built a modern two-story hospital at 439 E. Main Street. In the late 1950's this was made into the Laster Nursing home with Mrs. Mayne Laster as administrator. On January 1, 1979 the building became the Hygeia Health Retreat, stressing diet and life style, with Dr.

Ralph Cinque as administrator.

The Yorktown Memorial Hospital, established with local and government funds in 1951 at 728 West Main, was a 27-bed health care facility operated by the Felician Sisters for thirty-five years. It served the area to the utmost until a decline in occupancy and inadequate Medicare payments caused severe financial distress which led to the closing of the facility on November 30, 1986. The last patient to use the hospital was Ruth Hartmann Brady with Dr. John Barth and nurses Josie Styra and Shirley Schultz in attendance. Dr. Barth has been a family practitioner here since 1950 and his son, Dr. Gordon Barth, came to Yorktown in 1983, and is now Yorktown's leading physician. Other long-time resident doctors were Dr. Leon Nowierski, Dr. G.W. Cross (a brother-in-law to Dr. G.W. Allen) and Dr. Corinne Westphal, an ophthamologist, who practiced here from 1934 to 74. Her father Dr. Robert Westphal ministered to the sick from 1902 to 1916 and her brother Dr. Darwin Westphal, served from his office in the Riedel Building from 1934 to 1941.

The Memorial Hospital stood vacant until 1989 when it was sold to the Skyline 24-Hour Club, Inc. of Travis County. Presently it is the Skyline Alcohol and Drug Treatment Center with Lee and Kay Tillman as administrators.

For a number of years Dr. Herman Eckhardt owned a small hospital at 215 N. Range Street adjacent to his spacious (1914) two-story home at 207 N. Range. During the 1960's to '80's Dr. Marvin Gohlke, another local physician, and his family lived in this house while he used several rooms for his office.

On November 12, 1969 at 670 West Fourth Street, the Yorktown Manor 92-bed nursing home was established by Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Ploeger. It is of brick construction and the present owner is the Diversicare Corporation of America. The facility has eighty employees with Mrs. Lyndal Patillo as administrator.

YORKTOWN'S SCHOOLS

T136

The first attempt to establish a school in Yorktown came in 1853 when the Masonic Lodge, Coleto No. 124, received a memorial requesting that the lodge take action in the formation of a school. On December 19, 1853, a Board of Trustees was elected, including Robert Kleberg, D.B. Friar, G.M. Reese, L.D. Smith, John Choat, E.M. Edwards, M.J. Pleasants, R.E. Williams and Rev. J.E. Ferguson. The school, opened on the lower floor of the lodge hall in Upper Town, was referred to as the C.L. Academy. In 1855 a separate school building was erected, costing $324. G. Fuchs was the first teacher.

Rev. A. Holzinger of the Lutheran Church established a private school which continued until the church was disbanded as a result of the Civil War. On April 2, 1861, L. Schumacher opened his school beginning with fourteen pupils. Despite the hardships of the war, his school prospered and in October 1865, he had fifty pupils enrolled. During the 27 years of his teaching career in Yorktown, nearly everyone in the town and surrounding area had been one of his pupils. In observance of his 25th year of teaching, his pupils honored him with a "torchlight procession" and the mayor publicly thanked him for the good he had done. He died two years later at age 80 and was remembered as the kindly old gentleman who insisted on shaking hands with class members each morning, but who disliked improperly done copy work. The early school stressed arithmetic, spelling and formal grammar.

In 1870 the Catholic Church opened the Holy Cross School, taught by Sisters of the Immaculate Conception. A new school building was constructed in 1898 which was replaced by a larger one in 1947. The school was in operation for nearly a hundred years, closing in June 1969.

A private schoolhouse, costing $525, was constructed in 1866. Some of the teachers in the following years were: Profs. Von Trenk, Lud. Kleberg, R.J. Kleberg, William Eicholz, Robert A. Pleasants, L. Tamke, Judge Kilgore, Prof. Schmidt, A.B. Erb, Miss Hedwig Nau, O. Mundt, Max Bernstein and in 1898 the head of the school was Prof. J.L. Boal. He added Latin, Algebra and Plane Geometry to the curriculum. Most courses were taught in German and it was also taught as a language.

The first public school, established in 1878, chartered by the state, was known as Yorktown Normal. It stood just north of the City Park, opposite the Wm. Metz home. School was held for ten months: The first four months were a pay school with tuition from $1 to $2.50. During the remaining free months beginning with February 1, attendance increased about 25%. Children ages six to eighteen years were assigned to one of the four rooms in the school, according to age and number of years in school.

In 1884 a new schoolhouse, designed by Wm. Eckhardt and L.A. Hohn was completed, with modern desks and seats. When Yorktown became an independent school district in 1902 the board of trustees elected were: L.A. Hohn, August Riedel, F. Kraege, Gus Schultz, George Wanier, C.J. Eckhardt and Ernest Welch. The superintendent was T.A. Gullett.

Need for more room resulted in the building in 1910 of a modern two-story brick building complete with classrooms, offices and auditorium with a stage and in 1929 a new brick high school. Other facilities added were an Ag. shop, administration offices, library, auto mechanics shop, elementary school, gym, lunch room, homemaking cottage, band hall, playtorium, and the Edgar L.L. Mueller Baseball Field. The Hubert L. Menn Science Building, added in 1986, honors Mr. Menn, who retired from teaching science and mathematics in 1963 after 27 years of service to the high school.

From 1910 to the present date, the superintendents of the Yorktown Public Schools were: N. Wilson; K.A. Jones; M.V. Peterson; H.A. Bagley; W.B. Connell; John Stormont; George W. Kelly; R.M. Harrison; A.E. Teltschik; J.D. Boone; Ben Stricklin; James Keese, Dale, Pitts and W. Frank Stephenson.

Pupil enrollment in February 1990 is 749.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

T137

First Baptist Church

The following nine charter members organized the First Baptist Church on July 7, 1935: Mrs. C.L. Smart, Mrs. R.N. Kraege and sons, Roland and Carter, Mrs. E.W. Sunday, Mrs. L.M. Lytton, Mrs. Frank Salley and Mr. and Mrs. Helbider. They met on the Yorktown Methodist Church property. Later services were held in the old Masonic Hall on North Hoppe Street, with Rev. F.S. Brown of Runge as part-time pastor, to be succeeded in January, 1941, by J.H. Treadwell.

Little progress was made the first twelve years, but at a revival in October 1939, ten more adults became members. Finances were another problem so that the pastor's salary in 1942 was only $10 per month with the provision that he could receive several dollars more if available. After Rev. Treadwell's resignation in 1943, he was succeeded by Bro. Bryan Teague, who served the 14 resident members until 1945. Former army chaplain Fred Delk, the church's first full-time pastor, who came in 1945 and served until 1947, helped the church to "move toward acquisition of a church home." The congregation purchased Mrs. Clarence Smith's home at Main and Nau Streets for $8500. At this time the State Mission Board paid $100 per month for the pastor's salary which was to be matched by the congregation.

After Pastor Delk's resignation, Rev. F.E. Kirchner became the pastor in September 1947. In spite of continued financial shortages, the church still supported missionary work and continued to grow. By 1948 the Sunday School had an enrollment of 48 and the first Vacation Bible School was held. Leon Adudell was the pastor from November, 1951 to May 1954. Through the diligent work of the building committee of G.E. Smith, Mrs. R.H. Kraege, Dr. David Towery and Louis Staggs, and the cooperation of the members, ground breaking for a church building was held on March 1, 1953. Joe Roth obtained donations of cement and steel; Bill Janssen completed the building; Herman Eckhardt and his son, Buddy, donated the painting of the interior and G.M. Smith built the pulpit. Seats were obtained from the old York Theater; R.F. Allen provided free legal services and Mrs. R.H. Kraege donated a piano. The church was dedicated on November 14, 1953.

On June 15, 1954, Rev. Chandler became the minister and in 1955 the church purchased an old school cafeteria, which after remodeling still serves as an educational building. Feeling the need for more seminary training, Bro. Chandler resigned in 1955 and was succeeded by Bro. Robert Latham that same year. In May 1957, 115 new pews were installed and are still in use. Bro. Latham was followed in December, 1957, by Rev. Cornelius. During his pastorate, the educational building was remodeled and a landscape painting by Mrs. Mae Barbee was placed behind the baptistry. Bro. Cornelius resigned in 1959 and was succeeded by Keith Massey who resigned in 1962. Bro. Jodie Cunningham served only a year and resigned to get more seminary training. Sunday School enrollment had climbed to 99 by this time. Rev. J. Ray McVoy served from 1963 to 1970, when he retired from full-time pastoring. Bro. Jesse Lundsford, was interim pastor until July 1971, when Rev. Jimmy Davis came to the church and served until 1979. Dr. Jack Green was interim pastor until October 1979. At that time Bro. Joe Orr, a recent graduate of the seminary, accepted the call of the congregation and was ordained in the local church. In 1985 the church purchased a new parsonage and converted the former one into Sunday School rooms.

In October, 1986, Brother Joe resigned to accept a call to the First Baptist Church in Bertram. Several interim pastors helped during the vacancy until Bro. Randy Marshall became pastor in May 1986. He accepted a call to the Baptist Church in Stockdale on January 1, 1990, and the congregation is again served by an interim pastor, Bill Stockton from Goliad.

CHURCH OF CHRIST

Church of Christ

Churches were established in Victoria, Yorktown, Goliad and Beeville. At Victoria, a small congregation under the direction of Elder James Lovelady in May 1860 requested a good preacher to come to this "large and vacant field". Three years later, Evangelist A.P.H. Jordan organized a "frontier or border congregation" in Yorktown. The Yorktown church experienced an amazingly rapid growth. Within four years, it numbered about two hundred and far outstripped "the sects of the region".

In 1949 the Central Church of Christ in Victoria picked up the challenges to re-establish a "border congregation" in Yorktown. Under the eldership of Brothers Dave Ponton, Noah W. Crisp, and J.J. Ray they provided the financial support and help in rebuilding the church for Yorktown. They sponsored the hiring of a very fine young evangelist, Brother Gary Adams for one year. Accompanied by his wife, he later spent many years as a missionary in Belgium.

The members first met in Mrs. Dedear's home until a barracks building was moved from Victoria to the lot next to her home. At a minimal cost she sold this lot to the church, and this is the same place where the church still meets, at 205 North Riedel. Some of the early families who were active in building and supplying the needs of the church were: Bill Morris, G.W. Vollmering, Max and Frank Boldt, Mrs Brown from Nordheim also attended regularly.

Through these many years there have been many wonderful Christians in all walks of life who have met and worshipped in this small church. There have been farmers, ranchers, mechanics, oil field workers, business men, teachers, preachers, doctors, bankers, and many other types of workers who have shared their talents and love with their fellow man in trying to make this a better community in which to live. Many of these have moved due to their needs to make a living.

Some of the men who have served as ministers during this time are: Gary Adams, Ronnie Pope, Allen Vann, James Garner, J.L. Wright (5 years), James Gray, D.C. Jennings, Clifton Crisp, (13 years), Bubba Phillips, Roy Clements (1977-1984). In 1989 the elders now in service are: G.W. Vollmering, Leland Ahrens, and Al Goodman, who is also serving as minister.

FIRST UNITED METHODIST CHURCH

The First United Methodist Church and Annex

A small Methodist congregation was organized in Yorktown in 1854. For some time they met in the Peter Metz home and in other private homes. Supply pastors served the congregation. The trustees were: Henry Hardt, Louis Rhinehardt, F.R. Gohlke, Peter Metz and Adolph Rabke. Rev. August Tampke, who served Yorktown and Goliad Mission Churches, received a salary from Yorktown of ten dollars a year plus farm produce. By 1877 Yorktown had 26 members. After the Rabke Methodist Church was built in 1894, it and the Yorktown church interchanged Youth activities and Sunday School until 1984.

The Yorktown Methodist Episcopal Church

was formally organized on October 5, 1919 with 21 charter members. Meetings on the fourth Sunday of each month, were held on the upper floor of the Yorktown City Hall and the lower floor of the Masonic Hall. In 1922 the church built a tabernacle, a framed, and shingled building with deep sawdust floor, capable of holding 400 people. when in 1928, land between Fifth and Sixth Streets on Riedel was purchased from M.G. Eckhardt, the tabernacle was torn down and the lumber was used in the construction of a new brick church was was completed in 1929. Mr. H.R. Gohlke was the contractor for this project. In 1948 the church purchased a parsonage on Eckhardt Street which was occupied by the first full-time pastor, Rev. George J. Barth in 1953. During this time the following items were donated to the church: a pulpit Bible from Mr. and Mrs. Otto Frisbie, a communion rail and lectern from Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Koch, a piano in memory of Mrs. G.W. Cross and the Worship Center in memory of Mr. C.G. Beken. By January 27, 1957 a new educational building was dedicated. Since the church found it difficult to support a full-time pastor in the late 60's, some of them lived in Runge. Nevertheless, the church always managed to send financial aid to the mission work, attend to upkeep of the property and to further the spiritual life of the church. After selling the Eckhardt Street parsonage, the church purchased the present brick parsonage on Sixth Street from Mrs. Lucille Haun in 1975. Middleton D. Morehead, a lay minister, was the first occupant. In 1982 a new fellowship hall was added to the church, the old educational building was rearranged to house four classrooms, a nursery and the pastor's study and the sanctuary was renovated with wall to wall carpeting, new pews, altar rail and altar furniture, all donated.

Pastors of the church were: O.W. Benold (1919-1921), G.C. Baumgarten (1921-23), L.U. Spellman (1923-). T. Miller (1923-24), E.A. Potts (1924-26), B.G. Regan (1926-27), E.W. Dechert (1927-29), R.K. FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

First Presbyterian Church

The Presbyterian Church in Yorktown began formally in 1896 when the Masonic Lodge allowed the church to use the lower story of the lodge. Rev. A.H.P. McCurdy of Cuero held the first service in the lodge on June 2, 1896. Before that time services had been conducted at the home of Dr. John Atkinson. It has been suggested that the Presbyterian Church was started because there was no church service in English in Yorktown at the time. The Roman Catholics used Latin and the Lutherans German.

The first church building was built in 1897 on a lot on Third Street. The lot cost $100 which was donated by Mrs. Henrietta King. Debts for building costs were paid by donations and various fund raising projects, including rummage sales.

"That first church", Mrs. Menn says "was just like all the little first churches — a little rectangular building with a cupola and a bell on it." Mrs. Ada Ladner played the organ for the first church and continued as the organist until the 1950's or '60's.

A succession of supply ministers and students from the Theological Seminary in Austin served the early church. Rev. C.H. Spence was installed as the first resident minister on May 19, 1911. A manse was built for him on Eckhardt Street.

Mr. J.G. Kerlick was one of the Sunday School teachers and he always tried to persuade the young people to stay for church by keeping them overtime in Sunday School. Another teacher Mrs. William Mae Menn had a cardboard box shaped like a little green church into which the children put their coins in order that the church might grow and grow.

The congregation soon outgrew the old building. In 1924 Mr. and Mrs. John Alford of Topeka, Kansas donated a lot for a new church. Rev. McCurdy returned on September 13, 1925 to hold the first service in the new building. The church still meets in this building.

The Alfords also donated pulpit furniture, pews and a bell. It was 1935 when the bell tower was finally built by the J.G. Kerlicks in memory of their son, J.G. Junior.

Sunday School in the basement of the new church was not confined to the "studying the catechism and repeating it". There were fun projects like constructing a scale model of the Tabernacle. This was many weeks in progress.

Money was in short supply, and the Sunday School paid its own way by selling hamburgers, sandwiches, soda water and watermelons. The present manse was constructed in 1947 and in 1953 the church was redecorated and stained glass windows were added. The educational building was added to the church property in 1957.

Fourteen resident ministers have served the church: C.H. Spence (1911-12), R.E. Porterfield (1913-12), J.H. Freeland (1922-29), C.I. Kelly (1929-36), James Johnson (1935-41), F.E. King (1942-45), C.M. Campbell (1947-57), W. Schuetter (1958-63), G. Matthews (1964-66), H. Travis (1967-73), T. Bailey (1974-76), L. Solomon (1976-81), M. Stoub (1982-86), Milton Bierschwale (1986-89).

HOLY CROSS CATHOLIC CHURCH

T141

Holy Cross Catholic Church

In 1867, ten years after the first Polish families came to Yorktown, the Church of the Immaculate Conception was built. It was a log building capable of accommodating about fifty people.

In 1886 the church was damaged by a hurricane. It was rebuilt in 1887 and enlarged to a length of ninety feet. In 1901 a second addition was made and the main altar was replaced by a nicer one.

There have been many pastors. The first was Father John Frydrychowicz, who served the parish until 1872. He was followed by Father Adolph Snigurski, who served from 1872 to 1874, T. Kututowicz, Joseph Arzynski, F. Zwiardowski, F. Smelcer, A. Heinke, Gerlach, then Hagel served successively until 1888. Then came Father Magott (1888-92), Fr. J. Wolenczewica (1892-97) and Fr. Thomas Moczygemba (1897-1912). When Father Moczygemba arrived, he found 100 Polish, 35 Bohemian and a few German families.

There are tales of Fr. Moczygemba's disciplinary accomplishments. It was said that before his time, some found it necessary to leave the church during the sermon, giving various reasons—"Horses were restless," and so on. "But when Father Tom took the pulpit, even the jackasses listened."

On the night of April 7, 1914, the Church of the Immaculate Conception burned to the ground. Though it was said that even the bells melted, by some miracle the cross atop the steeple and two statues on the face of the church survived the fire. The cross is on the present church steeple.

A new red brick church was built and the cornerstone was blessed on September 14, 1915. The church was renamed "Holy Cross Church" and is situated on a hill about two miles east of the city of Yorktown.

The pastors in 1988 were Fr. Alphonse Padalecki, of Sweet Home, Texas and Fr. Gustavo Bedoya, of Columbia, S.A.

ST. PAUL EV. LUTHERAN CHURCH -YORKTOWN

T142

St. Paul Ev. Lutheran Church

The first German Methodist Circuit Rider, Pastor Korte, came to the Yorktown area as early as 1848. He found opposition to any church activities being started in Yorktown. Many of the early settlers were openly hostile to any church. Many of the early settlers in the community were Rationalists of self-styled "Free Thinkers" who had left Germany and France in order to get away from the influence of the established State Church.

The first Lutheran Pastor to preach here, the Rev. Haerdtle, began to preach in private homes from 1851-1853. He was followed by Rev. A. Sager of Coleto, 1953-1861. In 1861, the Rev. A. Holzinger, Field Man for First Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Texas, came here to survey the field and to make recommendations concerning further developments. While Rev. Holzinger was in charge of the newly organized Lutheran Church, he also organized the first school in Yorktown and served the public as teacher.

By 1865, pastor Holzinger had to abandon the work in Yorktown because the bulk of his people had moved away. Rev. Schaeg of Meyersville, occasionally provided preaching and later the Rev. A. Holzinger was pastor at Meyersville and preached in Yorktown on occasion. Next came pastor M. Oehler from Meyersville to help with services.

Rev. M. Oehler organized the first St. Paul Lutheran Church on April 21, 1872 in the upstairs of the Public School in Yorktown.

The first church building, 30 by 60 feet, was built on land donated by Mr. and Mrs. C.W. Nau at a cost of $3,000.00. Willie Schorlemmer's grandfather hammered the ball for the bell which served not only the first church but is also hanging in the present church.

In 1930 the congregation contracted for a new church at a cost of $80,000.00. It took the congregation until 1947 to retire the debt.

In 1949, the Buesing school house was bought for $1,400.00 and placed east and toward the back of the church to alleviate the congested condition of the Sunday School which was overcrowding the basement of the church.

In 1957, the building committee was given the authority to call for and accept the bid of a contractor and, thus, began the actual construction of the Educational-Recreational Building.

Pastors who have served were: Rev. H.A. Lettermann (1872-1881), Rev. A. Falkenburg (1882-1893), Rev. J.K. Poch (1894-1921), Rev. E.A. Sagebiel (1921-1928), Rev. C.G. Hankammer (1928-1952), Rev. Alvin H. Bohls (1953-1960), Rev. Walter C. Probst, Jr. (1960-1966), Rev. Robert Cordes (1966-1975), Rev. Leroy Deans (1975-1978), Rev. Paul Ziese (1978-1984), Rev. Lynn Ziese (1978-1983), Rev. Richard Garbus (1984-1988), Rev. David A. Heidtke (1985-), Rev. James Pearson (1989-), Rev. Harold Tesch (Visitation Pastor) (1985-). Interim Pastors who have served the Congregation were Rev. William Feller, and Rev. Kurt C. Hartmann.

THE OPEN BIBLE BAPTIST CHURCH OF YORKTOWN, TEXAS

T143

The Open Bible Baptist Church.

The "Open Bible Baptist Church' began in the year 1977, when a group of believers began meeting together in homes for weekly Bible studies.

With the supervision of Bro. Bill Patterson, from Baptist Mid-Missions, on November 3, 1977, they elected officers for the purpose of starting a church. The Fellowship was called "Bible Baptist Fellowship." The first Sunday services were held in the home of Lloyd and Ida Blackburn. The first officers were: Scott Hay—Chairman, Pete Grantham—Vice Chairman and Ida Blackburn—Secretary/Treasurer.

On December 8, 1977, Bro. Robert Cooley, a home-missionary under Baptist Mid-Missions, was called as their first Pastor. The church began meeting in the Old Community Bank Building and continued meeting there for several months. On March 2, 1978, the name was changed to "Open Bible Baptist Church" and the church voted to rent the old "Barbee Hatchery Building" located on Highway 72 at FM 237. After much clean-up, in May, 1978, the church began holding regular services at this new location.

On June 18, 1979, a certificate of Incorporation was granted to the Open Bible Church of Yorktown, Texas by the Secretary of State.

The church wanted to own its own property and on November 4, 1979, the congregation voted to buy the property on Hwy. 72 at FM 237. Many improvements have been made and the church was able to pay for the property in January, 1990.

The present pastor, Bro. Jack Blackwell, began pastoring in November, 1985.

THE YORKTOWN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

T144

The 1912 Business Men's Club with Hugo Junker president was the forerunner of the Yorktown Chamber of Commerce, organized in 1918. Rev. C.H. Spence was the first president and Paul Schmidt served continuously as its secretary until 1955. The purpose of the organization is to promote the city — its businesses, industries, products, public facilities and surroundings. One way to carry out this was through the annual Little World's Fair which began in 1922. The Yorktown Fair Association, organized in 1920 to promote the fair, had Gus Nau as Grand Chairman. Caravans of interested citizens advertised the fairs in neighboring and far-away cities. Once the High School band got to broadcast from San Antonio's radio Station WOAI for publicity.

The main events of the fairs included a parade, rodeo, dances, a carnival and exhibits in long exhibit halls of livestock, agricultural products, arts and crafts, pantry goods and some commercial products. The fairs brought people closer together and boosted community spirit. The last fair was held in 1948. Grand Chairmen of the fairs in addition to Gus Nau were Wm. von Roeder, W.E. Metz, A.A. Ladner, Herman Mollenhouer, E.G. Schiwetz, A.J. Braunig, Walter Reifschlager, W.F. Stuermer, Charles F. Hoff, W.O. Gohlke, Duffie McGee, Wilfred Riedel, Raymond Simecek, Joe W. Gras, Charles Bauch, Felix Schorlemmer, Gene Schwietz and Jesse Strieber.

In 1958 the annual Western Days celebrations were begun. These included choosing a queen and her court, a parade, a carnival, street dancing, music, food, arts and crafts booths, auctions and contests. In recent years the Chamber of Commerce honored its Outstanding Citizens of the Year to be parade marshals. These were in 1984, Marcellus Weischwill and Deloris Sievers; in 1985, Gene Czaja and Pastor Kurt Hartmann; in 1986, John Koopmann and Milton Ledwig; in 1987, Arthur Goehring, Sr., and Milton Jasek. In 1987 Larry Vasbinder was named Outstanding Farmer-Rancher. In 1988, Dr. John Barth was the Outstanding Citizen and Edward Roeder the Outstanding Farmer-Rancher.

The Chamber helped the City observe its Jubilee in 1923 and its Centennial in 1948 with large celebrations and elaborate historical pageants. For the Texas Sesquicentennial, Yorktown found a "sister city" in Yorktown, Australia and feted its mayor and his wife (Mr. and Mrs. George Sherriff) at the annual Chamber banquet in 1985. The Chamber annually sponsors a Springfest, observes Memorial Day in cooperation with the VFW and promotes the Christmas Sale Days. Just recently the organization gained publicity at the Guadalupe Valley Days at the San Antonio Stock Show with pictorial displays of Yorktown and in cooperation with the Industrial Foundation entered pictures and information about this area in the 1990 Golden Crescent Magazine which is available in all places welcoming tourists to Texas. Beautification of the City Park is the Chamber's most recent project.

YORKTOWN'S PRODUCTS

Tommie Nuinez displaying one of her "brush" Brahmans.

The early settlers of Yorktown found that the area had an abundant supply of deer, other wild game and fish for food. The clear Coleto Creek supplied water for all the needs of man and beast. Dewberries grew in the wild and gardens produced potatoes and other vegetables. Some of the first products from the fields, plowed with oxen, were corn and cotton. As more families came and the area developed, cotton gins and grist mills for crushing the grains, were built, and later a cotton oil mill and grain elevators were established. Freight wagons took loads of potatoes to San Antonio.

Before the railroad came in 1886 and cattle drives helped get many local longhorns and other bovines to the markets in Kansas. Tanneries in Yorktown prepared the 10¢-a-poundhides to be made into saddles, chaps, shoes, belts, etc. In the early 1900's Yorktown became known as "Krauttown" because the farmers brought many wagonloads of cabbages to be shipped out by rail. An 1897-'98 report shows that 5,200 bales of cotton at 5¢ per pound and 40 carloads of cattle at 5¢ to 10¢ per pound were also shipped. C.W. Gohmert and F. Kraege shipped about 2,600 turkeys, 5,500 chickens and 10,000 dozens of eggs. Another report from a 1912 Yorktown News lists a great increase in the shipments: 16 cars of eggs, 50 cars of hogs, 17 cars of onions, 10 cars of cabbages, 2 cars of tomatoes, 78 cars of potatoes, 5 cars of live chickens, 286 cars of cattle, 11 cars of dressed turkeys, 12,752 bales of cotton and 10,000 pounds of butter.

Oil and gas discoveries in the area began in the 1930's and continued through '60's and 70's, but declined somewhat in the 1980's. For a time flax was grown on a trial basis, but the crops were not productive enough to continue growing it. Many ranches of Hereford, Brahman, Holstein, Guernsey, Angus and other cattle breeds add color to the Yorktown countryside.

Perhaps the best summary of Yorktown's products is from the 1990 Golden Crescent Magazine:

"Beef cattle ranching, cattle feeding and dairying, as well as poultry, sheep and hogs, are major contributors to the region's economy. Equally, diversified farming is part of the area's agricultural industry, making Yorktown a center for feed mills, grain storage and other operations. Principal crops are wheat, grain, sorghums, corn, peanuts and melons. Chief resources are oil, uranium, gas, sand, and gravel. Major oil and gas discoveries have made Yorktown a natural center for petroleum interests and allied operations."

In addition to the products of the land, Yorktown has also produced statesmen, soldiers, doctors, lawyers, nurses, teachers, pastors, engineers, electricians, musicians, vocalists, housewives, druggists, blacksmiths, teamsters, merchants, postmasters, seamstresses, cooks, morticians, beauticians, bankers, saloon keepers, lapidermists, carpenters, plumbers, farmers, mechanics, actors, authors and artists, just to name a few!

Yes, Yorktown was and still is a productive, progressive "Little City with big city ways!"

YORKTOWN'S FIRST HARVEST FEAST

T146

Great preparations were made by September of 1912 for Yorktown's first Harvest Feast (Emtefest) to be held November 18, 19 and 20. The Business Club formulated the plans by appointing R.J. Jersig, Henry Hohn and Paul Schmidt, secretary, a committee "to solicit subscriptions from the business men and citizens of Yorktown. Each firm was pro rated according to its wealth and name of business. In the majority of cases, the business men put up their pro rata. Suffice it to be said, however, that the committee met with unprecedented success and that the people of Yorktown amply manifested their enthusiasm and progressiveness. The committee expects to obtain $1500."

This was to be the most elaborate and most attractive feast every given in the boundary of Yorktown. There had been smaller and anniversary celebrations, Mexican festivals and German days. The greatest attraction was described in a 1912 Yorktown News: "Our greatest attraction will be the aeroplane flights. We want all people to understand that this will not be a petty balloon flight nor a halfway airship ascension. This is going to be a guaranteed aeroplane flight and all people will have the opportunity to see the aviator encircle the city in his flying machine. To see an aeroplane hundreds of feet above our heads, soaring like a huge bird, defying gusts and perhaps, making graceful, and awe inspiring ascents and descents will alone be worth coming here! It is our intention to engage the services of one of the most daring aviators in Texas. To do this we must guarantee him three hundred dollars, ($300).

To publicize the feast, fourteen automobiles (luxuries in those days) were taken on a 125-mile tour to surrounding areas including Nordheim, Charco, Dobskyville, Weesatche, Weser, Goliad, Meyersville, Cuero, Westhoff, Smiley, Nixon, and Gillett. The accompanying Ideal Band striking up its "oompah" tunes created a great deal of enthusiasm.

The stock, agricultural, and handwork exhibits needed sheds and pens that also required some of the $1500 to be built. These stood along the east side of the park fence. Prizes went to the best horses, mules, cows, turkeys, chickens, hogs, corn, handwork, etc. Other attractions were a wrestling match between Yorktown's Paul E. Kardow (whose shoulders had never been pinned) and Yoakum's Hancock; a football game between Cuero and Yorktown High Schools and a children's day featuring potato, foot and barrel races, and other contests.

The business men had to guarantee one hundred dollars for the high-class dramatic company and its fine band to perform on the vacant block on the west side of the park fence. The Southwestern Novelty Company with its many "skill" booths occupied the south side of the park fence as far as the postoffice building.

Mr. J.R. Evans, manager of the Light and Ice Plant, had elaborate displays of electrical fixtures such as electrical stoves, irons, lights, etc. Flashers were strung from the end of the park fence to the top of the water tower standing near the park fence and to the right of the old firestation.

The parade was another great feature with its decorated floats, vehicles, buggies and autos. These represented cowboys, cowgirls, the firemen, lodges, clubs, organizations, football team, businesses, etc.

An elaborate ball was held at the Riedel Opera House honoring the Harvest Feast Queen, Miss Annie Heinrich.

Harvest Feasts were held regularly until 1920 when they were called the Yorktown Fair and in 1922 The Little World's Fair and more recently Western Days!

FRIENDS OF THE YORKTOWN PUBLIC LIBRARY

T147

The Friends of the Yorktown Public Library were organized January 19, 1967 with Mr. Sam Suhler as guest speaker. City attorney Robert B. Eyhorn prepared a charter for the

Yorktown's "Gazebo" Library 1968-1985

"Yorktown Friends", submitted it to the Secretary of State for approval in June and in October it was approved. By November the group had already raised a hundred dollars which were given to the library board to purchase items for the library. In 1970 the Friends' chairman, Tommy Haley, was invited to attend library board meetings. By 1976 the board had furnished the Friends a list of needs which included shelving, filing cabinets, a book cart and a goal of 10,000 books. A book drive by the high school student council helped in meeting the book goal.

Through the years the Friends have sponsored fund raising projects of book and bake sales, country stores, bazaars, concession stands and so on. These funds were used to provide the library with furnishings, equipment, books and other needs. A big project in which they assisted in 1985 was the moving of books and equipment from the old library into the temporary space in the new city hall, and upon completion of the new library in 1986, helped again in carrying books and equipment to the new quarters. Boy Scout Dave Metting organized the latter move.

As early as 1973 the Friends sponsored a float entry for the October Western Days parade. This one featured children dressed as storybook characters. Another entry carried a replica of a large electric light globes with the caption, "Light up your life, READ!" Still another was a white Chevrolet Suburban carrying a replica of the new library with the invitation, "Follow me to the Yorktown Public Library." In a recent parade a float with the new library replica displayed recordings, movies, books, magazines, newspapers and videos to show the services available. Once children of different sizes carrying books of different sizes, represented, "Grow with Books!" In 1988 children marched in the parade sheathed in large cardboard boxes painted with the titles and pictures on the covers of many children's books. The high school art class helped with this project. In recent years the winners in the summer reading program were privileged to ride in the parade.

The Friends have had Saturday movies and storytimes for the children, sponsored open house for National Library Weeks and for the dedication of the new library in 1986. They helped with refreshments for closing of the summer reading programs and for library workshops. The held an open forum on constitutional amendments in 1989 and more recently helped get a Literacy Council organized locally. They provided funds for microfilming The Yorktown News from 1912 to 1962 and held an open house and reception honoring Frances Hartmann, retired librarian, for her ten years of service during which the new library was built and for eleven years as secre-

were: Margaret Weldon, Joyce Davis and Jean Striedel. Vice chairmen were: Joyce Davis, Luellen Smiley, Janie Gaida, Pat Wiggins and Judy Wilder. Treasurers were: Thelma Goehring, Arlene McTighe, Ruby Lee Damerau Braun and Ann Schendel. Secretaries were: Annie Beth Harp, Lydia Champion and Frances Hartmann. Present officers include Melinda Straube, president; Daphne Buelter, vice president, Ginny Smith, treasurer, Frances Hartmann, secretary; Shirley Mohrig, reporter and Margaret Weldon and Annie Beth Harp, telephone committee.

With the leadership of the librarians, Luellen Smiley and Jean Striedel, the Friends were able to organize a Junior Friends in 1989. They are very helpful with many library procedures. They designed their Western Day float to represent Abe Lincoln, as young man and president: "Follow in the steps of Abe Lincoln - READ!" The Friends meet monthly. Dues are: $2 active member; $5 inactive; $10 for organizations and businesses.

YORKTOWN'S VOLUNTEER FIRE DEPARTMENT

Judge Rudolph Kleberg was the guiding force to get a volunteer fire company organized in 1901. Gus Nau was the first fire chief. A women's auxiliary with Miss Hedwig Nau as president, helped with the fund raising projects.

The first firestation, built in 1902, was a twostory frame building surmounted by a cupola type bell tower. In 1951 a one-story brick building housing both the station equipment and an auditorium, was constructed on the same site.

A great step forward was made in 1979 when the organization received new red 700-gallontank Ford fire truck complete with ladders, hoses and a 1,000 gallon pump.

The firemen have weekly training sessions and an annual fund-raising supper. They also participate in area firemen's races. Through the years, in addition to Gus Nau the following have been fire chiefs: William Gohmert, Jim Hollingsworth, Charlie Strieber, Andrew Streiber, Joe Neumeyer, Joe Ploeger, Joe Gras, Harry Potcinske, Warner Borth and Arthur Goehring.

The membership list for 1990 includes: Norris Schultz, Marvin Jaeger, Arthur Goehring, Weldon Blaschke, Terry Lamprecht, Pete Styra, John Bolting, Edward Gips, Pete Duderstadt, Fred Hughes, William Potcinske, Ricky Boerm, Jerry Pierce, Michael Migura, Marvin Schulze, Charles Styra, Bobby Strieber, Wayne Bolting, Carl R. Kreitz, Stephen Blaschke, Darryl Borth, Thomas Rabke, Dwain Harbers, Thomas Kraege, Bruce Parma, Bret Audilet, and Tim Strieber.

The city is "in good hands" with these active, alert and trained members in the organization.

MASONIC LODGE

T14

Yorktown's first lodge of Masons received its dispensation in 1852 and held its meetings in a log cabin. This dispensation was obtained from the Grand Lodge of Texas, signed by James T. Lytle, District Deputy Grand Master, Eighth Masonic District and was dated at Lavaca on the 2nd day of September, 1852.

Petitioners were: Daniel B. Friar, Jacob A. Miller, J.A. Miles, A.J. Prayter, Joel M. Walker, J. Tumlinson, C.W. Spencer, G.M. Reese, James McMillian, J.P. Collins, J.C. Rankin, Josiah Taylor, John Choate, Jonathan York and Walter Anderson. It was known as Coleto Lodge No. 124 and the charter was granted in December to G.M. Reese, WM; J.T. Kilgore, SW and T.J. Ives, JW.

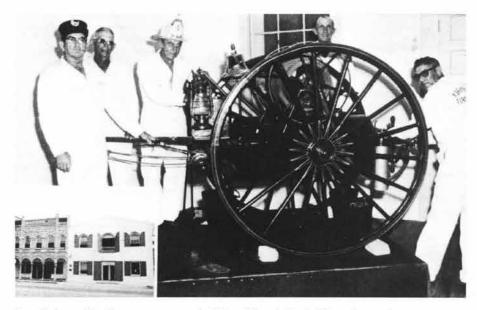

This lodge, however, became dormant. Another lodge was founded shortly afterwards and followed the same course. An older lodge, founded February 24, 1851 at the original county seat at Clinton and members of the dormant Coleto Lodge were accepted in this lodge, Cameron Lodge No. 76. In 1877 after the removal of the county seat to Cuero and the abandonment of Clinton, Cameron Lodge No. 76 moved to Yorktown. A two-story lodge hall was built on Eckhardt Street, just north of the city square. In 1956 a single story brick lodge hall was constructed in the 500 block of East Main on property donated by Mr. and Mrs. Louis Heinrich in honor of their parents. The lodge meets there on the second Tuesday of each month.

YORKTOWN COUNTRY CLUB

T150

In 1923 the Yorktown Country Club was organized with a liberal policy of membership.

YORKTOWN HISTORICAL SOCIETY T151

A group of people interested in restoring the old Eckhardt Building at the corner of Main and Eckhardt Streets met at the City Hall on November 11, 1974. Those present were: Connie Boyles, Eugenia Studer, Leon Maeckel, Sylvia Blaschke, Mary Sue Happel, M.W. Weischwill, Lou Gips, James Metting, Bud Haun, August Riedesel and Robert Eyhorn.

Carol Blain and Eugenia Studer were elected co-chairpersons; Sylvia Blaschke, secretary-treasurer; M.W. Weischwill, M.W. (Bud) Haun and Robert B. Eyhorn, Advisors and Mrs. Rosa Lou Skinner, scrapbook chairman. A committee to raise funds was appointed. The building was named the Yorktown Historical Museum and the organization the Yorktown Historical Society, Inc. By December 10 the charter for the organization was approved and the building was donated to the group by Mrs. Ila Mae Gras Riedesel, her daughters, Page Graves and Gail Riedesel, and the Yorktown Lions Club.

The museum is composed of two buildings once used by the C. Eckhardt & Sons store. The older building on the corner, with twenty-four inch walls, was constructed in 1871 of sandstone transported by ox-drawn wagons from Rocky Mound in Karnes City, about 15 miles north of Yorktown and midway between Gillet and Smiley. The stones were covered with plaster to form inside and outside walls. The window frames, ceilings and floors were made of yellow pine. Square nails were used. The building has iron shutters and doors.

The adjoining building, finished in 1876, also used sandstone from Rocky Mound. Its supporting arches, however, were of brick, fortified with cast iron. A second story which was added later, was built with brick walls.

Through nomination by the Texas Historical Commission in 1976, the building was listed in the National Register of Historic Buildings and has received the Texas Historical Medallion.

Through intensive solicitation of funds, willing donors, advice from Mrs. Cindy Sherell of the Texas Historical Commission, help from the architect, Pat Weaver, and the work of August Riedesel, a local contractor, and of many volunteers, the renovation was finished in August, 1977. This included a new roof, ceilings, floors, etc. A hand-operated elevator and a water cistern were added in the interior. Rooms were provided for the Yorktown Chamber of Commerce, a meeting room, a small kitchen and rest rooms. Three large display areas were provided, including one upstairs.

The museum was dedicated on April 2, 1978. Special programs sponsored by the Historical Society include displays of Texas Rangers, Sam Houston and Albert Einstein, as well as Christmas sing-alongs, historical and Indian narrated slide shows and the sesquicentennial ceremony designating Yorktown as a valid participant in the State Celebration.

The museum boasts of many historical pictures, newspapers and documents, antique furniture, clothing, appliances, tools, books and much more. There is even a grand piano that weathered the 1866 Indianola hurricane.

Chairpersons after those mentioned include: Pastors Kurt Hartmann, Will Paul Menn and Milton Bierschwale. Present officers are: Frances Hartmann, chairman; Shirley Karnei, secretary and Everett Cole, treasurer.

The most recent project of the organization was the rewriting and updating of the History of Yorktown, published in 1956. The new 170page paperback, Yorktown, Texas - Its History 1848-1989 has over 50 pictures and was published December 8, 1989. It was printed by the DeWitt County View Press and co-edited by Everett B. Cole, retired teacher and Frances Hartmann, retired teacher-librarian.

Annual dues for membership in the organization are $5 per person; $7.50 for a family and $100 for a life membership.

YORKTOWN LIONS CLUB

T152

The Club was organized on December 19, 1939 and chartered on February 10, 1940. B.C. Butler was chairman of the Charter Night Committee. District Governor William Offer presented the charter to President Charles Lamprecht. The Club had 34 members: Garland Allen; 2-year Director G.W. Allen; Charles Bauch; Orville Beckman; Roy Boeckmann; Gus Braunig; 2nd Vice President B.C. Butler, Oscar Eckhardt; Bob Edger; R.M. Harrison; Dave Holland; John G. Kerlick; Hilmer Kraege; Tail Twister, P.C. Kromer; A.A. Ladner; President Chas. Lamprecht; Ed Lieberman; 1st. Vice President Virgil Mattingly; T.J. McLarty; F.M. Pieper; 1-year Directors, R.A. Randow and W.H. Riedel; Douglas Riggs; Lion Tamer R.J. Roeder; Albert N. Schwartz; Alvin Sievers; 3rd. Vice President J.E. Simpson; L.A. Sloma; Secretary and Treasurer L.N. Smith; 2 year Director W.C. Smith; F.L. Stovall; B.E. Thuem; Ray P. Waters and J.E. Wolf.

The Lions Club is the world's largest and most active service club organization. It has more than 1.3 million members in more than 150 countries. It is a non-profit organization which will make every effort to go out and help any needy person. Mr. Melvin Jones, a Chicago Insurance man, started this organization on June 7, 1917.

The Lions Club of Texas owns a tract of land near Kerrville known as the Crippled Children's Camp and hundreds of children go there each year for fun and help. Not only crippled or blind children use this camp but also many diabetic children.

All members of the Lions Club are dues paying members who attend meetings regularly and sponsor money making projects to be used for buying glasses for needy people, food, clothing, and medical expenses. They help in the operation of the Crippled Children's Camp. The club also collects old eye glasses that are re-worked to be used by needy people.

The slogan of Lionism is Liberty, Intelligence, Our Nation's Safety. The motto is simply, "We Serve".

The following members have been President of the local club from the year 1940 through 1990: Charles Lamprecht, John G. Kerlick, B.C. Butler, J.E. Simpson, J.M. McMillan, Jr., M.W. Haun, Tony Schmidt, Dr. W.P. Menn, J.W. Deborah, A.E. Teltschick, Dr. D.C. Towery, Morris E. Albers, L.M. Staggs, Fred Hamilton, F.H. "Jack" Schneider, Felton Lemke, Gordon E. Barrett, J.D. On February 10, 1990, The Yorktown Lions Club celebrated its 50th anniversary. After Frank Stephenson gave the banquet invocation, president Harvey Suggs introduced toastmaster Manroy Wolpman who acknowledged visiting clubs, guests and the District Governor, Charles Matthews. Henry Wolf, journalist, was the speaker and music was furnished by Yorktown High School band members directed by Jim Miller. The menu of turkey and dressing and the singing of "America" and the "Star Spangled Banner" were in keeping with the program of the original Charter Night.

Through the years probably the Lions' largest local project was helping the City and the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission to establish the Lions Park along the Coleto in 1973. The Lions initiated the project after former DeWitt County View editor Paul A. Schmidt and his wife gave the Lions a four-acre tract of land. The $28,000 project using federal and local funds, included clearing off the property, installing playground equipment, concrete slabs, tables, lights and barbecue pits. Through a similar grant to the City in 1990, this same area is to be enlarged and rejuvenated with baseball field, jogging trail, tennis court, rest rooms, etc.

YORKTOWN CHAPTER #945 ORDER OF THE EASTERN STAR

T153

The Yorktown Chapter #945 Order of the Eastern Star was Instituted July 1, 1948 by Pat Boone, Worthy Grand Matron. It was constituted on February 11, 1949 by T.G. Rogers, Worthy Grand Patron. The first Yorktown Chapter had demised years before when the Eckhardt Bank failed.

The furniture, jewels, Bibles and a piano were donated by the twenty petitioners. The Altar Bible was donated by Berdie Easterling. We still treasure it as it originally came from the old Clinton Lodge.

In the 41 year history of this Chapter only one meeting was missed.

There are 68 members of which four are Life Members, four are fifty year members (3 are still active) and 2 dual members.

Special projects have been donations to fire victims and needy families, Special Christmas Baskets for the needy, the sponsoring of a girl in the Masonic Home until she graduated from high school, donations to the Masonic Lodge, and food to bereaved families.

Projects to raise funds have included greeting cards, vanilla and spices, Easter Eggs, baked goods, etc.

YORKTOWN'S Y.M.A. CLUB

T154

The Young Men's Amusement Club of Yorktown is best described in excerpts from an article by their committee in a 1912 Yorktown News. It seems that the club was "regarded by some to be a corrupt, dangerous and selfish organization composed of poor, fanatical boys." In their defense the committee explains: "They (the members) believe in organization as a means of self control; they believe in athletic and literary pursuits as a means of developing the soul, the mind, the body; they believe in social and mutual entertainments as a means of providing that restful diversion from toil and study that man's instinct longs for; and they believe in fostering friendship and aiding materially in the progressiveness of our town."

"What class of individuals compose the Y.M.A.C.? Honest, gentlemanly, progressive young men — young men who stand for the highest and best in social, literary and municipal affairs. In fact, the Y.M.A.C. is composed of some of the best and most enlightened young men to be found anywhere . . . They are true citizens. Let the following statement of donations speak for the club:

 Donation to the Park Association from receipts of play January 17, 1912.

To the Fire Company from receipts of ball game.

3. To the Mothers Club from ball game.

To the Park Association from the receipts of ball game.

Can it be justly considered a selfish club? No, a fairminded person will readily concede that the Y.M.A. Club is an institution whose motives and aims are of the highest and most progressive nature."

Details of a play presented by the Club on Thursday, November 28, (Thanksgiving Day) at the Riedel Opera House are listed in another 1912 Yorktown News. The drama was entitled, "Imogene" and had the following cast of characters: Imogene, Mrs. J.G. Kerlick; Mrs. Maud Mansfield, Miss Bella Metz; Mother Mundy, the Witch of Dismal Hollow, Mrs. Nic. Ladner; Susie, Mrs. Mansfield's maid, Miss Hilda Gips; Snooks, a newsboy, E.G. Knape; Charles Mansfield, J.G. Kerlick; Dr. Harris, Nic. Ladner, Deacon Austin, Mrs. Mansfield's uncle, O.W. Ehlers; James Reed, an Attorney, E.R. Sauermilch; Dennis O'Brian, Mansfield's valet, G.A. Zedler; Waiter and Surgeon, E.E. Luddecke. Act 1: The Witch's appearance; Act 2: Mansfield's home; Act 3: Hall in Mansfield's home; Act 4: Reed's law office.

It was noted that the Club raised $85 with this presentation and a free dance followed. The Club, which me in the Riedel Opera House, sponsored dances, socials and gave a party for each member who married. Such a wedding reception honoring the George Wieds was held in June 1912 at the Opera House. The hall was decorated in blue and gold, the Club colors, good music was furnished, "delightful refreshments were served and a merry time was had until the wee small hours."

TRANSPORTATION IN AND OUT OF YORKTOWN

T155

John King, who lived on the eastern branch of the Coleto in DeWitt County, on February 8, 1848, made an agreement with Charles Eckhardt, co-founder of Yorktown, to survey a road leading from Victoria to the King residence. From there the survey went to Corporta Mounds and from there to the Guadalupe river for a crossing "not higher up than the upper line of the land that belongs to John York," and finally the road reached New Braunfels. This route was to provide water at about 15 miles and to shorten the present route by 20 miles.

While Yorktown was still quite young, the stage started on its run from San Antonio to Fort Lavaca with John King as the "stage" man here. The first stage to pass through Yorktown carried mail and passengers, was drawn by four horses and driven by Tom Fuqua. King sold out to Daniel Friar in 1852.

The Old San Antonio Road ran from the coast to Victoria, through Meyersville, through the northern part of Yorktown, and then to Helena and on to San Antonio. It served smaller settlements along the way. Freight wagons were used to haul goods from Indianola to San Antonio. That was mainly why this road came about. Some of the local teamsters were Louis Wehe, Peter Gerhardt, Fred Sinast, Gus Zedler, Gottfried, Fred and Herman Metting and Francis Gruetzmacher. Taking a load of potatoes or other produce to San Antonio took three days and two nights. On the return trip the teamsters would bring back flour, sugar, cloth, furniture, medicines and lumber. Children were delighted to see barrels of apples and brown sugar wrapped in shucks called polunica. Tomatoes, lemons and oranges were rarities. Wagons were often repaired at the wheelwright's shop at the northeast corner of Main and Riedel Streets. Many of the teamsters stayed at the two-story Duerr Hotel, operated by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Duerr, in the 300 block of present West Fifth Street across the creek.

The San Antonio and Aransas Pass railroad came to Yorktown in 1886. Its first plans were to bypass the town, but Wm. Eckhardt furnished the finances required for eight miles of right-of-way. For nearly a century the railroad furnished an outlet for the products of the community like cotton, cottonseed products, peanuts, cattle and oil. For travelers there were passenger services with excursions to Port Lavaca, Hallettsville and New Braunfels. There were four daytime and two night trains. The railroad became a part of the Southern Pacific Lines and continued these services into the 1930's, but as private ownership of automobiles and trucks increased and the bus established a route here, the railroad began to lose business. The last train came through Yorktown on February 10, 1972. The rails were removed some time later.

In 1990 Yorktown still does not have neither train, nor bus services; therefore, the mail is carried in small vans while freight is hauled in and out by 18-wheeler trucks. The Elder Oil Tools utilizes a helicopter.

The first streets in Yorktown were of a deep sand and after a rain were quite boggy. The first bridge across the Coleto Creek was a wooden structure built in 1904. A City ordinance forbade anyone crossing the bridge to drive or ride faster than a walk! In 1929 the wooden bridge was replaced by a modern concrete and steel bridge and in 1934 a low-water bridge of similar construction was completed a block north on Fifth Street.

The first paved streets came to Yorktown in 1927 with the building of the Davy highway to the depot. In 1929 the Highway 72, running through Main Street, brought more pavement. Today, 1990, there are very unpaved streets in the city.

BREEDEN BROS.

In a corner building, just across Main Street from the present building, the firm of Breeden Bros. came into existence in 1889. Walter Kibbe Breeden and Charles Goodwin Breeden, brothers, and their brother-in-law, R.H. Wofford, were the founders of this business. R.H. Wofford invested in the business but he was never active. Prior to this time, Walter Breeden worked for the Seeligson Wholesale and Retail Grocery in 1873 when he first came to Cuero from his hometown, Victoria, Texas. He was the oldest son of Capt. Paul Hamilton Breeden and Mary Elmira (Kibbe) Breeden and was fifteen years old. Later he worked in the grocery department of H. Runge Co. Charles Goodwin Breeden was a salesman for P.J. Willis Co, a position he held for several years, leaving the control of the business to Walter. In 1911 Breeden-Runge Wholesale Grocery Co., was formed and Charles Breeden was President and head of the company.

The real credit for the foundation of Breeden Bros. went to Walter Breeden. Due to his untiring efforts the store grew to be the largest grocery and feed store in Cuero. Standard and high quality merchandise was a prominent part of the business. A household word was "if you bought it at Breeden Bros., you bought the best!"

In 1907 Breeden Bros. moved into its new building, the present site. The architects for this well built structure were the prominent Jules Lefflend and Sons of Victoria. Bailey Mills, the contractors were also from Victoria.

In 1908, Paul Hamilton Breeden, Walter Breeden's only son and namesake of his grandfather, graduated from Eastman Business College of Poughkeepsie, New York. Paul had grown up in the store helping his father from the time he was a very young man. He joined the firm and was made manager.

Breeden Bros. were also cotton factors. They dealt with spot cotton and in cotton futures. Cotton was "King" in the 1920's and was a very profitable crop. However after the Depression of 1929, this was a different story. As the Depression set in, the once flourishing business began to flounder. Customers could not pay their accounts. Cotton stood unpicked in the fields.

In 1931, February 15, Walter Breeden died in San Antonio at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Marjory Mabe. He suffered Artherosclertic disease (hardening of the arteries) and had gone there with Mrs. Breeden for medical treatment.

Paul Breeden became his father's successor as Head of Breeden Bros. in very adverse economic times.

Against the advice of his lawyer, H.W. Wallace, he refused to take bankruptcy for the company. He was determined to keep Breeden Bros. going and pull it out of its failing condition. He moved the store to the back part of the building, and rented the front half to Klecka Drug Store. He cashed in his large life insurance policies, putting the proceeds into the business. In spite of everything he could do, he was forced to finally close Breeden Bros. in 1938.

When Charles Breeden died in 1925, Walter

Breeden generously divided all the assets of the business with the C.G. Breeden Estate. At the time the Breeden Bros, business was closed, Paul Breeden owned one half of the building. He sold his interest in the building to the C.G. Breeden Estate at that time.

It was a sad time for the Breeden family and its dependents. The store was a landmark for Cuero and the surrounding territory. Many of its respected and valued employees had been with the company for their lifetimes. William Muenter was the oldest. Others were: Frank Lackey, A.R. Reuckert, William Casal, Gus Hiller, Richard Waldeck, Fritz Goehring, Henry Garcia, Clarence and Sylvester Williams, Vollie Jones, Jesse and Otto Littles.

John Lewis had a vegetable stand on the west side of the building. He handled all kinds of delicious fresh produce and fruits.

WIELAND POULTRY AND EGG COMPANY

32

Wieland Poultry and Egg Company, located at 110 East Hamilton, Cuero, Texas, was operated by Gilbert A. Wieland. The firm was opened March 8, 1950 and specialized in custom dressing of poultry and sale of fresh dressed poultry in both retail and wholesale lots.

The plant was modernly equipped with scalding tank, washing tanks, cooling and freezing facilities, and an electric picker being among the features.

In addition to handling poultry, Wieland bought and sold eggs, Nutrena feed, and carried a complete line of Staffel's feeds, seeds, and insecticides.

Wieland had built up his clientele by catering to the wishes of his patrons in custom dressing and packaging poultry for freezing. "The best dressed birds in town come from Wielands" was the slogan of this firm.

Gilbert A. Wieland, a native of Yorktown, Texas, attended the Gohlke and Yorktown public schools, and the San Antonio Business College, San Antonio, Tex. He worked as station produce buyer for Swift & Co. for 4 years (1933-1937). Gilbert went to work for Cudahy Packing Company 1937 at Cuero Office, was transferred to Victoria in 1938. In 1943, he was transferred back to Cuero and was employed with this firm for approximately 13 years as bookkeeper, salesman, and assistant manager. He served as relief manager of plants at Kenedy, Goliad, Yorktown, Cuero, Victoria, Port Lavaca, and El Campo. He was the manager of Cudahy egg canning plant in San Antonio, Tex. during World War II. Gilbert left the employment of Cudahy Dec. 1949 to open his own

His wife, the former Alberta Mueller of Nordheim, Tex., worked right along beside him in the office until 1960 when she returned to teaching. Their daughter, Barbara Ann, also, helped in the office during the summer and on Saturdays during her high school years. Wieland's customers considered her as one of the best bill collectors in town.

Wieland had one regular employee and 6 to 8 additional employees on regular and designated dressing and processing days.

Due to the shortage of poultry and eggs and the competitive pressures from larger firms,

FERGUSON'S 10¢ STORES

B3

William Lynk Ferguson, Augusta (Moeller) Ferguson and William L. Ferguson, Jr.

The Victoria Advocate of May 18, 1907 reported the following: Mr. and Mrs. W.L. Ferguson of Chicago have leased the Keef building on Main Street where they say they expect to open up the finest racket store in Texas. They are here now and are making preparations to receive their immense stock. The Advocate wishes them success in their venture.

1945: William L. Ferguson, Jr. in front of Ferguson's 10¢ Store.

Thus began the "Ferguson 10¢ Stores" adventure. William Lynk Ferguson Jr. was born in Victoria in 1912.

In 1913, the Victoria store was sold and the Fergusons went to North Carolina to join in a similar venture with a Mr. Rose. By 1916, Mr. Ferguson decided his future lay in Texas and he returned to Cuero to open the first store of what later became a small chain of ten stores. In the next twenty years stores were opened in Yorktown, Edna, Gonzales, Nixon, Goliad, Kenedy, Pt. Lavaca, and Karnes City. The Cuero store served as headquarters and merchandise warehouse for all the stores. William Lynk Ferguson joined his father in the business when he graduated from the University of Texas. A fatal heart attack claimed the senior Ferguson on the eve of his son's departure to serve as a Lieutenant in the Purchasing department at the Naval Supply Depot in Oakland, California. He was there from August, 1944 to October of 1945. During that time Bill's wife, Carolyn, operated the stores. After the war Bill continued to operate the stores until 1962 when he sold or liquidated all of the stores.

THE MEYERSVILLE STORE

Isaac Egg & Sons - Meyersville Store - built in 1917. Business started in 1868.

Business Card from present owners

Isaac Egg & Sons

The Meyersville Store was established on October 31, 1868 by Isaac Egg upon his arrival in Meyersville from Goliad, where he had lived for about four years. He was a native of Zurich, Switzerland. Before he moved to Meyersville, he had hauled freight for a number of years to many towns in Texas and to Matamoros in Mexico.

His business, which was started as a small tim shop with almost no capital, grew steadily. Through years of hard work as a tinner and dealer, working seven days a week for twelve hours or more, Isaac Egg succeeded in turning his small business into one of the largest and best rural stores of hardware and groceries in the area.

The business has always been owned and operated by Isaac Egg and his descendants. It is presently owned by his great-great grandson, Robert L. Moore. The store became the permanent home of the Meyersville Post Office on April 1, 1973. Isaac Egg was appointed postmaster on December 9, 1879. (This story is given elsewhere).

On July 20, 1909, Isaac Egg died at the age of 74 years. At that time, two of his sons, Edwin and Rudolph Egg became the joint owners of Isaac Egg and Sons, as the business was called. When Edwin died at an early age in 1912, Rudolph oversaw the business, with Mrs. Edwin (Betty) Egg and her children as partners. this partnership continued for a number of years.

As the business and line of merchandise of Isaac Egg grew, he built a second building, and then another. The first building contained the tin shop and other tin wares, another one housed farming machinery and equipment, saddles and harnesses. The third building was used for the sale of groceries, drugs, clothing, hardware and many other items. In 1917, the three buildings were replaced with one story building, a large concrete structure which was built under the supervision of Moritz Jacob, brother-in-law of Isaac's son, Rudolph Egg. The building, with eight inch outer walls, was constructed by local labor, using 1100 bags of cement hauled from Cuero by Edwin Otto Egg, gravel from Betty Egg's pasture, and sand hauled from the Five-Mile Coleto Creek. The concrete was mixed by hand labor on a large wooden platform and pushed up to the top in wheelbarrows. They worked hurriedly in order to finish before the start of the cotton and turkey seasons in the fall, when all hands were busy hauling cotton and turkeys. A dance was held in the store when it was finally finished.

When moving into the new store, the tinner's table, with all its tools, and which had been made by Isaac Egg, was moved in with everything else, and it is still there today. Throughout the years, many items were made in the tin shop, including tubs, pails, stovepipes, strainers, water troughs, etc. Although the old tools and tables are still in the original place, they no longer are being used.

Freight for the store was hauled from Cuero in two wagons. The large wagon was pulled by four mules, Big Pete, Little Pete, Mike and Kit. The smaller wagon was pulled by two other mules. Feed for the animals was raised on the Egg farm. Turkeys, chickens, eggs and cotton were bought from area farmers and hauled to Cuero for resale. All family members were involved in work in the store, either as clerks, tinners, hauling produce or merchandise, or even making home made ice cream on Saturdays to sell in the store. The younger children helped by herding the flocks of turkeys in a field near the store until they bedded down for the night. As daylight came, the turkeys were started on their trip to Cuero, following a wagon carrying corn which was dropped along the way to lead the turkeys on. At dusk, when the turkeys began to fly into trees along the road to roost, the herders called it a day and made camp for the night. In later years, turkeys were hauled in trucks.

Hired workers employed by Isaac Egg Sons lived in the house behind the store, formerly the home of Isaac and Helene Egg. The hands ate meals provided at the home of Betty Egg.

There were no shopping carts in the store at that time. All items were gotten by the clerks and put into bags or boxes for the customers. The customers were also provided with a place to store any of their valuable documents in the two large safes that were kept in the store.

In 1922, the Eggs bought the store in Arneckeville from John Hans. At different times it was operated by Edwin Egg, Oscar Adickes, Oscar Egg and Ruben Thamm. After Edwin moved to Golly and Oscar Egg moved back to Meyersville, the property in Arneckeville was sold in the mid 1940's. When electricity became available in rural areas, the Meyersville Store provided the community with a fresh meat market and a meat cooler.

In 1946, the hardware/tin shop and the grocery/feed store were separated when ElRoy Luerssen bought the grocery/feedstore merchandise. A wall was built to separate the two businesses. The Post Office, tin shop and hardware store continued to be operated by twin brothers, Henry and Isaac Egg. Later, Willie C. Egg bought Mr. Luerssen's business. On February 1, 1965 it was sold to Arlen and Barbara Egg Mueller, who ran the business for eight years, after which Charles and Ruth (Egg) Moore bought it from the Muellers. On July 1, 1981, their son and his wife, Robert and M'Liss (Mueller) Moore bought the business.

In 1986, after the passing of Isaac and Henry Egg, the Egg Estate sold the hardware inventory also to the Moore's, and the partition wall was removed, so now it is one large store again.

The store that had been started by Isaac Egg as a small tin shop now is really like a museum with many old and interesting items on display, and at the same time, Isaac's descendants are carrying on the business of Great-grandfather, Isaac Egg.

KEESLER'S

It was a cold day in February, 1946, when Joe and Bob Keesler completed negotiations with the Webb family to purchase the confectionary business located at 118 E. Main Street in Cuero. The name of the business was immediately changed to Keesler's. After a few months Joe became the sole owner of the business

The building housing Keesler's was built on the west ½ of town lot 4, block 2, by Pedro (Peter) Alonso (sometimes known as Pedro Alonso Fernandez) in 1895. Records indicate that Peter Alonso was a most interesting person. He was born in the Kingdom of Spain but became a naturalized citizen of the United States, and had a family here. After the death of his first wife he returned to Spain to visit family and friends, and his second wife and two sons were in Spain. While in Spain Peter Alonso executed his Will, dated October 19, 1917, at which time he must have been approximately 70 years of age. Enroute back to the States he died, and was buried at sea on or about September 2, 1918. The Will became a problem. It was in Spain — and the family there was not about to release it to the courts here. It was several years before a certified copy could be obtained. He left his possessions in Spain to his family in Spain and his possessions in Texas to his family here.

Soon after purchasing the business Joe Keesler made many changes. His homemade ice cream became quite famous, and Bill Cunningham, formerly of Cuero but not in San Antonio, still has (1989) bus tours stop at Keesler's for what he calls the famous Keesler sodas. Joe added a record shop at the rear of the building, with two small listening and recording rooms. Records advanced from 78's to 45's to the long playing 33's, and, of course, record players, radios, and eventually TV's were added. The first colored television set, a Hoffman, was sold to Ann Cusack.

During those early years — late 40's and 50's — the store was open until 10:00 P.M. and was a "hangout" for youths as well as a convenient refreshment stop for theater goers. Many high school students worked part-time behind the fountain, and so many Hadamek girls worked there that we laughingly called it the "Hadamek Finishing School". Later, when the Hallmark girls came along, it was the 'Hallmark Finishing School."

After a time Joe felt the urge to serve hot meals — breakfast and lunch. He had to remodel. But first he had to purchase the building. After Peter Alonso's death the building had been acquired by the Graves family and in 1968 Joe purchased the building from a member of that family. The store was closed several weeks for extensive remodeling. The ceiling was lowered, new fountain and kitchen equipment was added, one front door replaced the original two doors, and for a teaser, a $1 bill was glued to the floor just inside the door. Fans, microwaves, microwave equipment and supplies were added to the merchandise line. Microwave cooking classes were held regularly, taught first by Mary Stratton and later by Hazel Coyle.

A reporter for the San Antonio Express who happened to eat lunch at Keesler's discussed the store at considerable length in his column, stating that it was the only place he had ever eaten where he could buy a TV or microwave oven while enjoying a good meal. He also warned visitors not to be fooled by the $1 bill on the floor.

Calvin Johnson became part of the establishment in 1972. He and Joe were a good pair and handled the early morning (6:00 A.M.) breakfast business without additional help. That was possible because customers served their own coffee, read their papers, and when they were ready to eat Joe would yell to Calvin "Fred's ready" (or whatever name applied). Calvin knew just what to prepare.

Only two cafes in DeWitt County were listed in the Best Country Cafes in Texas, published in 1983. Keesler's was one of them.

Keesler's served as football ticket headquarters for many years. There had been many "lean" football years in Cuero before Gilbreth's "Cinderella" team came along, and for those playoff games a long line of fans would be waiting for tickets when Joe unlocked the door at 6:00 A.M. Often coaches stayed to help sell tickets, and the camaraderie between coaches and fans was healthy and pleasant.

Keesler's was Joe Keesler's life. Children understood his gruffness and liked him. He taught many of them how to make change. Perhaps it was appropriate that he should die at the store. It happened July 29, 1988. The store is still owned by the Keesler family — Lytha, Vicki Jo (Coppedge) and Larry, but at the present time is leased to others.

The friendly atmosphere at Keesler's was unique for eating establishments. It was an atmosphere by "Main Street Joe" over a period of more than 40 years.

FIRST STATE BANK

Yoakum, Texas

In the summer of 1931, Herbert Hoover had been in office two and one-half years as President of this country, and the Great Depression was at its lowest point. Banks and bankers were not among the best-loved people in the land, and it took some courage to organize a bank in those days. Some gentlemen, Mr. A.G. Hermann, Sr. among them, had that kind of courage and organized the First State Bank of Yoakum. Along with Mr. Hermann were Messrs. M.C. Parrish, C.B. Sullivan, and Durell Miller who are reflected in the stock record books as being among the original stockholders.

The First State Bank of Yoakum is successor to the Farmers and Merchants State Bank, 516 Lott Street, Yoakum, whose charter dated from 1917. The latest statement of condition of that bank available to us, which was 1930, shows deposits of $317,000 and loans $214,000; and the officers were Messrs. C.J. Huth, John Machac, E.J.A. Mertz, and Harry Thiele, Jr., all of whom are now deceased. The Farmers and Merchants State Bank reorganized under the name of First State Bank, Yoakum, Texas, moved to the familiar First State Bank location on the corner of Lott and West Grand in July, 1931 and remained in those quarters until January, 1969. The present structure was completed in 1969 and is a modern and attractive addition to the city.

The First State Bank originated and was accepted by the Department of Banking on June 27, 1931 with total assets under $150,000. Under stringent banking management and active participation in city, school and community activities, the small business steadily grew. The 1930's proved to be quite successful for the new bank as figures rose from $158,635.36 in December of 1931 under President M.C. Parrish, to December 1935 figures of $265,830.11 and December 1939 records showing $508.460.78. The latter two figures represent years under the direction of President A.G. Hermann, Sr. Closing figure on June 30, 1989, 58 years after the bank originated, were $59,130,782.59.

A.G. Hermann, Sr. served as President of the First State Bank during the 1930's until his death in 1970. He was succeeded by his son, A.G. Hermann, Jr. who served from 1970 to 1977. Under their direction were the talents of John Kvinta and his son, Charles J. Kvinta, who served as President from 1977 to 1986, and President Dennis O. Kutach state that their concept of "serving the people" is reflected in the helpful and friendly attitude of their employees. Both of these gentlemen, as others before them, have devoted many hours to help First State Bank fulfill this objective.

First State Bank has come a long way from the days of manual bookkeeping on ledger sheets for each customer; and as Chairman Hermann, III puts it, "using rocks as paperweights on stacks of checks that were being sorted so they didn't fly out the window during those hot summer months". Today's fully automated and computerized banking world would truly astound yesterday's banker. First State Bank has been "on computer" since 1972, simplifying and advancing every service that is offered to its customers. Some conveniences that the original First State Bank officials would never have imagined include: TransAct, the automatic teller machine, easily accessible 24 hours a day; credit cards, MasterCard and VISA; bank statements printed by computer; viewing up-to-the-minute information on fingertip on-line terminals; and they certainly wouldn't believe the "interest rates" and the long list of services that the bank offers.

The First State Bank is proud of the role it has played in the history of Yoakum. The Bank's motto, "First to Serve, First to help" has fared well through the years.

ANDERS AUTO SUPPLIES

grandson of Oscar Anders, became the fourth generation of the family to join Anders Auto Supplies.

by Mrs. Dave Kauffman

1989 Anders Auto, Main St., Cuero

Anders Auto Supplies was established in 1921 by Oscar Anders. He and his brother, Eugene, worked together as principals. Eugene was the mechanic and welder and Oscar was in parts and service. They bought parts in quantities large enough to become parts jobbers. Emil Papacek, the brother-in-law of Oscar, joined them in 1929. "Pap" was an asset to the business until his stroke and death many years later.

In the thirties Oscar bought several trucks and started a route to surrounding towns, selling parts. A store was opened in Yoakum. Eugene was the manager. In 1935 Oscar moved to Cuero and opened his business at 105 E. Main Street, now Cuero Music Store. The first employed hired in Cuero was Lillian Ryan Shelton. In 1940 Emma Anders, his wife, became the bookkeeper.

During the war, sometime in the 1940's, Oscar opened an Electrical Supply and Appliance Store in Brenham. This was at the start of REA in that area. This store was operated by C.G. Whitte. The date the store was closed is unknown.

During the war Oscar opened a hardware store. He bought the building and several years later sold out his hardware and moved his automotive business there. This is where the present automotive business is now located.

The end of the war brought several changes. In November 1945, Dave Kauffman, husband of Corinne Anders, joined the organization. In January 1958 Oscar Anders retired and Dave bought the store. In 1969 Alan Kahlich, husband of Mr. Anders' oldest granddaughter, Mary C. Kauffman, joined the organization. In January 1986, Dave retired and Alan bought the store. In 1989 David Kahlich joined the organization with DECA. David, the only great

THE BASS BROTHERS STORES AND THE BASS SHOE STORE

В8

In 1913 the Bass brothers: John McMillan, James Lewis, and Paul Leon(my grandfather) opened the Bass Brothers dry goods store in Yoakum. My grandfather did not remain in the business for a very long period, but John and James Bass operated the store for more than two decades. In 1920 they bought the Graves dry goods store in Cuero paying for it with a suitcase full of cash (see Bass Family History). The store in Cuero was located on Main Street in the Graves Building.

Some stationery for the store survives and it indicates that the store was "the one price quality store" with resident buyers in Yoakum, Cuero, and New York. The store sold clothing for men and women including shoes and hats along with rugs, linoleums, window shades, and some furniture. There was a central office up near the ceiling in the middle of the store. Purchases, sales slips, and cash were sent up there in baskets riding on wires, checked by the cashier, wrapped, and returned in the basket to the starting point and turned over to the customer with whatever change was coming.

For many years the store was very successful, employing a dozen or more people. The Bass brothers made semiannual train trips to New York, the principal market for high style ready-to-wear for ladies. The Bass Brothers store, however, along with the rest of Cuero, was keenly affected by the depression and the consequent closing of the Runge Bank. The Cuero store closed in 1935. The Yoakum store remained open until 1941.

My father, F. Myron Bass, Sr., had been employed in the Cuero store since his graduation from Southwestern University in 1922. After the Bass Brothers store in Cuero closed in 1935, he opened the Bass Shoe Store at 108 East Main Street in Cuero. The initial capital required to start the store was $2,000 in borrowed funds. The store featured shoes manufactured by the Brown Shoe Company including Buster Brown shoes for children. Many styles in adult shoes sold for $2.98, and the most expensive shoes in the store sold for $4.95.

The business succeeded despite the depressed state of the economy in Cuero. Generations of Cuero families acquired their shoes there. Around 1940 the store was air conditioned, the first store in Cuero to have this feature. My father operated the store until 1966.

JANK BOTTLING WORKS

B9

Traugott Jank and Caroline (Jonischkies) with Jank soda pop bottles

Traugott Jank (1866-1952)

Yoakum, Texas

In late 1912 or early 1913, Traugott Jank purchased equipment from Ernest Hagens, moved it to his property on Hickey Street and Jank Bottling Works was established. It was a one-man operation, but produced many delightful memories for those who recall enjoying the root beer, orange, lemon, grape, strawberry and cola flavors that were produced. In those days, the beverage was referred to as "soda pop" due to the distinct popping sound made as the bottles were opened.

The bottling equipment was housed in a small building with a loft or partial second floor at the rear of the building where Traugott would mix his syrup. The various flavors were mixed as needed and the syrup was then gravity fed to the bottling machine which was located directly under the loft. This machine was hand-operated . . . a hand lever controlled the amount of syrup and carbonated water that went into the bottle. The bottle was then moved by hand to another part of the machine and a foot pedal was used to cap it . . . one bottle at a time. Then, again by hand, each bottle was placed into a case of twenty-four (6 oz.) bottles.

Jank first used a spring wagon and a horse to deliver his soda pop around Yoakum. Later, he delivered in a ½ ton Model-T Ford pick-up truck. Finally, he was said to have had a flatbed truck to deliver his carbonated beverages.

The "empties" were brought back to the bottling works for cleaning in semi-automatic bottle washer. The bottles were fed into the back by hand and came out the front clean.

Jank Soda Pop sold for a nickel a bottle during this first quarter of the twentieth century. It was sold wholesale for 80¢/case of 24 bottles.

One family story that cannot be confirmed, is that Traugott Jank paid a fine for putting saccharin in his soda pop. If he had been in operation a few more years, he could have made a fortune with this idea. However, in the fall of 1927, the building burned and the equipment inside was charred beyond repair and had to be "junked". The crowning blow came when a gentleman bought the remaining soda pop bottles by check and it bounced. This gentleman was not from the area and could never be located.

Thus ended 15 years of one small, but still remembered business in the history of one ton.

YORKTOWN NEWS BIO

James Walton Blanton (9/2/1873 - 2/13/1941) was born at Glenfawn, Rusk

County, Texas. As a young man he learned the printing trade and in 1895 he acquired the Yorktown Weekly News which had been in publication for a short time under Mr. Staples. In 1902, after selling the News to William Hausmann, Blanton founded the Nordheim View, publishing that paper until November 1, 1938.

William Hausmann (12/11/1837 – 5/12/1914) was born at Besingfeld, Lippe-Detmold, Germany and came to Texas in 1848. The family settled on a farm at Meyersville. After Civil War service in Sibley's Brigade and later under General Green in Louisiana, Mr. Hausmann returned to Meyersville and established a general merchandise store at Clinton. He moved to Cuero in 1873 and built the first business house of Main Street. In 1892 he moved to Runge, then in 1898 moved to Yorktown. Four years later, he bought the Yorktown News from Mr. Blanton. He continued publication of the news until 1912, when he sold it to G.R. Beckham.

The paper applied for its telephone in mid 1912 and received phone number 143. On August 22, 1912, the paper celebrated its eighteenth birthday and began its nineteenth volume. At that time, the subscription price was $1.00 per year. Later in 1912 the paper published an advertisement offering a Chicago Stop Cylinder press and an old style Gordon 8x12 jobber press for sale. These had been in use up to June 1, 1912. By May 22, 1913 a Babcock Reliance press had been installed and remained in operation until a Goss Cox-O-Type press was installed. The issue of December 15, 1971 was the first to be printed on this Goss press.

On February 27, 1913 the News moved into a new building leased from Mrs. Strieber and located on South Church Street just north of the Yorktown Lumber Yard. Construction was done by Contractor H.R. Gohlke. This building is still occupied by the Yorktown News.

In May, 1914 the News installed a paper folder. An article published on May 7 of that year stated that the paper then had a "fairly well equipped print shop, the one thing lacking being a modern typesetting machine." Mr. Beckham had previously observed of an intertype machine in operation at Runge and a Linotype machine was acquired later. The paper folder continued until early 1912, when a new Sidney folder was ordered. This folder attached to the press and was capable of folding up to twelve pages.

The News's statement of ownership as of April 1, 1915 showed the Editor, Managing Editor, Business Manager and Publisher to be G.R. Beckham. Mrs. Wm. Hausmann was listed as holding some "bonds, mortgages or other securities". The November 18, 1920 edition listed G.R. Beckham as Editor and Publisher and Paul A. Schmidt as Associate Editor.

Mr. Beckham operated the newspaper until June 1, 1951, when he relinquished control to Glenn Orville Beckham and to F.M. Pieper, who had been associated with the News for some years as a linotype operator.

Glenn O. Beckham (11/6/22 - 3/5/55), a native Yorktowner, studied journalism at the University of Texas until 1942, when he enlisted in the Air Corps. After his discharge in 1946, he joined the staff of the Yorktown News.

The June 7, 1951 issue of the News listed F.M. Pieper and G.O. Beckham as Publishers; F.M. Pieper, Editor; G.O. Beckham, Advertising and Business Manager; Eleanor Beckham, Circulation Manager; Joe Pieper Social Events Editor.

After Glenn Beckham's unexpected and untimely death, Fred and Jo Pieper bought Mrs. Eleanor Beckham's interest in the News and became sole owners. The staff was composed of Mrs. Emily Iris Showalter, office assistant, Miss Helen Gips, make-up and job printing, assisted by Bruce A. Beckham, who also was Mr. Pieper's understudy on the linotype.

On April 15, 1966 Mr. Pieper retired and sold the News to Lee Roy Griffin junior and Jo Ann Griffin. Mr. Griffin had joined the News staff in 1955, mastering all phases of the industry.

Every shop has its accidents and the least these can do is to waste time. Mr. Griffin referred to one of these in a brief article in the April 26, 1972 issue:

"After operating a linotype machine for the past 16 years, I got careless shortly after 9 PM Tuesday and got one of my fingers on my left hand smashed following a foul-up on the machine when I was attempting to fix it. After we got the bleeding to stop and the finger wrapped up, I found it difficult to operate with the bunged up finger, but did manage to get most of the copy set for this week's paper. Some items, however, did not get set and we may be a little later with the paper this week, but hope you will bear with us."

Whether this incident had anything to do with a future decision is questionable, but the fact is that the Griffins decided to keep up with progress and change from linotype to offset. They purchased a Compugraphic Execuwriter II from the Shiner Gazette to set all straight matter and a few ads. Then in September, 1979 a Compuwriter Jr. was purchased and put into use in December, 1979.

On June 6, 1987 the Yorktown News started using the computer system and purchased the necessary equipment including two Macintosh plus computers, two 800 K drives and connectors, a Laser Plus printer, along with a regular Apple computer printer, toner cartridge and two pagemakers. A Xerox copier was added in December, 1987.

In the last ten years the News has grown from a six or eight page paper to a weekly 12-20 page publication.

The News has received numerous meritorious service awards, including DeWitt County Soil & Water Conservation Newspaper Award (1977), Vocational Agriculture Teachers Association of Texas Distinguished Service Award (1979), Honorary Chapter Farmer, Yorktown Chamber of Commerce Business of the Month, VFW Service Award, National Safety Council Defensive Driving Award, and others.

Due to the cost of supplies, printing and postage, the yearly subscription rate has had to be steadily increased. It was once $1.00 per year. By 1952 it was $2.50 in DeWitt and adjoining counties and $3.00 elsewhere. By July, 1970 the price had risen to $3.00 per year locally and $3.50 elsewhere. Six years later it was $4.00 and $4.50. Effective March 1, 1982 the rate went to $7.00 in county and $8.00 elsewhere. In December 1985 the rate became $7.36 in county and $8.41 elsewhere, including taxes. In 1988 the in-county rate became $10.50, the out-of-county rate rose to $11.50 and the out-of-state rate was $12.50.

Unfortunately the issues of the News from its founding until 1912 have been lost. However, future losses of this nature are being guarded against. All of the back issues of the paper are being microfilmed, thus insuring greater permanence and a definite saving in storage space.

In 1966 when Lee Roy Griffin, Jr. and his wife bought the paper, Lee Roy was the youngest Editor in Texas.

GRIFFIN'S TINY MARKET

BI

Gus Hengst opened a grocery store and filling station in March 1939 north of Yorktown where the Rogge Gin was located at 731 N. Riedel St., Yorktown,, Texas. The establishment was called Midway Service Station.

In 1942 Mr. Hengst sold the business to Albert Bartram who operated it until August 1943, when Lee Roy Griffin, Sr. purchased the business. Soon after purchasing the business Mr. Griffin changed the name from Midway Service Station to Griffin's Grocery and then in the late 1950s to Griffin's Tiny Market.

When Lee Roy and his wife, Meta (Hengst) Griffin, operated the store they offered a full service station, groceries, beer and soda water and later they added fresh meats and produce. During the 1940s and 1950s they sponsored a butcher club where members took turns each week butchering a cow for fresh meat.

Mr. Griffin's motto was "If we ain't got it, we'll get it". Lee Roy and Meta made a lot of friends in operating the business for 36 years. They helped many a person through many rough times.

Due to Mr. Griffin's untimely death on July 4, 1979, their son, Lee Roy, Jr. and wife, Josephine Ann (Jo Ann) (Warzecha) Griffin, bought the business effective August 1, 1979. They continued running the business until August 1985 when they decided to close it due to the demands of their other business, The Yorktown News.

The building was leased to the Assembly of God Church in 1987 and then to Gary Boldt and Debbie Krause as B&K Tiny Market for several months at the end of 1988.

The building is now vacant and is up for sale or lease.

GIPS T.V.

B12

Gips T.V., originally called, Gips & Leggett, was owned and operated by Clifton E. Gips and W.R. (Ray) Leggett and started business in May, 1946. The business was purchased from H.B. Caddell and was located in the Brueggman Building on Esplanade St. In May of 1947, Clif and Ray bought the adjacent building from Means Furniture store, the present site of Gips T.V., 211 N. Esplanade. Mr. Means moved his furniture store across the street into a building (the Flick Bldg.) and is the present site of Means Furniture.

Prior to this business venture, Clif and Ray had both served in the Armed Services. Clif was in Personnel Services in the Army and stationed at Fort MacArthur, San Pedro, Calif. Ray was in the 5th Air Force Division – Squadron 240 and was stationed in the South Pacific – New Guinea. He was an electronics operator. After the Peace Treaty with Japan was signed and World War II was over they both returned to Cuero, Ray in Nov. of 1945 and Clif in April of 1946.

The business began as a small Radio and Appliance Service Store. At this time T.V. was becoming more popular and affordable and they started selling Philco, Zenith and Motorola, T.V.'s. To get any kind of reception you had to have an antenna and they installed these. Stereos, sewing machines, cabinets, and other small appliances were added.

In 1972, because of a serious illness, Ray sold his share of the business to Clif and Grace Gips. The continued to run the store and in 1975 their son, Don, joined them as the service manager. Don had completed his Naval Training, graduated from Southwest Texas in San Marcos, and had two years of T.V. electrical training at the Univ. of Corpus Christi. (See C.E. Gips story).

Don is married to Antranette Shull, they have two sons, Doak Ross Gips and Clinton C. Henderson. In 1982, Don and his wife bought the business from Don's parents. Clif is semi-retired but continues to go t the store and does repair service on small appliances and sewing machines.

Don loves golf and is active in the Cuero Golf Assn and the Cuero Country Club golf tournaments. He likes football and baseball and is an avid drag-racing fan. Nette is an Aide at John C. MUSTANG MOTT STORE

B14

Midway between Cuero and Westhoff on Highway 87, Mustang Mott store is located, near a mott of live oak trees. Mustang Mott consists of a store, a saloon and a gas station. Our knowledge of history on the store is taken back to the owner of Herman Boethel. The previous owner was Berthold Hillen, but unable to find any dates on their ownership.

Mustang Moss was purchased by Dorothy E. (Kahlich) Pakebusch on June 19, 1944, while her husband Paul was serving in the U.S. Marines. Both Dorothy and Paul were residents of DeWitt County for their entire lives. Dorothy passed away July 24, 1973 followed by Paul on July 6, 1982. They made the store their life for 42 years.

Mustang Mott was a very friendly place to be. It was either a daily or weekly meeting place for many people of the community to play dominoes, cards, or just get together and talk. Dorothy and Paul never knew a stranger. They opened their home to anyone and everyone. They helped many people passing through to reach their destination by giving them food and gas, as well as a place to rest and relax.

After Paul passed away, preceded by the death of his wife Dorothy, the store was willed to their sons, Garland and Robert Pakebusch. Garland and his family reside in Cuero, while Robert and his family reside in Yoakum. The two brothers decided to sell the store. The store was then sold to Chuck and Ruby Morton in 1983 to the present.

The history behind the name of Mustang Mott is significant to a clump of live oak trees that stand to the west of the store, where a large drove of wild horses sought their protection from the heat of the summer and cold of winter. Also the wagon trains that hauled freight from Indianola to San Antonio used this area as a rest stop under the mott of trees.

Mustang Mott was the site for many Bar-B-Ques and a stopping place for the Rawhide Riders on the trip to San Antonio on the trail

KATIE'S DRESS SHOP

In December of 1946, Katie Turek bought Vlasta's Dress Shop in Yorktown from Vlasta Frels. She changed the name to Katie's Dress Shop. Katie bought the shop in order to support herself and her two daughters after the death of her husband, Albert J. Turek. She had prior experience in the retail business from working as a salesperson at B.A. Goodfriends and Nau's Dry Goods Store.

When Katie's opened it was located in a building on the south side of the 100 block of Main Street. The store remained at that location for twenty years. In the beginning Katie's Dress Shop actually covered the space in two buildings, but later the floor space was reduced and it was nestled next to The York theatre.

Katie's Dress Shop has always catered to the missy customer, but has also tried to provide youthful styles so that many junior customers could find sportswear, lingerie and accessories to suit their needs. The store has provided quality ready-to-wear at fair prices for women in Yorktown and the surrounding communi-

In the spring of 1961, Katie decided she no longer wanted the responsibility of doing the buying and the bookkeeping for the shop and she wanted to liquidate. Her daughter, Patty (Turek) Swenson, who had been in merchandising at Foley's in Houston before her marriage, expressed an interest in continuing the business. In July 1961, Patty and her sister, Shirley Turek, formed a partnership and purchased the business from their mother. Katie continued in the shop as resident manager and salesperson while Patty began performing the buying and bookkeeping from her home in Austin. Shirley, who lives in Wharton, has bee a relatively silent partner, but has helped in various capacities during store sales and the holiday season.

Katie's Dress Shop moved to the north side of Main Street when the Hinsey building was remodeled in 1965. This move tripled the floor space of the shop and provided a more modern facility for its customers.

Although Katie's Dress Shop has had a number of valuable part time employees over the years, Katie herself has stayed in the store much of the time. In fact, Patty discovers when she is working in the store that there is frequently disappointment when customers walk in and Katie is not there. Men customers like it when she knows their wives' sizes and women like the relaxed atmosphere in which they can shop and visit with an old friend.

CUERO JEWELRY SHOP

Cuero Jewelry Shop, on the first block of West Main Street, was owned by Jacob Alvarado from 1920 to about 1970. It was located behind the Buchel Bank. The two-story building was also occupied by Albert Fey's photography studio and by attorney, George Schleicher.

Jacob Alvarado had come to Cuero fleeing the Mexican Revolution of 1918. He was working in San Antonio when he heard there was a need for a watchmaker in Cuero. Working with him at the beginning was his young cousin, Frank Martinez, who later opened his own jewelry shop in Yorktown; and later he also owned all the original jukeboxes placed in businesses through south Texas. When his two sons, Gilbert and Robert, were growing up, Mr. Alvarado taught them watch repair as well, and they would help in the shop. He was taught his trade in Mexico by a watchmaker from Switzerland.

It was necessary to diversify during the depression years. Mr. Alvarado also sold and repaired Singer sewing machines, Victrolas, phonographs and music boxes. He carried the latest hits in phonograph records in both English and Spanish. Customers would listen to the records before purchasing. During the 1930s and 1940s, there were a lot of people milling around and walking on the downtown Cuero sidewalks, especially on Saturday nights. The people came in from "the country" to do their shopping and for recreation. Farm families enjoyed coming into the store on Saturdays to listen to their favorite records. Regular customers could buy their watches and jewelry on credit and could later also trade them in for a finer watch or ring. It was a known fact that Mr. Alvarado would loan money to those in need never expecting to be repaid.

In the 1930s on Sunday mornings after church, Mr. Alvarado would load a sewing machine, a phonograph, records and parts onto a small platform on the rear of his Dodge car. The family of 5 would drive on country roads visiting farm families to try to make sales. Sometimes, the Uresti ranch and grandparents in Nursery, near Victoria, would be visited on these Sunday outings. The return drive back to the "city" and 401 West French Street would be after dark.

In the 1940s, business bustled in Cuero during World War II when an airfield was established for the training of Army Air Force cadets. The cadets would come into town on Saturdays. There were two movie theaters in Cuero on Main Street. At this time, Cuero Jewelry Shop was distributor for Zenith products, record players and radios. No television at that time.

When the Alvarado family bought a house in southeast San Antonio, near downtown, in 1947, Mr. Alvarado commuted by bus to San Antonio every weekend after closing the shop on Saturday nights. He also had Port Lavaca Jewelry Shop at the De Leon Red and White Store on South Main Street in Port Lavaca during this period. With the introduction of battery-operated watches, watchmaking as a trade may soon be a thing of the past. Because of his age and ill health, Mr. Alvarado closed his shop in the 1970s. He died at the age of 86 in February 24, 1979, in San Antonio, Texas. His wife, Maclovia, 90, still resides in San Antonio and also his three children, Gilbert, Robert and Lois. Gilbert is owner of Alamo Furniture Company on 2916 Nogalitos Street in San Antonio.

DEWITT COUNTY ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE, INC.

Prior to the formation of DeWitt County Electric Cooperative very few of the rural folks of our area had electric service. And, chances of them ever getting central station electric service were very slim. Area cities and investorowned utilities just were not interested in extending electric service to the sparsely populated rural areas. Our area was not unique, most rural American were without electric service.

Seeing the need for a way to get electric power to the rural area, President Franklin Roosevelt signed Executive Order No. 7037 establishing the REA. A year the Rural Electrification Act, co-authored by Representative Sam Rayburn, was passed and the lending program that became the REA got under way.

In the late 30's across the nation electric cooperatives were being formed. In September of 1938 a group of rural citizens from our area met at the DeWitt County Courthouse in Cuero and laid the ground work for DeWitt County Electric Cooperative, Inc. Twelve men were selected from the group to serve as incorporating directors. Each incorporating board member was to represent four school districts as there were 48 school districts in DeWitt County at that time.

After the September meeting it became the responsibility of the twelve incorporating directors to go back to their respective districts and try to contact everyone in their district to sign a membership application and pay a $5.00 membership fee. This was not an easy job.

What was promised was so new and unexpected and something too good to believe. Some were suspicious of the whole thing. Others thought that to sign an application was giving a mortgage on their farms to pay the loans the board members were wanting to receive from the REA, and had to be convinced that this was not the case. The few that had Delco or gas lighting systems wanted to postpone joining until these were worn out or else to trade them in for wiring, etc.

The incorporating directors were Thos Shults – Cuero, R.D. Westphal – Yorktown, C.T. Matthew – Stratton, J.F. Elder – Cheapside, Albert Roth – Concrete, Louis Stapelfeldt – Hochheim Prairie, Henry Morisse – Cotton Patch, H.O. Angerstein – Meyersville, A.E. Schorlemer – Clinton, Joe Wishkaemper – Gruenau, W.F. Kahlich – Mustang Mott, and F.W. Schorlemer – Garfield. The incorporating directors and other members spent days on end going from farm to farm trying to convince their neighbors that the cooperative concept was a good think for all of them.

The incorporation board hired Mr. T.O. Buchel as their coordinator (Acting Manager). Mr. Buchel with the help of the Cuero Mayor J.T. Newman, got the Cooperative its first wholesale power contract from the Lower Colorado River Authority.

With enough memberships signed to make a loan application to REA, the first loan application was submitted. In March of 1939, the Cooperative's A Section Loan was granted, for the sum of $172,000, to construct 230 miles of line to serve 450 members. Construct 230 miles of that summer with the first members near Cuero receiving power for Christmas, 1939. In October, 1939, the B Section Loan was approved, followed by the C Section Loan in 1940. The Cooperative enjoyed steady growth until WWII at which time load funds were cut, materials were very limited, and the Cooperative growth came almost to a complete stand still.

It was during the war years that everyone could see just what electric power could and was doing to overcome the shortage of manpower on the farms. Everyone was ready to sign a membership and application for service from the Cooperative. In 1945 the Cooperative began to grow and applications began to come in from neighboring counties. The post-war years and the decade of the 50's were a time of rapid growth for the Cooperative. The basic backbone for our distribution system was built during this time. In 1954, the present headquarters building, warehouse, and pole yard were constructed at 909 E. Broadway, Cuero, Texas.

During the 60's, continued growth, and the membership addition of more applications and electrical load to the Cooperative system, kept us busy uprating our lines and services. Electricity was cheap. The agricultural and national economy were good and the Cooperative was again growing up leaps and bounds.

The 70's brought the energy crisis, and higher rates for electricity. Conservation and efficient use of energy became everyday words. Wholesale rates kept increasing, but our Cooperative continued to grow.

The past eight years of the 80's have brought still further change. The economy has slowed the Cooperative growth. Today we are striving for efficiency-cutting line losses, lowering outage time, and implementing a load management program (Peak Time Intermission) to get a better handle on wholesale power cost.

The Cooperative began an aggressive capital credit rotation program in 1980 with the goal of attaining a twenty year cycle in the rotation of capital credits in 1990. As of 1988 the Cooperative has returned $447,731.48 in capital credits to the membership. The goal of reaching a twenty year cycle is now very close and should be reached in the next two years. The next few years should also bring the completion of our remodeling of the Cooperative headquarter facilities as well as the distribution system with pole change-outs — with some poles being originals installed in 1939.

The challenges that faced the twelve incorporating directors were unique, but the board of directors of our Cooperative have always been faced with challenge, and will remain the case in the future. Whenever you own and operate your own business and are not faced with challenge, you are not doing anything.

Over the past 50 years, 69 different members have served on the Board of Directors.

Since the incorporating boards hiring of Mr. Buchel as our coordinator in 1938, we've had three General Managers, Charlie Beck, 1938-1945, Fain McDougal, 1945-1980, and Jim Springs, 1981 to present.

Our Cooperative now serves in excess of 6080 meters over 2043 miles of line. We serve members in DeWitt and six adjoining counties. We're a $15,000,000 business with 37 employees.

DOLL HOUSE

B18

"Cuero's Favorite Meet and Eat Place", better known as the Doll House, was started by Mr. Rollie Brantley and his brothers. One of Mr. Brantley's brothers, Mule, bought it from a man named Shorty Tucker, an ex-jockey, for a whole twenty-five dollars. After the sale was completed, the Brantley brothers discovered Shorty Tucker still owed the original owner twenty-five dollars, so they had to pay a total of fifty dollars for the future Doll House.

DeWitt County Electric Co-op 1989

Doll House 1935

Originally Mr. Raymond Cook built the Doll House, known then a Spanish Gardens. The first location was twenty feet back toward Brantley's Service Station. At this time the cafe was just a small place – 18X10 or seven foot square. It had one dining room and two tables.

When the Brantley brothers purchased "Spanish Gardens" from Mr. Tucker, the building was approximately twelve feet square and had a counter in front of it. The customers would walk up to the front of the building and their food would be served through an open window, something similar to the "old hamburger stands." In May of 1935, Rollie Brantley graduated from high school and decided to take over the operation of the cafe. At this time the "meet and eat place" had a two burner stove and a grill. The eating places of this day served mainly hamburgers and Coca-Cola. Just as the Cokes were kept cold, so was the hamburger meat. The hamburger patties were kept in Coca-Cola boxes on ice.

The question of a name came up so Mr. Brantley put an ad in the Cuero Record – prize to be five dollars – for the best name. Polly Howerton's idea of a name was chosen – The Doll House – because the building was so little.

The Mr. Brantley decided to remodel his cafe. He wanted the "new" cafe to be back further from the road so the customers could park in the front. One morning, however, when he came to survey the new beginning, Rollie found a concrete slab next door laid near the road so his "new" building needed to match that slab. That's why there is no parking in front of the Doll House today.

The menu of the Doll House then, as compared to today, contained a couple of the same items, but the prices show no comparison. The first plate lunch was 35¢; the hamburgers were a nickel and Coca-Cola and chewing gum were always a nickel. In the early 1930's beer was sold at 15¢ a bottle or two for 25¢. During World War II, Mr. Brantley could get about thirty to forty steaks at a time. At this time Brayton Air Base in Cuero housed quite a few Cadets, and on Saturdays, they would come to eat at the Doll House and before Mr. Brantley could get started for the day, all his T-bone steaks were gone.

There were no cafeterias or fast food places so all the students came to eat at the Doll House during lunch on school days. Mr. Brantley made sure there were plenty of hamburgers and cokes for the students. The kids used to sit in booths that had varnished wood-top tables. A favorite pasttime while eating lunch, was to carve their initials in the wood tops. As the years went by so many students carved their initials that the tops became too rough to even set a drinking glass on. Mr. Brantley decided to refinish the table tops and also had the idea of an initial board. In each booth he hung a board on a chain so the students could carve their initials on that. He said no one ever touched the tops with a knife again! Occasionally someone would enjoy the initial board so much, they took it with them. Mr. Brantley just hung up another one for a new set of initials.

All of the changes at the Doll House have taken place in a span of forty-eight years. Many people have eaten at the Doll House; people stopping as they drove through Cuero, such as salesmen and politicians. Even the Lone Ranger of the radio, who at that time was sixty five or seventy years old, stopped in and ate. As Mr. Brantley states: "The place is more of an institution than a business – everybody comes back to the Doll House!"

CITY MEAT MARKET

The City Meat Market of Yoakum, Texas is presently located at 518-24 Lott Street occupying two buildings that were constructed by 1910 by S.A. Carnes. The meat market was originally established in 1921 at 520 Lott by Emil Herder and Otto Colle, in the building that previously housed the National Drug Store. In 1923 it was sold to Ed and Ernest Steinmann and B. Flint. The Steinmanns gave their interest in it to Mr. Flint in 1925 and he remained in business for some time. Mr. Grover Harrell also owned the meat market sometime before 1928.

In 1928 Charles B. Kaiser acquired the business and soon after, his brother, L.W. Kaiser, became his partner. They bought live cattle, mostly beef, also hogs and sheep and had them slaughtered at Thiele's Slaughter House about a mile west of Yoakum. They cooked BBQ and sold it at the back of the building, mostly for working men; ladies did not eat there. Market employees served as waiters.

In 1934 Kermit M. Thiele, L.W. Kaiser's brother-in-law, bought the meat market. He continued the business as it was, plus curing ham and bacon and making beef and pork

L.H. "Big" Kaiser, L.W. Kaiser's son, owned and operated the meat market from 1944 until 1948, continuing Mr. Thiele's operation.

In February, 1948, Leslie C. Kaiser, "Big's" brother, and R.M. Hagan bought the City Meat Market. Leslie C. Kaiser was manager of the business until 1983, when he became sole owner. In 1952 a walk-in freezer was installed, adding processing of fresh beef, pork and lamb for home freezers. In 1962 the adjoining building at 518 Lott was leased from the Carnes Estate and the retail meat business was moved to this location, and a BBQ Restaurant was added with a lunch menu and two waitresses: so that ladies could also enjoy the BBQ. This building, also constructed about 1910 by S.A. Carnes, had previously housed a domino hall managed by Claude Hoover and the Texas Bar and Cafe owned and managed by Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Zacharias and later owned and managed by Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd O'Neill.

In 1971 the City Meat Market acquired the building on the other side of the original building, which is 524 Lott, the corner building. This building, we believe, always housed a grocery business — The Farmer's Co-op, Witte and Wunderlich, Neely Brothers, Neely and Dickinson and finally E.E. Dickinson Grocery. The meat market also expanded to include a line of groceries. At the same time, the meat market applied for and was granted the status of Meat Inspection Plant No. 245.

In 1973 Floyd Dickinson leased the front part of the building at 518 Lott Street and moved his Barber Shop there. He and Mr. Otis Hermes cut hair there until Mr. Hermes retired about 1984, and Mr. Dickinson still is in business there.

In 1974 the plant was partially destroyed by fire. It was rebuilt and opened for business as usual, three months later.

Now the meat market consists of a wholesale and retail meat market, state inspected, a BBQ Restaurant and a grocery store. The market specializes in country style pork, beef and head sausage, weiners, boneless ham and dry cured bacon. The restaurant specializes in real pit BBQ and side dishes with full service. The business employs fifteen people, and has been in the Kaiser Family for 57 years, spanning three generations since Paul Ross Kaiser, Leslie's son, is now owner of the business, since Leslie's retirement in 1-89.

FIFTEEN MILE TELEPHONE COMPANY

The Fifteen Mile Telephone Company did not run on computers. In November of 1913, a group of neighbors in the Upper Meyersville area of DeWitt County met to form a group of "rules" for the telephone company. According to the minutes of the meeting, it was motioned and seconded by all members that if any person wanted to join the Fifteen Mile Telephone Company, they must pay twenty dollars. They would also have to "stand" his own expense and build his own line to the main line. The payment he makes is to join the line. After the person has paid the sum of twenty dollars and has built his own line to the main line, he is considered a full member.

These minutes of the phone company were kept by Michael J. Bluntzer who was the secretary. The next entry was entitled, "Not to move the Line". "If any one of the members should happen to get angry or contrary against the Fifteen Mile Telephone Company and would want them to move the line off his land, a deal like that should not be lawful. The line should stay where it was built." If all members agree please sign here! Signed: J. Gregorzcyk, Louis Migura, L.C. Bluntzer, A. Jendry, M.J. Bluntzer, August Duderstadt, J.A. Moeller, Peter Bomba, and J.B. Arnold.

On November 30, 1913, three directors were elected: Louis Migura, Adam Gentry, and Joe Gregorzcyk. They were elected "for the purpose to keep the line in good shape." If the line was broken or down, the directors were supposed to fix it.

August 15, 1914 said that by a vote of all members of the company, August Duderstadt and Peter Bomba had become full members. They also agreed that if any of the sub-lines were ruined or out of order, all members should help fix them and pay "pro-rata" on expenses.

April 26, 1920, L.C. Bluntzer, Louis Migura, P. Bomba, Tom Jendry, Joe Gregorzcyk, Adam Jendry, M.J. Bluntzer and Aug. Duderstadt each contributed 25¢ for some unstated purpose.

On April 1, 1928, J.B. Arnold paid twenty dollars for a membership on the line and on April 4, 1928, Adam Jendry and Otto Bluntzer got some materials.

On August 6, 1934, a meeting was held and the following were present. J.B. Arnold, L.C. Bluntzer, Adam Jendry, Peter Bomba, B. Danish and M.J. Bluntzer.

Motioned and carried that each member pay two dollars for repairs. They had a balance of five dollars and ninety five cents. When the two dollars per person was added they had a balance of seventeen dollars and ninety five cents. Mr. R.S. Bammert added another two dollars.

On November 9, 1938 when the balance on hand was six dollars and forty cents, Philip Jendry, Adam Jendry, Wm. Westhoff, L.C. Bluntzer and M.J. Bluntzer had bills for various repairs. Each member contributed two dollars and ninety five cents so they could pay the company bills.

The last date entered in the minute book was for September 13, 1944. Bell Telephone Company came to Meyersville but they wouldn't use the lines of Fifteen Mile Telephone Company and insisted the people buy the lines from them. Some of the members were very bitter about this. They resisted Bell Telephone for a long time and continued to maintain their own lines.

SOEHNGE DO IT CENTER

Soehnge Do-It Center

J. Lee Fawcett Lbr. Co.

Soehnge Do-It Center, formerly J. Lee Fawcett Lumber Co., located at 408 West Grand, Yoakum, Texas, was begun in 1947 by J. Lee Fawcett. The business was run by him until his death in February 1968. Ownership was then taken over by his daughter and son-in-law, Judy and Charles Soehnge.

For many years the company has specialized in custom-built homes. Both Lee and Charles have drawn plans for numerous Yoakum homes.

The business has been remodeled and expanded many times through the years. The business joined HWI, a member owned co-op in 1982, in order to offer an expanded line of products at a better price. The Do It Center concept is a result of this association.

An extensive remodeling was begun in March 1985. The new concept emphasizes products for the do-it-yourself customer. Lumber and building products are still available also. The grand opening for the newly remodeled and renamed business was held October 3, 4 and 5 of 1985.

The owners decided to change the name to Soehnge Do-It Center to fit the new image and because of the association of their sons, Charles Lee and David with the business.

THE PEEBLES-ALEXANDER RANCH

Lying on the west bank of the Guadalupe River in northwest DeWitt Co., the Peebles-Alexander Ranch consists of the Churchill Fulcher League of land plus parts of the John Harwood Survey and a bit of the Graves Fulcher. The abstract on this land makes interesting reading and gives insights on the trials of the family which has lived here for the past one hundred and forty years.

Peebles-Alexander Ranch Headquarters

First there is the deed granting this land to Churchill Fulcher by Coahuilla and Texas. It is signed by Jose Antonio Navarro, Special Commissioner for the distribution of land, is translated from the Spanish, and is dated April 1831, in the town of Gonzales. Then a deed dated May 1, 1849, conveys this land from C. Fulcher to Robert Peebles.

Dr. Robert Peebles and his wife Mary (Trigg) Peebles built a two story frame house on this property across the river from the town of Concrete, which was reached by fording the river. Mary died in 1853 before completing her signature on a will which would have left her entire estate to her husband, and although the act of her signing was witnessed by A.J. Hodge (her attending physician) and S.F. Hester (probably an attorney), the document did not stand up in court. Therefore, her half of the community property was divided between her husband and her many brothers and sisters or their surviving children. This resulted in Dr. Peebles' having to purchase the interests of the other heirs.

Not much is known today of the activities of Dr. Peebles on his land except that the pastures were unfenced and his cattle grazed on the open range. He seems to have had a mill somewhere on the river or on Fulcher's Creek as an old account book shows charges for grinding corn into meal and sawing wood into lumber. Fulcher's Creek originally meandered across the broad floodplain of the river valley, but Dr. Robert, using slave labor and teams of oxen, had a new channel cut going more directly to the river, thus leaving the large field of the floodplain undivided.

On the ranch is a large grove of liveoaks which has traditionally been called Buck's Mott. Since there were no deer in this country until recent years, the origin of the mott's name was a mystery until neighbors (the Elders) told us that one of the oxen used in changing the creek bed was named Buck. It seems that he was a very good worker until he got hot; then he would break out of his chains and run away to hide in a certain large mott of oaks. After allowing Buck time to get cooled down, someone would go to the mott and bring him back. Hence that grove of trees became known as Buck's Mott.

The years of the War Between the States brought many hardships to the Peebles family. Although Dr. Peebles was too old to serve in the Confederate Army and his son was a mere baby, the war drained people of all wealth but land, which had little value. The old abstract tells us that in 1867 Dr. Peebles was unable to pay a sum of $583 owed to A. Glenn & Co., causing a judgement to be laid on one league of his land. It was, therefore, offered for sale on the steps of the courthouse in Clinton by the Sheriff of DeWittCo., where it was sold to the highest bidder. Thomas Rawlings of New Orleans, La. bought the land for $1320; and since he was an uncle of young John Peebles (and may have come to Texas solely for the purpose of saving the land), Mr. Rawlings promptly deeded the property to his young nephew.

Dr. Peebles died in 1871. His son, John, grew up owning the land, but upon reaching maturity, deeded half his acres over to his sister, Kate. It was during John's lifetime that the land was fenced.

When John Peebles died in 1904, his young widow, Warrenetta Blake Peebles (see Blake Family), was left to raise six children and run the ranch. In 1905 or 6 she hired Blake Alexander, a young nineteen year old man from Cuero, to come take care of the cattle. He and Mrs. Peebles eventually formed a partnership, together with her youngest son, Pat. They bought adjoining land as it became available and even purchased a ranch in Jackson Co., which Pat operated for many years.

In 1914 Blake married Fannie Peebles, Warrenetta's daughter. They continued to make their home on the ranch with Fannie's mother, and to them was born one child, Elizabeth Blake Alexander.

Good times and bad came to the ranch. More bad, we fear! Drought, flood, the Great Depression — each brought its hardships. The ranch house caught fire several times - usually on a cold winter night. Mr. Blake (as he was generally addressed) always called all the "hands" and put the fire out with hoses, buckets, and the old milk can before the fire truck arrived from Cuero.

Many families of workers lived on the ranch through the years. Some were Colored, some Mexican. Among the former were Stewarts (the only ones that we know to be descended from Dr. Peeble's slaves), Bishops, Glovers, Franklins, McClouds, Steens, Thomases, and Hendersons. The men worked as cowhands and each farmed a piece of land. The Mexican families lived in the "Quarter", a row of houses along the edge of the fields in the river valley. They farmed on shares raising cotton, corn, maize, and hay. Among these families were De La Cruz, Salazar, Rivera, and Martinez. Many children grew up here.

Warrenetta lived until 1959 at age ninety, having held the land for 55 years. Both Blake and Fannie died in 1966. During his management of 60 or 61 years, Blake had bred the original common cattle over to "White Face" by using good Hereford bulls. Then because of trouble with photosynthesis, he switched to Black Angus cattle. In later years buyers wanted cross-bred calves, so his daughter Elizebeth (the present owner) has put Brahman bulls with the Angus cows, producing F-1 Brangus and is using Simmental bulls with the Brangus cows she has raised.

Elizabeth's son, Blake Muir, works with her on the ranch; and her daughter, Patricia Muir, who inherited Pat Peebles' land and cattle, manages her part of the old Peebles Ranch.

(the Yoakum paper was officially mailed in Lavaca County), and the innovations at the View included expansion of offset facilities, word processing and computer equipment. All nine of the Janacek children - four boys and five girls - participated in the newspaper printing endeavor and the family also published The Kenedy Times for a period of six years before its sale to Westcom. The family continues to publish various historical booklets, church and family histories and most recently published the History of Yorktown, Texas. Many of their children have found residences in the Yorktown area and one son is serving his third term as Chamber of Commerce president, as all continue to claim Yorktown home.

Janacek, a native of Liberty County, Texas, is an honor graduate of Dayton High School, Class of 1944, and attended Texas A&M on a valedictorian's scholarship. Following a tenure of service with the Signal Corps during World War II, he was employed by Malec Publishing Co. in Hallettsville in 1947 where his career in journalism was launched. Mrs. Janacek is the former Mary Ann Peter, a great granddaughter of the founding Peter family of Dubina, known as the first Czech settlement in Texas. The Peters family came to Texas in 1856, prior to the Civil War. Mrs. Janacek's family was also associated with Czech publisher A. Haidusek in LaGrange, who published the Svoboda which was later acquired by the late Sen. Culp Krueger and continued publication in El Campo. Aside from her work with newspapers, she was a devoted mother to her nine children all of whom are finding a niche for themselves in the world.

W.K. Hill was born in 1879 at Little Rock, Arkansas and died in Houston, Texas in 1950. He learned the canvas business from his brother-in-law in Arkansas. His children attended school in Cuero. THE JOHN JANACEK FAMILY: DE WITT COUNTY VIEW PUBLISHERS SINCE 1970

The DeWitt County View, established in Nordheim in June of 1902 as the Nordheim View, by James Walter Blanton, was acquired by John and Mary Ann Janacek of Yoakum on January 1, 1970. They purchased the weekly from the partnership of Publishers Paul Schmidt and his sister, Jane Morisse. The View plant was moved to Yorktown in June of 1951 by the late Publishers and was named the Herald-Times but prior to that was managing editor since 1955 and had charge of publishing three of Malec's newspapers at the Yoakum plant, which also had a large commercial printing department.

At Yorktown, the View soon became the first newspaper printed offset in DeWitt County

FARMBILT MILLS

B26

Farmbilt Mills - Elevators built by A.W. Schaffner in 1954. Capacity - approx. 60 carloads of grain.

Three veterans, after World War II, pooled their savings, borrowed some money, and bought the Buchel Gin Building and went into the feed business. They were A.W. Schaffner, P.G. Schnaffner, and Leon T. Kruse. They worked very hard, especially, like breaking concrete to convert the gin building into what they wanted.

A.W. was experienced in feeds, being poultry specialist and resale person for Uncle John Mills of Houston. P.G. and Leon went into World War II very young. A.W. was given his job back after he returned from World War II. P.G. served in the Army and Leon served in the Air Corp. A.W. served in the Marines.

After purchasing the Buchel Gin Property and much hard work the Veterans opened their first venture, a feed store, November 9, 1945 their ad said "Announcing The Opening of Farmers Supply Co. A complete line of Uncle Johnny Feeds" "A Feed for Every Need."

At first, P.G. and Leon took care of the feed store and A.W. kept on working for Uncle Johnny Feeds, but then the work got too much and T.G. and Leon asked that A.W. quit his job to help them. This he did and soon they were making their own feeds also.

Soon the feed made by this firm was named Farmbilt. In 1948 the mill expanded. Feeds were turkey feed, dairy feed, poultry feed, and swine feed. A pellet machine was bought. After four years a new addition was added. In 1952 the mill bought additional property for a hammer mill. An additional half block bordering the present Farmbilt Mills was purchased. After only seven years in operation the mill had a capacity of 80 tons per day, sacked and ready for delivering. Forty eight types of feed were mixed. Another $11,500 addition was added to Farmbilt.

Seven large storage bins were completed in 1954, each 21½ feet in diameter and 60 feet in height capable of holding 110 bushels or 60 railroad carloads of grain. This provided for storage and drying. This had been a long felt need for this area. Farmbilt Mills did much to aid the welfare and economical progress of Cuero and DeWitt County.

The first expansion took place in 1948. In 1950 it was incorporated, then in 1954 the grain elevators were added.

The three veterans took in some partners in 1958-59. A new manager was Dick Stegall, then replaced by H.G. (Rip) Scarbrough. By 1962 the three veterans were no longer connected with Farmbilt Mills.

The Farmbilt Mill Property and Grain Elevators are still in use under the name of Allied Feeds, Inc. Although there is no Farmbilt or is it owned by the three veterans, that which they built in use and still serves Cuero and DeWitt County after 43 years.

THE YOAKUM HERALD-TIMES UNDER MALEC PUBLISHING CO.

B27

Walter Malec - Yoakum Herald-Times Publisher

(1945-1970)

Yoakum Herald-Times Publisher Walter Malec (1887-1975), head of the Malec Publishing Company which published the Yoakum semiweekly and six other newspapers in this area, was a staunch defender of the small farmers and small businessman. His journalistic career which was fashioned around Hungarianborn Publisher Joseph Pulitzer of Pulitzer Prize fame, was influenced also by such notables as William Jennings Bryan, the silvertongued orator, whose quote, "Destroy our farms and the grass will grow on the streets of our cities", he used in his newspapers. His slogan with the Tribune-Herald in Halletsville was "The community and whole country stand or fall with the farmers".

Malec was one of the few remaining foreignborn leaders who knew the true value of American freedom and did his best to protect and promulate its attributes. He was outspoken against Communism and his Czeck publication, Novy Domov, was denied circulation in that country. It would be a tremendous joy for him to witness in 1989 the crumblings of this menace once threatening the entire Free World.

Malec acquired the Yoakum Herald-Times from the Meister family after World War II and continued its publication until the summer of 1970 after which it was sold to a corporation by Buddy Preiss and Franklin Kasper of Giddings. Its sale also was the end to hot type newspaper publishing as the Herald and its sister publications, also purchased by the new owners, went offset. During the first years under Malec, the Herald-Times was managed by the owner's son, Joseph Malec. In the susmmer of 1955 management of the newspaper went to John E. Janacek who at the time was managing editor of the Moulton Eagle, one of the seven Malec Publications. Under Janacek the newspaper expanded its circulation to nearly 3,500 paid subscribers, increasing by more than a thousand, and commercial printing was expanded through offset equipment. At one time the Herald-Times had a larger commercial printery than even those in neighboring Victoria, employing over twenty people, due largely to the Yoakum leather industry. Three of the seven Malec publications were printed and published at the Yoakum plant with Janacek as managing editor, Leo Brier as city editor, Joseph Netardus serving as photographer, Rosemond Nollkamper office manager, Edgar Findeisen head of commercial printing and Calvin Lockstedt in charge of production. The commercial shop was later terminated under the new owners and by the mid-1980s only the DeWitt County View in Yorktown, owned by the Janacek family, was the only newspaper-operated printery in DeWitt County. Local book publishing was a specialty with the company as local histories were preserved especially for parishes. St. Joseph's Parish, Yoakum, Texas, 1869-1969 was co-authored by Janacek, one of several other books compiled during his publishing career. (See DeWitt County View).

The Gulf Coast Tribune (Ft. Bend County), was started by Malec in February of 1961 and published at the Yoakum plant along with the Ganado Tribune with Janacek serving as managing editor for the three publications. The company also published the The KJZT News, official organ of the Czech Catholic Women's Organization. Malec fought the KJZT move out of Yoakum where the organization was founded in 1897, one of three insurance associations with roots in DeWitt County. On advice of their legal counsel after a tax issue with the Yoakum School District appeared unresolved, directors voted to move the headquarters from Yoakum, first to Granger and later to Austin where the multi-milliondollar family fraternal is now located. Meanwhile, the two farm mutuals founded in DeWitt - Hochheim Mutual and Garfield Farm Mutual - remained in the area. Malec deeply regretted this loss of the fraternal for the Yoakum community, especially since the insurance firms are tremendous assets to the com-

Malec's interests also included Texas history from the Revolution. He was a member of the State Historical Survey Association and the Sons of the Republic. On January 16, 1968, the Texas Historical Survey Committee and the Texas Historical Foundation presented the 1967 award for Historical preservation to the Malec Publishing Co. As early as May 14, 1943, the Texas Legislature in a resolution commended Malec, stating in part: "his great interest in the history of Texas, where he made his home, he became an authority on its local history and particularly in the location of graves of the early Texas heroes who are buried in that area." Malec was also instrumental in furthering and preserving the Czech Culture in Texas through his Novy Domov and The KJZT News.

Publisher Malec was known among the Czech people throughout the United States for his part establishing the Czech gymnastic association known as the Sokols (Falcons). In his early manhood he traveled over the country, including Texas, in training young men and women in the arts of gymnastics. But this type of athletics was never popular in the U.S. where baseball and football prevails. Malec did not favor a few players on the field while thousands only cheered.

Malec, born in Ruda, Moravia, Czechoslovakia,, Sept. 3, 1887, died at his residence in Hallettsville on July 10, 1975 at the age of 87 years. It was on Feb. 14, 1909, in Omaha, Nebraska, he married Anna Smisek who preceded him in death on March 12, 1965. At the time of his death he was survived by a son, Tribune-Herald Publisher Richard Malec; four daughters, Miss Anna Malec and Mrs. Lawrence Rothbauer, both of Hallettsville, Mrs. Lawrence T. Biehunko of Moulton and Mrs. William D. Pearson of Austin; and two brothers, Joe Malec, Sr. of Omaha and Bob Malec of California and numerous grandchildren.

Publisher Malec was in newspaper publishing for 45 years. He wrote his final Line or Two column the morning of his death.

BOHNE MEAT MARKET

On December 16, 1889, Henry Bohne, Sr. bought the red brick building at 119 West Main Street in Cuero, Texas from John T. Wofford. Bohne and his son, Fritz, occupied the building with a boot and shoe repair shop while Henry Bohne, Jr., also a son, was in the meat business in partnership with W.I. Anderson at 201 E. Main Street, the current location of Cuero City Hall. Later, the partnership was dissolved.

Bohne moved into the 119 W. Main address which was partitioned to share the building with his father and brother. Later years the Boot Shop moved to 138 E. Main Street, which was last owned by Fritz's son, Floyd Bohne, who followed his forefathers shop-made boot business until his death.

Grandpa Bohne, a native of Germany, is remembered walking to Main Street from his home on Newman Street at South Line Street to visit each son and his business every day. He continued to do this after his sons' deaths until shortly before his own death in 1937 at the age of 97.

Bohne Meat Market - Fred Bohne, Eddie Fuchs, Harry Holster, Mitchel Strait, Alphonce Sheffler.

After the floor space was available the market installed a walk-in cooler (or cold storage). Also, tables and chairs were arranged to serve lunches of hot beef sausage every day. Cowboy stew was served on Wednesday, barbecue was served on Friday and Saturday, which also sold over the counter and at the back entrance.

After the death of Papa Bohne in 1930, his son, Fred, and son-in-law, Albert "Abb" Mueller, having been connected with the business for many years, continued the business in partnership.

During that time Bonnie Harrison rented the space in front of the large meat counter for a grocery business. After he retired the market continued to carry staple groceries to accommodate customers.

Also, at one time the market rented and operated the refrigerated meat counter in the building on the corner of East Main Street and Gonzales Street, now known as the Crain building. It was used by the M System Grocery business before W.T. McLarty owned the store at that location. The meat business was independent of the grocery business. Meat was cut at the market and taken there every morning and retailed by meat owners and employees alternating serving shoppers in the grocery store. After Mr. McLarty closed the store, meat was no longer sold at that location.

Bohne and Mueller dissolved partnership due to Abb's health and other interests. Freddie, as he was known by many, was then sole owner, until his death in 1962. His widow, Marguerite Bohne, continued the business as owner eight years with the help of Alfonce Scheffler as manager. Fonce, now deceased, was an employee more than fifty years having begun as a teenager.

There was more to the meat business years ago than selling meat. Following is a slight insight of proceedings in order to have fresh quality meat. Cattle and hogs were bought on foot by owner riding horse back, and later in a car, driving many miles to a pastures and ranches to select range fat cattle.

E.A. Tully owned a slaughter house at the end of West Heaton Street where animals were driven or hauled to be dressed, then taken in quarters to Cudahy Packing Company and cold storage. E.C. Hesse was manager for many years. Storage space was rented and the meat quarters were brought to the market as needed in a two wheel cart with man power, until pickup trucks were available.

Cattle often were butchered by our helpers on property of land owners who were equipped for slaughtering and at times were dressed under a tree using a limb as a derrick. My father, Bill Holzapfel, several times fed calves that were dressed there by our helpers, since he was set up for butchering for a meat club in the Five Mile Community.

At one time the business leased acreage with a house for help to live in, to feed cattle and supervise butchering in an improvised slaughter house. John Junker, a dependable young man and his wife, Minnie, nee Demmer. now both deceased, lived on the place. They and all our helpers were friends we remember most kindly.

At that time the business owned a one ton Ford truck for hauling cattle and transporting dressed quarters to our own cold storage. There was much competition in Cuero in the meat business. At one time we counted more than a dozen businesses that sold meat. Our market specialized in making homemade pork sausage, the popular hot beef sausage, and liver sausage until the seasoning no longer was available for the latter. Another service to customers who made their own sausage was to grind their meat and sell them pork or beef to add if needed. Also, they bought casings and seasonings. During deer season hunters brought in meat to cool and have processed. Some had deer and pork sausage made by our helpers.

In more recent years packing house meat was required by the State Meat Inspection Act. The work load was lighter and less help was needed. Scheffler, being a judge of good meat and being an excellent meat cutter, at times refused to accept meat delivered by packers and would reorder.

The market did credit and delivery business at a loss and gain. Statements were not mailed but on the first of every month someone in the family would walk the business streets and residential areas to collect. It was amusing to see other business collectors out each month carrying a money bag and folder full of bills. After cars were available, transportation was faster and easier.

Teenage boys were always available for delivering. Freddie, as a teenager, delivered meat every morning, including Sunday, rain or shine. He used a horse and two wheel cart which had a step built on the back to stand on. Deliveries were in the cool of the day, before school. Many customers at that time did not have refrigeration, nor a telephone, so would order from day to day. Later a car was used which saved time and the labor of feeding a horse. Then deliveries were made at 10 A.M. and 4 P.M.

To name a few boys who worked in the market and also delivered during vacation time and on Saturday were: Muller's son, Albert, Jr., a nephew, Irvin Buesing, my nephews, Alton, Harold, Billy and Gene Holzapfel, also J.W. and Charles Pieper, Sheffler's son, Kenneth, and Shelton and Kirby, sons of Irvin Albrecht. The latter was a long time employed until closing the business.

The boys helped with everything - stuffed sausage, waited on tables and customers, also with continuous cleaning of appliances, all electric meat grinders, saws, meat slicers, tenderizer, and scales. Also, hand saws and knives, wooden meat blocks, and display counter. At closing time floors were swept and covered with fresh saw dust shavings to keep the floors free of blood and grease spills. In later years saw dust was not allowed by the Full time employees appreciated when one or two boys were there to help. Solomon Taylor was good help for many years in every department. Another employee, Newton Gohmert, knew the meat business and was a good counter salesman.

When in town the market was our nieces' and nephews' favorite spot for a sandwich. snacks, and soda pop. They and also long time customers were sorry the business closed. On December 23, 1970, The Cuero Record headlines in large black print read, "Bohne's Meat Market Closes After 75 Years Service". My niece, D'Ette Pieper, after reading the above, expressed her disappointment by saying, "They didn't have to make it so Black".

In behalf of the business I express my appreciation to our accountant Frank Burns II, now deceased, and his widow, Polly Burns, for many years of service and their friendship.

It is interesting to know deeds of the property at 119 West Main Street in Cuero are recorded six times in the Bohne name in the DeWitt County Courthouse, in three quarters of a century.

Throughout the many years the market enjoyed good patronage and it was appreciated. After the doors were closed all fixtures and equipment were sold without advertising, to individuals, meat markets, and meat processing plants. For many months I still had calls for various items if they were were still available. The building was sold to Norman Powell who was in the wholesale fruit and vegetable business. He did trucking from the valley or San Antonio to supply local merchants. He had good use of the walk-in cooler. The building has changed owners several times. It is intact, but the red brick was painted and does not look familiar.

I have many fond memories and many sad memories.

MASSEY FURNITURE STORE AND MATTRESS FACTORY

In 1907 Mr. and Mrs. James Monroe Massey purchased the Casal Building at 211 N. Esplanade St., Cuero, Texas. At this time they had two daughters, Arta and Verna, a baby. The building had a store on the first floor and the living quarters on the second floor. On the north corner was the first Farmers Bank. There was a wide wooden sidewalk from the Bank to the store. A son James Monroe Massey was born on Feb. 24, 1910. While Arta was pushing the baby in his buggy up and down the sidewalk, Mrs. Massey walked out the door of the store to check on the children. To her horror, when she looked to the North, she saw a horse and buggy bearing down on the children. Not thinking of the danger to herself she pushed the children off the sidewalk and the horse and buggy ran over her. She lived two years after this. Mr. Massey took her to many doctors but her lungs were crushed. She died leaving a husband and three children.

Mr. Massey raised his three children at the building on Esplanade. Mr. Massey died in 1934 and the children sold the store to the brother-in-law Arthur L. Means. He later tore the building down and built a new one. The mattress building James, Jr. and his father built in the back of the store is partly standing.

James Massey, Jr. moved to Beeville, Texas and joined the National Guard. He served in the 36th division, in Roma-Arno, Naples-Foggie, Southern France, Rhineland and Central Europe. For his work in the army he received the Good Conduct Medal, American Defense Service Medal, and EAme Campaign Medal with 6 Stars. After returning from the service he married Shirley (Storms) Carter in Beeville on Aug. 30, 1946. They moved to Cuero and purchased the store from Arthur Means. In 1949 they built the store at 119 E. Church St. Shirley joined him in the store full time in 1951. Shirley had two children when she and James married. When they were grown they changed their last name from Carter to Mas-

Their grandchildren just said this Christmas (1989) they will never forget the times they spent in the store and at the farm in Lindenau. The store was closed in March 1987. They miss the store and the great customers and the salesmen that have been their friends throughout the years.

ROBERT J. FRIEDRICHS VEGETABLE FARM AND SWIMMING POOL

Robert J. Friedrichs (Dec. 9 – June 26, 1947) was the son of Fred and Caroline Friedrichs from the Arneckeville community.

In 1909 he bought land on the Old Yoakum highway about one mile from Cuero. There he started farming and also had an irrigated vegetable farm. People in Cuero remember him delivering vegetables to their homes. As children, they looked forward to him coming because he would also give them a ride on the truck.

He also had the only swimming pool in Cuero. I can't find any paper to document a date when the pool was built. A slab of concrete side-walk had 1925 on it. Everyone I have talked to seems to think that could be about the time it was built. His funeral notice in the June 26, 1947 Cuero Record in part reads—"He was well known in this area, as he had operated a park and swimming pool near the Gold Fish Club for more than 30 years". A hand-dug well, six feet in diameter, was his source for water He had a Delco power plant to pump the water for the pool. In 1931 he made an agreement with Central Power and Light to supply electricity for the purpose of serving his service station and swimming pool. The agreement was made from March 1931 to March 1936, renewable one year at a time after that 1936 date.

A lot of people in Cuero today still remember going swimming there and the one thing they remember is that the water was always cold. There were large liveoak trees that shaded the pool. Children would climb the limbs and jump into the pool until Mr. Friedrichs would make them use the diving board. Under the large oak trees were picnic tables and it would be a popular place for families to have Sunday picnics. The children enjoyed diving after pennies and nickels that Mr. Friedrichs would throw into the pool. They could keep the money. One person told me that he would put he money in his mouth so he could pick up more money before he had to come up for air.

As an added attraction, Mr. Friedrichs, had an alligator in a pen. No one has forgotten about the alligator. The story is told that during the time that Brayton Flying Service was in Cuero that the alligator got out of his pen and was in a pond close to Brayton Field. One of the instructors killed it and was so excited about killing an alligator that he took it to the Cuero Record and a picture was taken and story written up. I have looked through the papers that they have at the Record office. However I have not been able to find it.

Harold and Georgie Heyer now live on the land that was the truck farm.

COMPANY, INC/CENTER PHARMACY

B31

Louis J. Klecka 1927. First owner of Cuero Pharmacy – later Klecka Drug Co., Inc.

In the Summer of 1927, Louis J. Klecka moved to Cuero with his family of six. Encouraged by his relative by marriage, Dr. Ferdinand W. Miller, a prominent local dentist, Louis opened Cuero Pharmacy. He had sold his thriving business in Granger, Texas, taken a year off to have surgery and started a new business in the first block of West Main Street between Comnas' Cafe and Bohne Meat Market.

R.J. Friedrichs Vegetable Stand.

Charles Joseph Riebschlaeger. Second owner of Klecka Drug Co., Inc.

Ray Franklin Katzmark, 1989. Present owner of Klecka Drug Co., Inc.

At that time, West Main was a busy street with Sciba Bakery, Larcade's Grocery, A.F. Dietze Dry Goods, Fey's Studio, Guhmert Furniture, Hausman's Garage, Nami's Dry Goods and Grocery, Arnold Motor Company, Stephen Hebert's Law Office, Byrne Grocery and others. Further down West Main was the Cudahy Packing Plant. Dietze's was on the south corner of Main and Esplanade while Byrne Grocery was on the north corner, where the Buchel Bank addition is today.

When the time came for Louis Klecka to renew his lease of the Dickerson Building, he was told that the building had been leased by someone else. Mr. Paul Breeden offered the corner of the Breeden Brothers large grocery store on East Main and Esplanade. To accommodate this offer, he divided the store in half. This is how what is now Klecka Drug Company, Incorporated, ended up on such a prominent corner, an ideal location for a business.

In 1929 the Stock Market crashed and businesses struggled to survive. In the Summer of 1933, Dan Conaly, a drug salesman from San Antonio, introduced Charles Riebschlaeger, Jr., a young pharmacist, to Mr. Klecka. He was hired at a meager salary of about $20 per week. However, he was grateful to have a steady job, and this opportunity would be the beginning of a successful business career for him. It was his first job since graduating from Danforth Pharmacy School in Fort Worth. He had served his apprenticeship in Runge under Mr. Mosel.

In March of 1934, Louis Klecka succumbed suddenly following surgery Scott and White Hospital in Temple. Surgery had proven that he was a victim of cancer. In May of that same year, Evelyn Klecka and Charles Joseph Riebschlaeger, Jr., who has been engaged before Louis' death, were married. Charles and Evelyn's stepmother, Stella Klecka (Louis' second wife after his first wife, Albina Spacek, died) managed the store until Charles and Evelyn bought all shares belonging to Theodore, Loyce, and Doris (Louis' children) and Stella. The new owners worked hard to make the business a success.

In 1941, about the time when the country entered World War II and Cuero got Brayton Field (training center for young pilots), the owners opened a confectionary next door and named it "The Cozy Nook". It turned out to be a popular "hangout" in town for the young generation and a family gathering place on Sunday mornings for breakfast after church services. Frank, Rip's brother, was famous for his hand-stirred malts and managed the "Nook" until his death in 1967. During the War, Charles stood in the main intersection in front selling War Bonds.

Eventually the store was incorporated. Charles Riebschlaeger became involved in civic affairs as a member of the Cuero business community. He was Polio Drive Chairman for the "March of Dimes", served several terms on the City Council, founded the Cuero Industrial Foundation and was its president for eighteen years. He also served as Chairman of the Turkey Trot in 1960, worked with the Fat Stock Show, served as President of the Cuero Chamber of Commerce for years, was named Citizen of the Year in 1970, and an Honorary Chapter Member of the Future Farmers of America (FFA) as well as Honorary Member of the 4-H Club because of his support of the organizations for young citizens. He was an active member of St. Michael's Catholic Church, served as Grand Knight of the Knights of Columbus Catholic men's organization, and received the papal award of "Knight of St. Gregory" as well as the Archbishop Fuery Award for his service to the Church on May 15, 1970.

In 1949, Ray Franklin Katzmark, nephew of "Rip", graduated from the School of Pharmacy at the University of Texas in Austin. Ray had interned at Klecka Drug during his student days, and upon graduating, he and his wife, Beverly (Hansen) Katzmark, formerly of Denison and Austin, settled in Cuero. Ray went to work as pharmacist at Klecka Drug Company.

Riebchlaeger, keen businessman that he was, opened a second store, Center Pharmacy, on North Esplanade, to extend his services to more Cueroites. Both Rip and Evelyn welcomed customers at both stores, and Ray and Beverly became important members of the business. When "Rip" suffered his first heart attack on Labor Day in 1971, he decided to retire. Ray and Beverly purchased both stores and since that year have presented the same dedicated and courteous service to the community.

Ray has also been an active citizen, serving as Rotary Club President and then as its Secretary-Treasurer for fifteen years. He was also Director and President of the DeWitt County Polio Foundation and March of Dimes. In the business community, he has served on the Chamber of Commerce Board, is a member of the Downtown Business Association and is a past President of that organization. He served as Director of the Stock Show for fifteen years and is a member of the Firemen's Auxiliary. He served several years on the School Board of the Cuero Independent School District and is a past President of the Board. He is an active member of St. Mark's Lutheran Church and has served on the Church Council. He has been Director of the Choir at St. Mark's for over twenty years.

After purchasing the stores, Ray and Beverly decided to close the Cozy Nook Confectionary. From July of 1976 until 1981, the space served as a storage area. In 1981, the original Klecka Drug Company Store was enlarged to include what had been the Cozy Nook, and also totally remodeled. In 1989, Ray and Beverly began the Bridal Registry which includes an extended gift area with selections of crystal and china.

No successful business is ever the work of just one or two persons. Dedicated and trustworthy employees are also essential. Both Klecka Drug and Center pharmacies and the Cozy Nook have been blessed with many such employees over the years. Berniece Spacek, of Fayetteville, Texas, and niece of Louis Klecka's first wife, Albina Spacek, was one of the earliest employees of the original owner. After coming to Cuero, Berniece met and married Ed DeLeon, a local rancher and descendant of Ponce and Martin DeLeon. Louis Layton, Herbert Marquis, Myrt Morgenroth Jackson, Jeannine Marquis Sample, Ernesta Morgenroth, Rita Thamm, Dolphie Kubecka, Lucille Hennecke, Irene DeLeon, brothers of the Prause, Sciba, Adams, and Dietze families, Helen Pullin, Rose Kristek, Muriel Stevens Monk, and "Junior" Saenz; pharmacists Don Ridgeway, Elton Burns, Charles Berkowsky, and Patricia Duglosch have all contributed to the stores' efforts to serve the community.

Daryl Stefka, who came to Cuero as a young man to work at Center Pharmacy as a pharmacist now serves as Assistant Administrator of Cuero Community Hospital. Three present-day physicians all worked as pharmacists during their medical school years: Dr. Theodore Klecka (son of Louis) now retired, orthopedic surgeon in San Antonio; Dr. Raymond Reese, presently in Family Practice at the Bohman Clinic in Cuero; Dr. Larry Poth, dentist now practicing in Floresville; and Dr. Bill Dietze, ear, nose and throat specialist now practicing in Sulphur Springs, Texas.

Over the years, Klecka Drug and Center Pharmacy have been examples of American free enterprise and small business in service to a community in neighborly fashion that have been the backbone of the American economy. It is the hope of the Klecka, Riebschlaeger, and Katzmark families that it will continue to be

DAIRY BAR

B32

The Dairy Bar first opened for business on Aug. 11, 1953. Founder Arlon C. "Shrimp" Schroeder wanted a business in which he could be his own boss and yet provide a secure financial future for his family. The fast food restaurant, which specializes in hamburgers, fried chicken and ice cream, accomplished its founder's goal, but it required a lot of hard work, long hours and sacrifice along the way.

From the beginning the restaurant was a family business. Mr. Schroeder's high school sweetheart and fiance, Clydelle Jacob, worked for him until they were married on Dec. 26, 1954. After that, they owned the Dairy Bar jointly. Mr. Schroeder's sister-in-law at the time, Jo Ann Schlinke Schroeder, worked for them awhile, as did his mother, Annie Kimmel Schroeder. As they grew old enough, the couple's children, Stuart, Arlene and Norma, also took their turns behind the counter.

At first the Dairy Bar was mainly a drivethrough restaurant with limited counter space. Booming business, however, required the addition of a dining room with table seating, which was added in February, 1955. An awning to provide covered parking for customers was added in 1961.

In 1961, the Schroeders also built a connecting house on the Dairy Bar so that their growing family could live closer to the business. They moved into their new home on Aug. 13, 1961. Three days later their third and last child was born.

Mr. Schroeder, with his keen business sense and entrepreneurial spirit, was always looking for new sidelines and innovations. He added Shrimp's Tackle Shop in September, 1959, in which he repaired rods and reels and sold hunting and fishing supplies. In June, 1960, he opened a trampoline game behind the Dairy Bar which was very popular. However, he was forced to close it in April, 1962, because liability risks grew too great. He began selling fireworks in December, 1963, and continued to sell them biannually during the July 4 and Christmas holiday seasons until the city of Yorktown outlawed the sale of fireworks within city limits in 1968. During the summers of 1963 and 1964, Mr. Schroeder operated an icecream truck from which he sold ice cream doorto-door throughout Yorktown.

The Dairy Bar suffered a major set-back on Sept. 17, 1967, when Hurricane Beaulah caused the Coleto Creek to overflow its banks. The Dairy Bar was flooded by 38" of water. The connecting house, built on a higher foundation, received about half that amount. All the machinery in the restaurant, including ice-cream and drink machines, refrigerators and freezers, had to be rewired or replaced. In addition, all the inventory of food and paper products was destroyed. Moreover, the insurance carried by the business did not cover rising water, so the family had to pay all these costs themselves.

The clean-up job was monumental. But many of the people of Yorktown, who were customers and friends of the family, pitched in to help. The Dairy Bar re-opened on Oct. 1, 1967 after a lay-off of only ten days. Service has been continuous since then, with the exception of a week or two off in the summer and two more weeks off at Christmas for vacations.

Mr. Schroeder died in 1982, but his widow has continued to run the business. The Dairy Bar has operated under continuous management much longer than any other restaurant in Yorktown.

In addition to family members, the Dairy Bar has also employed 48 High School children as part-time help throughout the years. Nineteen cooks have also been employed to help Mrs. Schroeder, who does most of the cooking herself. Junell Danysh has worked for the Dairy Bar for twelve years, and functions as manager in Mrs. Schroeder's absence.

The restaurant has celebrated its anniversaries in various fashions throughout the years, but the highlight was undoubtedly the 30th anniversary on Aug. 11, 1983. On that day, the Dairy Bar sold hamburgers for the opening-day price of 25 e. Ice-cream cones were a nickel. Cars were parked for blocks and people stood in long lines all day to take advantage of these bargains and to participate in the celebration.

THE FRIAR-THOMAS RANCHES

B33

From Longhorns to Registered Brahmans

A lot of the cattle history of DeWitt County, Texas has passed through the Friar-Thomas Ranch which was founded in 1849 by Daniel Boone Friar. He had been prominent in the pioneer activities of the DeWitt County area since about 1838. In 1849 he began putting his T (Circle T) brand on Longhorns. Soon he had acquired a substantial acreage west of the Guadalupe River where he operated his cattle business with the help of his slaves. He died in 1858. The sons — William S., Alfred L., and Jack — continued the Friar ranch business. Also, two D.B. Friar daughters married stockmen. Julia became Mrs. John Shoat; Ella married John Rutledge.

William S. Friar engaged in the cattle business near Yorktown. He helped drive his own and neighboring stockmen's Longhorns up the Chisholm Trial in the 1870's. He gave up ranch work about 1885, when the son John Friar took over the range.

Sidney Johnston Friar was the oldest son of William S. and Ann Elizabeth (Smith) Friar.

Eclipse wooden windmill established by L.H. Wheeler in Wisconsin in 1867. This Eclipse is the last of four. It stands on the prairie of Friar Ranch in DeWitt County, Texas. It was probably erected by Sidney J. Friar in the late 1890's. Visible are cattle, a water trough, a stock tank and live oak trees. The windmill is in working order. Rare indeed!

Alfred Friar dressed in his usual khakis. He is on his ranch in DeWitt County, Texas. In background are a few of his Jersey-Brahman cross cattle. Late 1960's.

Sid worked as a "cow hand" for his uncle Alfred L. Friar for four years. Then he started out "on his own". He bought thirty-seven head of cattle, a horse and a saddle. In August, 1886 he made arrangements to buy three hundred twenty acres of land east of the Guadalupe River. He used land unfenced for some time and "batched" in a small cabin with a stick chimney. Soon he married Annie Williams.

From time to time Sid Friar bought more land until he had a large acreage and prospered in the cattle business. In 1913 he leased his land and busied himself with other activities until his death in 1931. His brands were circle O on each hip and 7F (Seven F bar) on the right hip.

The son Alfred Friar married Anna Nagel. He inherited land from his father and bought much additional land. He was very successful in the ranching business that he began in 1916 and continued until his death in 1973. He started out with "East Louisiana" cattle; later he changed to purebred Brahman. Since 1957 he used Brahman bulls with Jersey cows, principally. The Alfred Friar brand was (quarter circle) on the right hip.

The daughter Anne Friar married J. Carter Thomas. He raised cross-bred cattle. He developed and maintained a herd of Supermarket Milkmasters, which consists of one half Brahman, three-eighths Jersey, one-eighth Brown Swiss. But Carter Thomas was well-known for his prize herd of registered American Brahmans. Over the years the ranch sold many registered Brahmans to both foreign countries and in the USA. Anne and Carter continued using (quarter brand) and added C. brand.

After Alfred Friar's death in 1973 the ranch was owned and operated by Anne Friar Thomas and her husband J. Carter Thomas. Their daughter, Margaret A. Thomas and their two granddaughters, Debra Benge and Dinah VoelAfter Carter Thomas's death in 1986 Anne has continued ranch operations with the help of their daughter Margaret. They have added a new phase, crossbreeding some of the Brahman cows with Hereford bulls, raising Brafords. Ann's brand is a (quarter circle a).

kel also own sections.

We are proud to say that five of our cowhands have been employed for numerous years. C.L. McMahan (Uncle Charlie) began working on the Friar Ranch in 1933, making fifty-six years. C.A. Glover moved with his family to the dairy when he was eighteen years old in 1943. Since 1950 he has worked on the ranch thirty-nine years. On the Thomas Ranch the cowboys are younger. Joe Adams Jr. started out of high school in 1979; Emmitt Glover started in 1981; Eugene Jenkins started in 1984. Our span is five to fifty-six years, but all are faithful to the ranching cause.

In 1980 four hundred ninety-seven acres of the ranch were declared "A Texas Century Ranch" certifying that it had been owned and maintained in continuous operation for more than one hundred years by the Friar family.

In 1983 Anne Friar Thomas and her family built the Friar Ag Center in Cuero as a memorial to their Friar ancestors who had ranched in DeWitt County. This honored Daniel Boone Friar, Alfred L. Friar, William S. Friar, Sidney J. Friar and Alfred Friar. Both school and community groups enjoy using the facilities for their agricultural activities.

The Friar-Thomas Ranches have surveyed many of the usual hardships: fever ticks, screw worms, army worms, snakes, mosquitoes, flies, grasshoppers, fire ants and severe freezes and total droughts — even bad markets. It has also made numerous improvements and additions. The many years of operation have been tough, but very satisfying. We feel our cattle and wildlife have contributed much profit and pleasure to DeWitt County and Texas — beginning with Longhorns and ending with registered Brahmans!

ADICKES BUILDING SUPPLY

B34

History of William Adickes and three sons, Oscar, Edgar, and Caesar moving from a Meyersville farm in the fall of 1926 to Cuero, where they started doing carpenter work and contracting of houses and Commercial Buildings.

From 1926 to 1937 they bought their materials from the lumber yards already established in Cuero. In 1937 they built their own lumber yard, Adickes Building Supply Co. in the first building where the office is still located. As the business drew, they purchased more land from the Moore and Bell families and built the warehouse and lumber storage across the street in 1950, and Display room and warehouse across the alley from the first building in 1954.

From 1937 to 1943 Oscar Adickes and Edgar Adickes were in charge of construction jobs with at one time a crew of 15 workers. Nathan Post, Willie Tolbert, Marion and Allen Fetters, and Leon Polzin all worked for Adickes Co. at one time. They built many homes in Cuero and did country building also. One home was built in Goliad Co. and Edgar and his wife and the helpers stayed in a barn during the week and came home on weekends. They rented an old house in Port Lavaca and built a 5&10 Cent Store Building there for the late W.L. Ferguson, Sr. who was a very good customer of theirs. Edgar also did lots of work for the late Willis Barfield at the Cuero Livestock Commission Co. with his crew.

The first commercial building they built was the original Coca Cola Building during the depression for the late E.T. Summers, Sr. About 1940 they built Cuero's first Central air conditioned home on East Broadway for him.

On Oct. 12, 1943, Wm. Adickes passed away at age 70 and on Dec. 31, 1943 Edgar Adickes passed away at age 40. After that Oscar and Caesar Adickes bought out the business from their mother and Edgar's wife and continued as partners of the business. Caesar became ill with severe arthritis in his twenties, which caused him great pain, but he did a lot of work on Hillside cemetery where they made concrete grave cradles and lot curbings and he also sold monuments. He was very good at cutting glass and built up a good business cutting safety glasses for local car dealers to replace in cars, until the curved glasses came out. He could cut plate glasses and they replaced lots of broken glasses in town.

Oscar Adickes continued with the construction work and in 1945 Julius Nesrsta came to work for them after completing his military service and in 1947 married Oscar's daughter, Iris Lee. Julius had worked at a lumber yard in Hallettsville before serving in the Army Engineers where he did some building and also learned the building end of the business with Adickes Co. They built the Standard Printing Co. Building for the late W.F. Kautz. In 1957 the built the original Clinic for Dr. Harold High. They remodeled the Buchel Bank Building three times and also the front of Koehler Dry Goods Store next to the Bank - which now belongs to the Bank also. They built Dr. Wm. Grunder a Dental Clinic at 205 N. Esplanade in 1946. They built the Jr. High School Cafeteria in 1951.

The remodeled the former LeRoy Hamilton home on Esplanade St. under the direction of well known Architect Atlee B. Ayres of San Antonio, quite a number of years earlier.

They did all their work with the best quality materials and best quality workmanship and their work stands as proof of this today and in time to come.

Since the death of Caesar in May 1981, when his son and daughter inherited his share, the business is being run by Oscar, age 88, and Julius and Iris Lee Nesrsta on a small scale. Julius does millwork in the workshop and considers it a challenge to duplicate all types of antique wooden pieces that can't be bought anymore ready made, including wood windows.

There has been a great change in the Lumber Business since the advent of the large discount businesses, who have the buying power to buy cheaper in larger quantities — but they also do not handle the quality of lumber and other products in many cases.

The Adickes family worked hard all through the years – but at the same time, found their work to be a rewarding experience. They have met and served many wonderful people as customers and friends. Due to age and health conditions, it is not known how much longer they will be able to carry on and hope someone else will be able to carry on for them.

CUERO FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATION

B36

Cuero Federal Savings and Loan Association had its birth in July 1921 under the name of The Cuero Building and Loan Association. The original organization operating under a state charter with limited assets became Federalized in 1935 with assets totaling more than $64,000.00. Those early day founders visioned an association operating with two objectives in view: First, to furnish a convenient, safe and profitable method of investing the savings of working people and others. Second, to furnish money at a reasonable rate of interest and on easy terms to people who wish to borrow to buy, build, or remodel their home.

The motto reprinted from the July, 1921, brochure explained in the purpose in founding Cuero Building and Loan — "It pays to own a home of your own. The Association can Build, Improve, or Help you purchase one. Do it now through the Cuero Building and Loan Association of Cuero, Texas. Consult the Secretary —

It costs nothing to talk it over."

The motto is certainly true today as it was in 1921 and Cuero Federal Savings and Loan Association still operates on an open door policy. Each and every individual is most welcome.

Fourteen Cuero Businessmen and Civic Leaders were in attendance on that historical day in July 1921, when V.J. Grunder became the first president of the new association. Other elected officials included Dr. J.W. Burns, Vice President, and W.D. Peavy, Secretary. Directors were V.J. Grunder, J.W. Burns, W.D. Peavy, F.S. Schleicher, R.B. Evers, C.T. Schwab, J.L. Loan, J.D. Young, J.J. Fischer, H.R. Frosbese, L.L. Buttery.

Cuero Federal Savings and Loan Association has its main office at 218 North Gonzales Street, Cuero, Texas, and has two branch offices — the one located in Yorktown, Texas, was opened in November, 1974, and one located in Victoria, Texas was opened in November, 1975. The present assets of the association are now over one hundred sixty five million ($165,000,000.00).

The officers of the association as of this date, September 19, 1989, include M. Clifton Weber, Chairman of the Board, E.T. Summers, Jr., Vice-Chairman, Eugene F. Grafe, President, Kenneth W. Directors of the association are M. Clifton Weber, Howard Kleinecke, E.T. Summers, Jr., Lester E. Frers, Frank B. Sheppard, Kenneth W. Stimson, and Barry Wineinger, O.D.

Other employees of the association are: Genevia Hahn, Jackie Lange, Bea Laake, Kathaleen F. Krause, and Joyce Carson, Tellers, and Robert Love, Custodian.

The Yorktown Branch is under the management of Valda B. Lamprecht, Assistant Vice President and Branch Manager, and Donna War was, Teller.

Attorneys for the association are Frank B. Sheppard and James K. Crain.

Cuero Federal Savings and Loan Association does not have a large turn over in employees or officers. Many of the officers and employees have served in excess of twenty years and remain very active and very efficient.

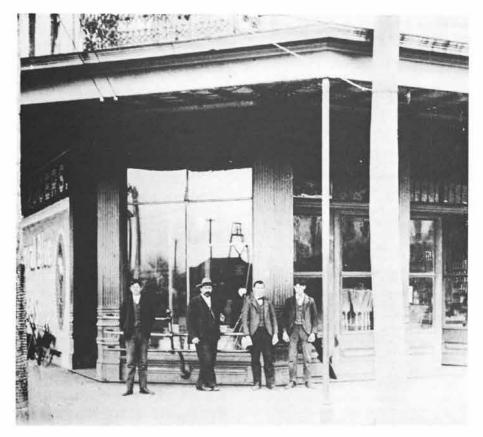

Though many changes have occurred through the years, Cuero Federal Savings and Loan Association still remains a convenient place to save and invest and to obtain funds to build, buy or remodel your house.

It is considered to be a community owned financial institution dedicated to serving the people of the Cuero, Victoria, and Yorktown areas.

BUCHEL BANK

B3

Otto Buchel, the founder of this bank, was born in Indianola, Texas in 1849. When he came to Cuero, he started working for Mr. George Seeligson and became a partner in the grocery store in 1887. The City of Cuero, Texas was laid out in 1872 and one of the first business lots was purchased by the mercantile firm of Seeligson and Buchel. As a favor, Mr. Buchel kept proceeds of the sale of goods and produce of an area man in the store's safe. After receiving other "banking requests", Mr. Buchel agreed to keep their money safe for a small fee. This was the beginning of "Otto Buchel, Banker".

In 1907, the bank incorporated under the National Bank Act with a capitalization of $100,000.00 and became known as Buchel National Bank. Mr. Otto Buchel was elected the first president. After Mr. Buchel's death on November 4, 1909, Mr. Joseph Sheridan succeeded him as President.

Buchel Building established in 1873

The first bank building was destroyed in 1886 by the Indianola storm and a temporary site for the bank and grocery was located across the street while a new brick building was erected on the original site. This brick building also met destruction. On the night of June 10, 1911, one of Cuero's most spectacular fires burned the Buchel Block which included the bank. A new two story building of reinforced concrete and brick was then constructed and was built strong enough to support two additional floors if needed.

In 1914, the bank became a member of the Federal Reserve System and the National Currency Association. The Buchel National Bank issued money with the bank's name imprinted on the bank notes until some time in the 1930's. In 1934, Mr. Leroy Hamilton was elected president of the bank. After the bank holiday, during the depression, the bank was renamed Buchel National Bank in Cuero. Even though one bank in Cuero failed during the depression, Buchel Bank remained a sound banking institution.

In the early 1950's, the bank was remodeled and the marble teller windows with the iron bars above them were replaced to give a more modern look. The bank was again remodeled and enlarged in the 1960's. The corner building on Main and Esplanade was purchased from the Kirkham family of whom Otto Buchel's daughter was a member. This property was incorporated into the existing building. During this expansion, two buildings in the back of the bank were purchased. The Leonhart property was purchased and demolished to make way for the drive-in portion of the bank.

In 1967, the control of Buchel Bank passed from the heirs of Otto Buchel for the first time with the sale of the bank to Jno J. Faubian, Agent, of Port Lavaca and on March 21, 1967, Mr. Grady McDonald was elected president. In May of 1968, the control of the bank was sold to Robert B. Baldwin, III of Houston and on October 6, 1969, the bank became Buchel Bank and Trust Company, a state chartered bank.

Mrs. Dorothy B. Ploeger purchased control of the bank in March of 1976 and was elected Chairman of the Board. Mr. Jack L. Mills was elected president on March 29, 1978, with Mr. McDonald becoming Vice-Chairman of the Board. During this time, the "Hamilton Brothers" property, consisting of the corner buildings at Esplanade and Church streets and land on Church Street was purchased. The ATM, existing motor bank and employee parking lot are located on this property.

After the death of Mrs. Erna B. Koehler, who was also a daughter of Otto Buchel, the bank purchased the "Koehler" building from her heirs. This property is being held for further expansion. The bank also purchased a building located on West Main that adjoined the back of the bank property from the Reuss family. This building was demolished and is now the site for customer parking.

On the resignation of Mr. Mills, Mrs. Ploeger was elected Interim President on August 12, 1983. On June 19, 1984, Mr. Robert S. Neel was elected president of Buchel Bank. Mary Ann Menning was elected Chairman of the Board on August 4, 1987 and replaced Mr. Neel as president on January 19, 1988.

Since its humble beginning as a bank, Buchel Bank has survived a disastrous fire, the Great Depression, two major floods, several hurricanes, drought and inflation. It has continued to prosper.

WEBER MOTOR COMPANY

B38

Weber Motor Company began operations June 28, 1937 in the 1st floor of the old Masonic Lodge building located at the corner of Church and Gonzales. The company was a 50/50 partnership between Clifton Weber and his sister Agatha Weber. Although Ford Motor Company had a strict policy against women dealers, an exception was made in the Webers case since they were badly in need of a representative in Cuero.

In the beginning the staff was limited to a porter named Charles Brown, Clifton Weber, who handled sales and Agatha, who handled the bookkeeping part time. Service was provided by the Rath Brothers who ran independent repair shop in the back of the building. Business was very good until the interruption brought on by World War II. During these years the company had to rely on a few used vehicle sales and parts and service sales.

After the war the dealership moved across the street to its present location. While post war production was rather slow the pent up demand caused by the war boomed sales and the staff eventually grew to 15 full time employees and usually at least one part time

In 1958 Clifton's son Mike joined the dealership as a new and used car salesman. In 1969 Agatha, who had married local jeweler Carl Wagner, retired. Upon her retirement Mike's wife, Merilyn, became very active in the dealership first serving in the office and later as Parts Manager. Also in 1969 the firm added the Mercury line in time for the 1970 new model showing. In 1977 Mike and Merilyn bought out Clifton and added some much needed services and sales facilities. In July of 1980 their son Cliff joined the company and presently serves as its General Manager. 1982 saw the company expand as it opened a satellite dealership at 141 S. Riedel in Yorktown.

The dealership has won numerous Ford Motor Company awards including the most prestigious President's Award in 1987. This award was given to only 119 out of 5,600 dealers and is the highest award for customer satisfaction that a Ford or Mercury dealer can achieve. The Distinguished Achievement Award, also given only to a select number for progressive management, sound merchandising practices, and high quality standards of service, has been won over 20 times.

All of the Webers have been very active in community affairs. Some of the highlights of their activities follows. Clifton Weber has served as Cuero Fire Chief, Chairman of the Hospital District, President of the Lions Club, Chairman of the Houston District Ford Dealers Advertising Fund, and in 1967 was awarded the Chamber of Commerce Outstanding Citizen Award.

Agatha Wagner was a member and past Grand Regent of the Catholic Daughters of St. Michael's Church in Cuero and she organized the Junior Catholic Daughters. She was active in the Business and Professional Women's Club. She helped organize and is a past president of the Pilot Club of Cuero. She has been a member of the Chamber of Commerce since

Mike Weber is a Past Chamber of Commerce President, Past Lions Club President, Past Chairman of the Houston District Ford Dealers Advertising Fund, Past President of the Cuero Livestock Show, Past President of the Cuero Campfire Girls, and is currently serving as Treasurer of the Cuero Industrial Foundation, Treasurer of the South-Texas Lincoln Mercury Dealers Advertising Fund, and is a member of the Cuero Economic Development Team

Merilyn Weber was awarded the Future Farmers of America's Honorary Chapter Farmer Award for her years of service to the Cuero Livestock Show. She has served on numerous committees at First Baptist Church and is a Past President of the Women's Missionary Union. She also was the costume chairman for the Junior Coronation of two of the Cuero Turkey Trots. She was the Registrar for the Cuero Campfire Girls for several years and has served on the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce. In December of 1979 she was elected President of the South Texas Parts and Service Club. She is currently President of the Pilot Club of Cuero, Inc.

Cliff Weber has also served as a Director for the Cuero Chamber of Commerce and like his grandfather, and father is a past President of the Cuero Lions Club. Cliff is also active in the Cuero Golf Association and the Cuero Country Club.

WYATT HATCHERY AND FEED STORE

In October, 1941, Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Earl Wyatt opened the Wyatt Hatchery and Feed Store at the northeast corner of Esplanade and Railroad Streets in downtown Cuero. Occupying the red brick Breeden Brothers building built in 1907, their formal opening was held on Saturday, January 31, 1942. Featuring the latest Cugley incubators with a capacity of handling 198,000 eggs at one setting, the new business also sold Dittlinger Mills line of livestock and poultry feeds. With their introduction of Christie Farm's New Hampshire and White Leghorn hybrid chicks in this area, full hatchery output was soon furnishing day-old chicks for the thriving broiler industry in DeWitt and Gonzales Counties. The Wyatts had brought in the Christie strain of chickens from Kingston, New Hampshire to provide tastier and faster growing broilers.

Within two years, the capacity of the hatcher was increased to help furnish more poultry during a time when beef and pork production was limited by World War II. In addition, the firm began to buy and sell pecans and poultry produce of all kinds at a second building on Railroad Street. Employees included Bonnie Buenger, Alvin Schorlemer, Paul Oehlke, Patsy Huehlefeld, Victor Vasquez, Calvin Webb, Alton Baker, Elbert Rentz, Earl Mathis, Raymond Zella, and Lee Harrison. The business was sold to Jess Ward in 1954.

LITTLE CHICAGO STORE

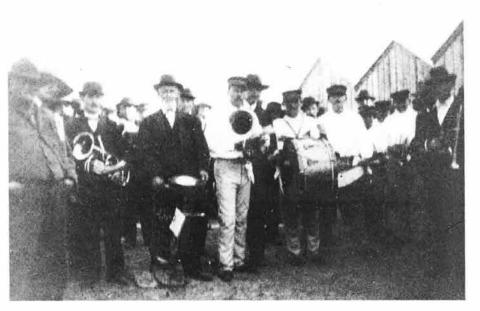

B41

STILES CATTLE COMPANY, INC.

B42

1947-1989

A cycle of ups and downs. An industry of many variables and for the Donald Maddy Stiles, Sr. family of Cuero, Texas, it's more than a business – it's their life.

The original Brass Band in the Gruenau Area, under the Direction of Mr. George Langley, posing front of the Little Chicago Store during an early celebration around 1900.

The Little Chicago Store and Saloon was built by George Langley, father of Mrs. W.G. Bargmann Sr. about 1895. It was located at the Intersection of the Gruenau road and the Little Chicago road a short distance from where the Weldon School was originally located. Around 1908, when Langley moved to Westhoff, the Store was sold to the Jarrett's. Later it was owned by the Willie Wolters family. In the 1930's it was owned by Richard and Hermina Gever who then sold it to Marcellus W. Weischwill. Mr. Weischwill sold the business to Harry and Clara Sachtleben when he went to the U.S. Army during World War II. The last people who operated the business were Elmo and Lavern Weischwill who closed the store in the late 1940's. Marcellus Weischwill sold the property to John B. Mueller, Lavern's father, who tore down the building for the salvage lumber and returned the real estate to his farm which joined it. The house was used for a while as a tenant dwelling but was also later demolished.

CHAS. R. FLICK.

Don, Sr. and his wife, Nita, started the business in 1947 and their three sons have chosen to follow in their footsteps in a time when second generation cattlemen are becoming a rarity.

Today Stiles Cattle Company, Inc., includes Don, Sr. and his wife Nita, Don, Jr. and his wife Paula, Clint and his wife Sue, Harvey and his wife Joie and ten grandchildren. It's a very family oriented operation and is equally shared by all.

Even though Don, Sr., is still a very active participant, the business is operated by Don, Jr., Clint, and Harvey and each has his own specialty. Don, Jr. manages the office with the help of Paula, Sue, and Nita, the cow-calf operation is in Clint's hands and Harvey is in charge of the shipping pens located at head-quarters.

Buying and shipping cattle on order is a big part of the overall operation and listed among their customers are several major feedlots, as well as individuals in the Southwest. It takes between 25,000 and 30,000 head of cattle a year to fill these orders and they are bought at several livestock auctions in the area and in the country. Cattle bought during the week are assembled at the shipping pens and processed to the customers specifications before being shipped. Don, Jr. and Harvey do the order buying and their motto is "quality not quantity"

Another service the Company offers to its customers is a pre-conditioning program. This consists of branding and vaccinating their cattle and keeping them under observation for about three weeks for any sign of sickness before shipping.

Equally important is the cow-calf operation. The cowherd consists of 3,000 to 4,000 head of F-1 Braford, Brangus, Brahman, and Simmental mother cows. Simmental and Hereford bulls are used to produce a top quality marketable calf. It takes many acres of pasture land to house this many cattle and the Company owns and leases about twenty places, in several South Texas counties for this purpose.

The cowherds are worked twice a year. In the spring the calves are vaccinated and castrated and the cows are given necessary vaccinations and a vitamin A shot. Then in September the round-ups begin. Often it takes until December to cull the herds and gather the calves that are to be sold. At this time the herd bulls are moved and maintained on rye and oat pastures through the winter. They will join the cowherds again in May.

For several years one of the major feedlots have contracted the calves in late summer. As they are brought to the shipping pens in Cuero and put in the aforementioned pre-conditioning program before being shipped.

The Company has one herd of registered Simmental mother cows which help provide the 200 to 300 head of bulls needed for the cowcalf operation.

Horses are a big item and the Company raises their own. A herd of twelve registered, grey brood mares serviced by a registered grey stud provide these, with some left for sale.

Many hours are required to keep the entire operation running smooth and with the assistance of several capable long time employees this is accomplished. One can say that hard work, family strength, a love for cattle and an appreciation for the land makes Stiles Cattle Company, Inc. a true American Success.

THE CUERO ICEHOUSE

The Cuero Icehouse was originally owned and operated by a Mr. Hubert Leonardt. When the icehouse was opened by Mr. Leonardt, it served an important function in Cuero as during that period of time there were no electric refrigerators to keep food and drinks cool. Mr. Leonardt also ran a soda shop in the icehouse where he sold his own soft drink, Ironbrew, which was a cross between Coke, Dr. Pepper, and Root Beer.

The Cuero Icehouse was then bought by Central Power and Light Company. Central Power and Light was mainly in the electrical business, and in 1944, Central Power and Light decided to sell over eighty of the ice-houses which they owned in South Texas. When CP&L decided to sell their ice plants, H.B. Holloway, who would later move to Cuero, was the ice supervisor for Central Power and Light in Corpus Christi, Texas. Mr. Holloway bought CP&L's icehouses in Cuero, Goliad, Yorktown, and an icehouse substation in Nordheim. Mr. Holloway purchased the Cuero Icehouse on August 7, 1944, and moved to Cuero at that time.

The ice business was a booming business in Cuero and required the icehouse to be in operation twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. This was especially due to the raising, killing, packing, and shipping of turkeys and chickens. The demand for ice was so high in Cuero at times that ice had to be brought in from surrounding plants to meet the demands of icing down railroad cars of poultry and farm products. These cars were iced so that the fresh turkeys and other produce items could be shipped by boxcars all over America. Ice was a necessity and the demand was great.

To ice a freight car required at least five people. The ice truck would pull up next to the end of the boxcars where a four foot by ten foot section with a trap door on the top was filled with ice. Smaller pieces of ice were then scattered over the tops of the crates of poultry stacked inside the boxcar. This process of icing the boxcar was accomplished by one man cutting three hundred pound blocks of ice into small twelve and a half pound blocks. Another man would throw the smaller twelve and a half pound blocks to a third man on top of the car. The third man would then hold the ice with the ice tongs over the trap doors, and a fourth man would chip it into smaller pieces that fell into the boxcar compartment. The fifth person would keep a flashlight on the pieces of ice so that it could be seen in the darkness of the early morning hours. This function of the fifth person is a fond memory of Kay (Holloway) Reese as she often helped her father, Mr. Holloway, in this capacity.

The Cuero Ice House

The men that worked in the Cuero Icehouse under Mr. Holloway included Jack Harryman, Chief Bill Schrieber, Oscar Lee, Raleigh Hillard, Adolf Stewart, Albert Harris, Pete Hargrove, Sid Alexander, and Alan Carter. Mr. Holloway's secretary at the icehouse was Lydia Sucher. Peter H. Bluntzer delivered door to door. These men worked long and hard hours as cars were iced seven days a week including Sundays and holidays.

When Mr. Holloway along with his wife, Eva. and daughter, Kay, moved to Cuero in 1944, all of the eating establishments kept blocks of ice on hand to be crushed. These blocks of ice were delivered to the various restaurants in the area. The Cuero Icehouse served Frank Riebschlaeger's Cozy Nook, Joe Keesler's, Neighbor Hensley's, The Dollhouse, Green Gardens, The Goldfish, and Blue Moon. A sack of crushed ice cost twenty-five cents and weighed approximately thirty pounds. A twelve and a half pound block cost eight cents and a twenty-five pound block cost fifteen cents. The chicken houses got a three hundred pound block for ninety cents and Meyersville paid a $1.05 for delivery of a three hundred pound block.

Many homes used blocks of ice in their iceboxes as well. People would come all day long to the icehouse to pick up their ice. Those on foot, horseback, or in wagons would wrap the blocks of ice tightly in a gunnie sack and hurry home. This portion of the ice business began to fail when people began to buy electrical refrigerators for use in their homes and businesses began to use their own ice makers.

The ice was made by submerging three hundred pound cans of fresh water into freezing tanks of brine. As the cans of water froze, they were pulled from the brine by a huge crain and dumped into a large vat of water to loosen the ice from the cans. The blocks were then dumped onto a slide and pushed into the subfreezing vault to be stored.

If you knew the tricks of the trade, you could flip, lift, or turn, and split a three hundred pound block of ice very easily. A scouring machine was used to cut grooves in the block so it could be divided into smaller pieces. Dividing the large blocks was the difficult and tricky part. A skilled worker would take a ice pick and punch along the grooves in the block, and the block would neatly divide. It was like cutting a diamond, large nice pieces or small shattered chips. the smaller shattered chips were not watered as they were put into the crushed ice bins to be sacked.

Cuero was a busy town during this time, and the ice business was good until progress stepped in. The beginning of the end of the ice business began when turkeys began to be shipped in refrigerated boxcars, and Cuero began to raise less turkeys and chickens. Finally, Cudahys and Wood Homes closed and the poultry business began to collapse. The Cuero Icehouse was bought in 1959 by Smithland Ice Company. Southland shut down the Plant and brought ice into Cuero by refrigerated trucks, and an era in Cuero had come to an end.

HENRY T. HENNEKE AUTO SUPPLY STATION

B44

Henry T. Henneke Auto Supply Station

After the Henneke Bros. dissolved their partnership, Henry T. Henneke opened up the Henry T. Henneke Auto Supply Station at 302 N. Esplanade in Cuero in 1933. This was located in the downstairs section of the Pythian Lodge building. The rent of $40 per month was considered high then, but the rent money was needed to pay for patching the roof.

The Station had not been opened very long when the highway department came through and tore up Esplanade from the railroad tracks on past the Station. It was impossible to reach the gas pumps from Esplanade so Mr. Henneke leaned old boards from Courthouse Street onto the high curb. This enabled his few faithful customers to drive up the boards onto the sidewalk between the building and the posts. There they could receive service from the gas pumps. After filling with gas, the customers had to drive around Pop Barnes' little cafe and then exit through the large double doors at the rear of the building. The cafe customers also used the makeshift driveway. The highway was torn up for a long time and business was "rough."

Since Mr. Henneke had been reared in the country (Arneckeville), he had a soft spot in his heart particularly for area farmers and ranchers during the depression. He frequently allowed his customers to "charge" their gasoline, tire, and repair purchases although he knew that the chance of recovering the money was slim. In fact, upon his retirement, over $35,000 was on the books as outstanding debts.

In 1937 Mr. Henneke's son-in-law, Roscoe Chaddock, started working at the station. Oil activity started in the area about then and the doodlebuggers used a lot of gas. They stored their trucks at the station. Up to eight trucks could be stored at a time. In later years the covered, enclosed area was used as a storage barn for the Cuero Independent School buses, seismic companies, and private vehicles.

In 1939 Henry and Rosa Henneke took a much needed vacation trip leaving Chaddock and Edwin Kuester to work at the station. At their return the Pythian Lodge members approached Mr. Henneke and told him that someone else had offered more money to rent the building. Mr. Henneke topped the other man's offer and the rent was increased to $140 per month. Earlier the building had been used as a bus depot with the weight of the buses damaging the wooden floors. Finally the Lodge replaced the wooden floor with cement.

Sinclair gas was sold at the Station. Mr. Henneke retained the last manual gas pump in Cuero at his Station for many years. Some of the older farmers of the area liked to "see" the gas being pumped. On many occasions when the city's electricity failed, there was a traffic jam around Cuero's only manual pump.

The Station was the biggest tire dealer in town, handling Firestone tires. In 1939 Mr. Henneke was a special guest invited to tour the Firestone Tire Plant in Detroit, Michigan. In 1941 with World War II needs, the complete stock of tires was recalled and rationing began with a special permit being required to purchase a tire. Mr. Henneke received a 30-year-service award from Firestone prior to his retirement.

Through the years in addition to providing gasoline, Mr. Henneke performed light repairs on automobiles of all makes. He also had a thriving business in bicycle repair.

Beginning in the late 1930's and for many years thereafter, Lud Ecichhold and Mike Young headed the Sinclair Oil distributorship in the upstairs balcony office area.

In 1946 Ray Smith and Murray Marie leased the front part of the building from Mr. Henneke for a showroom for the Kaiser-Fraizer dealership. They had some of the first cars in Cuero after the war. Mr. Henneke's son, Harry, would ride the bus to San Antonio to pick up the new cars and drive them to Cuero.

Mr. Henneke retired in 1957 after 50 years in the automotive business. The Henry T. Henneke Auto Supply Station was dissolved.

DEWITT COUNTY PRODUCERS ASS'N

1990 DeWitt County Producers Assn. 14,000 square ft. built in 1988, located at 401 W. Church St.

The DeWitt County Producers Association was founded in 1948, but its history and the history of cooperative begins much earlier. The first concept of forming cooperatives dates as far back as 1873 when the Granges were formed. During 1873 to 1933 Texas farmers lived through periods of agricultural depression. In desperation various methods were tried in an attempt to improve their impoverished condition. The approach was always the same: Farmers buy in a retail market and sell in a wholesale market. Efforts were made to bypass the wholesaler and all others who claimed a share of the farmer's dollar. Many ways and methods were tried. Many of them failed by not being able to cope with major problems that were not anticipated and the inability to obtain finances to establish an ongoing enterprise. But through all the problems and disappointments a new movement emerged with the banding together of many for the good of all, and thus, Farm Cooperatives came into being.

Seeing the cooperative movement as a way of self-help in distressing economic times a group of farmers and ranchers of DeWitt County set out to form a local cooperative. They were of the firm belief that by banding together they could as a cooperative, deal with the markets in the buying of the products needed in their business and also make a difference in the marketing of their products.

After a time of inquiry, research, and discussions, a meeting was called inviting all interested persons to attend. The meeting was held in the county courthouse and it was at this meeting that the first steps were taken to form a local cooperative.

Nine men were chosen to be the first board of directors. Each man to represent the community in which his farm or ranch was located. Chosen that day were: J.S. McCurdy, S.C. Parker, Emil Wild, J. Carter Thomas, Carl Weber, Bonnie Buenger, Fritz Lane, Paul Sager, and Oscar Meyer.

In the beginning much of their time was spent starting the new business, finding a store location, hiring personnel, and contracting with the feed and seed companies. But above all, these men became salesmen.

They had to sell the concept of a cooperative to farmers, ranches, and other producers in the community by selling them stock in the organization to help finance its beginning.

The first property owned by the association was a lot located on the corner of Terrell and Church Street on which it planned to erect a building. It was purchased in 1948 and although the board tried to negotiate with the railroad and other land owners to secure rail services to the property, it was never accomplished. Seeing the necessity of such services for transporting feeds and fertilizer to the store, the directors abandoned the plans to build on the property and in May 1951, decided to sell the lot. In June 1954, the Carnation Plant on the corner of Church and Frederick William Street was purchased. This building had been occupied by the local cooperative since 1949. As business grew additional lots adjacent to the property was purchased. In 1971 the Breeden Runge property across the street was purchased.

This building was to be used primarily as storage for fertilizer. In 1980 the cooperative again expanded its facilities by purchasing two additional lots on which a fertilizer blend plant was built. Continued growth again initiated expansion in 1987 when additional land was purchased and the old Breeden-Runge warehouse building was demolished. In 1988 a new 14,000 square foot building was erected and opened for business the last week of December 1988. This modern facility will better serve the needs of farmers and ranchers in DeWitt County for many years to come.

Success and progress seldom come easy or cheap and the history of the DeWitt County Producers Association was no exception. Many people worked hard in laying the ground work for that meeting where the first steps were taken to organize the association. Pioneers in this effort were Mr. J.S. McCurdy, J. Carter Thomas, August Wisian, and many other community leaders. The first board of directors spent untold hours during the struggle for existence. They met weekly to discuss the affairs of the association, then spent hours looking into building sites, selling stock, searching for a manager and employees, etc. after the feed store opened on July 15, 1948. The Directors would come to the store to help operate the store and wait in customers, load feed, or anything needed to be of assistance. The records show that even the annual meetings were hosted by the directors with each director assigned various details for which he was responsible. The early directors received no per diem or reimbursement for mileage but those who served during the first years remember those meetings when they sat on feed sacks and drank red soda water while tending the business of the association. Years later folding chairs in the display area replaced the feed sacks, but the red soda water was still available.

Since its beginning, DeWitt County Producers Association has basically been a feed, seed, fertilizer and supply cooperative, dedicated to serve the needs of its members. In the first years of its operation a hammer mill and complete molasses mixer were installed which served many members during the early years of the Association. Directors again responded to the needs of its members when they added a fertilizer blend plant to its existing facilities. This plant continues to increase the volume of business each year and is a profitable addition to the business.

The Board of Directors as well as its current Manager, Arlen Goebel has a commitment to serve its members and the community with a sound business enterprise. Serving on the Board today are Heinie Bade, Charles Nagel, Fred Diebel, August Schulle, James Koenig, Bill Braden, Clifford Haun, Alton Goebel, and Carroll Blank.

office being established in his home. Abstracts on guaranty titles on 90% of property changing hands in DeWitt County were drawn up in the abstract office. If property was being purchased on time, an abstract or guarantee title policy was requested by the loan company. In 1930, Mr. Garrett and Mr. Tom Cheathard half the property was requested by the loan company.

In 1930, Mr. Garrett and Mr. Tom Cheatham built the present building at 203 N. Gonzales Street. Each owned and occupied separate offices.

Due to failing health, Mr. Garrett requested his son-in-law, Robert Ira Wilkes, to move to Cuero from Houston to learn the abstract and surveying business. Mr. Garrett died February 19, 1938, at which time Mr. Wilkes took over the business with the help of Miss Anna Koch. Miss Koch had been with the company for the previous 17 years along with Mrs. T.C. Simon, Jr. and Miss Augusta Naunheim for a portion of this time.

Mr. Wilkes died in 1961, and the business was sold to Frank W. Burns, Jr. of Cuero and Mr. Will Rob Miller of Westhoff. Prior to Mr. Miller's death in 1973, his half of the business was sold to Frank W. Burns III. It has been in operation continuously at the same location with Mrs. Simon as office manager. Since the death of Frank W. Burns, Jr. in March 16, 1981, the company is still owned by the Burns family.

W.R. GARRETT ABSTRACT OFFICE B46

Garrett Abstract C. 1990.

The W.R. Garrett Abstract Office was founded in 1894. It is one of the oldest business in Cuero. Records kept at the office date back to 1836, when Texas was struggling for independence.

Mr. Garrett, at that time was a DeWitt County surveyor, having succeeded Mr. Gus Schliecher. As a side job he did private surveying and abstracting which resulted in an

1907 Architects Drawing

1990 Cuero Record Building

When the first edition of The Cuero Record was published in November of 1894, it faced stiff competition with five other newspapers in Cuero.

The first issue of The Cuero Daily Record was published under the combined management of H.G. Wood, B.S. Wright and J.C. Howerton. The Record was a consolidation of The Daily Hustler, purchased by Howerton and The Weekly Record, published by Wood and Wright. The three men resolved the goal of giving Cuero "a creditable daily newspaper." This consolidation cut the number of papers in Cuero to six.

The other five papers were "The Star", oldest paper in the field, which was edited by A.S. Crisp; and "The Sun", "The Truth", "The Bulletin", and "The Devtsche Rundschan", all published by William T. Eichholz.

It was in 1873, the year Cuero was incorporated, that a local attorney and later U.S. Congressman Rudolph Kleberg established "The Cuero Star". According to early accounts of Cuero's history, "The paper pursued a vigorous policy for the enforcement of the law, and every issue contained pungent articles in the interest of the supremacy of the law and urging citizens to form organizations to restore law and order."

Twenty-one years later when Howerton and his partners consolidated The Hustler and The Weekly Record, he thanked the paper's patrons for their support "... of The Hustling infant and now that in discarding her short dress and assuming the garb of a full grown maiden, we trust you will extend to her the courtesies due one of her sex as a debutante and aid us in making her the true, noble and progressive matron she's destined to be."

Howerton acquired the interest of B.S. Wright through purchase a few years later and in 1903 assumed full control with the title of editor-publisher when Wood sold his interest.

In 1895, The Daily Record acquired "The Bulletin" and with it came a Chicago Stop Cylinder press to replace the old Georgia Washington hand press upon which the early issues were printed. This reduced the number of newspapers in Cuero to four. Soon after "The Sun" closed its doors and "The Truth" faded away, leaving only "The Star", "The Rundschan" and "The Record". The Star inaugurated a daily edition which continued publication until after the death of A.C. Crisp in 1918.

In 1919, his heirs sold The Star and its subscription list to The Record which also acquired "The News", successor to "The Rundschan", through consolidation. Cuero was then one-newspaper town.

The first lino-type machine, an automatic type-setting machine, was installed in 1911. Prior to that the type had all been set by hand. Then in 1926, The Record first appeared off a new Duplex web perfecting press. This press printed eight pages at one time, as compared with only four by the old presses.

The Howerton family continued to run The Record after J.C. Howerton, Sr. died in 1935. His son, Jack W., assumed the presidency while two other sons, Pete and Charles, maintained part ownership. Jack Howerton continued as the paper's head until his death in 1971. His wife, known to all Cueroites as Polly, succeeded her husband until April 3, 1972.

On that date The Record was sold to Todd Publications, Inc. of Austin. William K. Todd, president of Todd Publications, served as the paper's publisher while Ken Long served as president and general manager.

During Long's tenure The Cuero Daily Record was restructured to a twice-a-week newspaper and was converted from hot-metal paste-up to cold-type paste-up. It was on July 24, 1972, the newspaper was printed for the time time on an offset press.

On April 1, 1987, Todd Publications sold its interest in The Cuero Record to Cuero Newspapers, Inc., a group of 12 South Texas newspaper publishers. The group named Glenn Rea, a 20-year veteran of the Texas newspaper business, as its new editor-publisher.

The Cuero Record has been published continuously in its present location since 1907 and will be celebrating its 100th anniversary in 1994

Although The Cuero Record has won many state and regional awards for excellence in editorial and news reporting, in competition with state and area newspapers, unquestionably the top award to this newspaper was the Pulitzer Journalistic Prize Award in 1955 in competition with all the nation's newspapers.

The 1955 Pulitzer award was won by R. Kenneth Towery, then managing editor of The Cuero Record, for his series of news stories disclosing irregularities in administration of the Texas Veterans Land Program. They led to corrective measures by the Texas Legislature returning the benefits to the war veterans for whom they were intended, rather than the land promoters.

The first of Towery's articles published by The Record, was an interview with then Land Commissioner and prominent Texas political figure Bascom Giles. Commissioner Giles was difficult for newsmen to interview, but a persistent Towery finally gained admittance to his office, engaged him in long discussion regarding the Veterans Land Program and then drove back to Cuero and printed Giles' statements almost verbatim in the Sunday morning edition of The Record.

Towery then developed and published succeeding articles which related certain facts that he had learned concerning the land program, but which did not jibe with the detailed statements that came from commissioner Giles's lips.

These news stories by Towery in The Record caused a sensation, and much attention throughout the state and even outside of it was focused on Cuero.

As a result, Commissioner Giles was indicted and convicted and was sent to the state penitentiary for his part in the affair.

Ken Towery, and The Record, won the Pulitzer Prize, the highest award that can be earned for journalistic achievement.

THE BREEDEN RUNGE COMPANY

The Breeden runge Company, a wholesale grocery company, was organized during the latter part of 1910 under the guidance of Charles Goodwin Breeden, Robert Perry Breeden, and Walter Kibbe Breeden, with the assistant of the firm of H. Runge and Company, composed of the two partners Emil Reiffert, Sr. and William Frobese, Sr. Other original stockholders in the corporation were Dr. John W. Burns, Mr. Lee Joseph (president of the First State Bank and Trust Company), Mr. Louis Gohment all of Cuero, Mr. F. Krage of Yorktown, and Mr. N.D. Arnold of Yoakum.

The business began in February of 1911 with Charles G. Breeden as president, R.P. Breeden, and N.D. Arnold, vice presidents, and Louis Gohment, secretary and treasurer. The original capital stock of this firm was $85,000.00. In 1923 the capital stock had grown to $375,000.00.

Charles G. Breeden continued to serve in the capacity of president of Breeden Runge Company until his death December 30, 1925. R.P. Breeden succeeded his brother as president until his untimely death in March, 1926. W.K. Breeden was elected president of the organization with P. Fielding Breeden as vice-president and general manager, and Paul H. Breeden, vice-president, secretary and manager. The board of directors in 1931 was composed of W.K. Breeden, P. Fielding Breeden, Paul H. Breeden, Walter Reiffert, A.W. Bourke, and Henry Fasset Sheppard of Cuero and R.C. Roose of San Antonio. Following the death of W.K. Breeden, P. Fielding Breeden became president.

At its inception, the future success of the Breeden Runge Company was assured through the farsightedness of its founders, and the ability of Charles G. Breeden and R.P. Breeden to visualize the trend of future events. They endeavored from the earliest days of operation to secure established, reliable, and exclusive lines of merchandise, thus identifying the Breeden Runge Company as distributors of high grade, dependable goods. The successors to the founders of the business perpetuated this farsighted policy. The company was the exclusive distributor of the following lines of merchandise: H.G. Prince canned fruits; New York Canners canned vegetables, Goblin brand canned vegetables packed by the Marshall Canning Company of Marshalltown, Iowa, Staley's syrups, O.K. and Pal's syrups, Bee Brand spices and extracts, Purity Oats, and Southern Blend Coffee.

When originally established, the Breeden Runge Company had but one house, the parent house at Cuero, and covered out of this house only a limited territory, that section of southwest Texas adjacent to the home office. However, four branch houses were established as follows: Kenedy in 1916 with D.C. McManus as manager, Alice in 1924 with J.H. Edgar as manager, Yoakum in 1928 with I.J. Alexander as manager, and Yorktown in 1929 with W.E. Reifschlager as manager. The Yoakum house was closed January 1, 1930, on account of the proximity to Cuero, and the ease and decreased expense with which this territory could be served out of Cuero. The company, however, enjoyed a splendid business in the city of Yoakum, and its adjacent territory.

During the latter part of 1916, the Breeden Runge Company bought out Pine and Crane of San Antonio, and operated a wholesale house in that city under the management of the company's vice-president, R.P. Breeden. A large section of southwest Texas was covered out of this house, and due to the able guidance of its manager, this venture proved a very profitable one. Mr. Breeden's health failed in 1921 and the house was sold to the Walker-Moore Company of that city. Another consideration leading to the sale of San Antonio house was the excellent price offered by the Walker-Moore Company, the deal being consummated during the peak of business inflation succeeding the World War I.

During the first few years of its existence, the Breeden Runge Company employed two traveling salesmen, and a total of ten or eleven employees, including the managers. Later, this firm employed nine traveling salesmen and furnished employment to a total of thirty-eight or thirty-nine persons. B.H. Lamkin, C.R. Carney, R.B. Colley, and I.J. Alexander, traveled out of the Cuero House; B.F. Hill, out of the Kenedy house; B.E. Pacch, out of the Kenedy and Alice Houses; John M. White out of the Yorktown and Kenedy houses and J.H. Edgar and Stayton Calhoun, out of the Alice house. Branch managers were W.E. Reifschlager, Yorktown, D.C. McManus, Kenedy, and R.E. Edgar, Alice.

The territory covered by the salesmen were the following counties: Lavaca, Gonzales, DeWitt, Karnes, Wilson, Victoria, Jackson, Calhoun, Bee, San Patricio, Nueces, Jim Wells, Kleberg, Duval, Brooks, Jim Hogg, Live Oak, and Goliad.

This company did an extensive credit business, and the assistance was extended to the retail merchants through this section. This company did much toward building up of this trade territory, and enabled some of their most prosperous friends and customers to tide their businesses through the days of depression and crop failures. As this section of the state became more thoroughly developed and diversification of crops more universal, the demands for financial assistance was lessened. Time was to come when there were sufficient funds in the hands of consumers throughout the year to enable the merchants to finance their own businesses without outside help.

Breeden Runge Company was in operation for twenty-nine years. The company had been financed almost entirely with Cuero capital. The late Charles G. Breeden had planned for the company to last. From a small start the company developed into one of the biggest in South Texas with an annual sales volume in excess of $1,000,000. Times changed and the Great Depression left the liberal credit policy of the company in trouble. Chain (grocery) store expansion and truck competition together with increasing federal taxes made it difficult to show a profit. Breeden Runge was sold to Groce Parish Company of Victoria Saturday, July 30, 1939. The Victoria company continued to operate in Cuero. They assumed charge of the business on Monday 31, 1939. Royce Wood of Runge became the manager of the Cuero house with B.H. Lampkin as office manager.

THE HOUSE OF NAGEL OLDEST FIRM IN THE CITY OF CUERO

B50

The distinction of being the oldest business house in Cuero (in 1923) belongs to the Nagel Hardware Company, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Hardware and Seed. The Nagel business was started in Cuero in January of 1873, which was before the organization of Cuero as a town. This business was started in Clinton in 1871 as a tin shop, doing business in a building owned by Wm. Hausman and used by him for a corn crib. The following year J.R. Nagel, who started the business, prepared to build a business house in Clinton but on hearing that the railroad was to come to Cuero, decided to move here and continue business in a town of larger opportunities.

On coming here in 1873, Mr. Nagel bought a 29x70 lot and built a two-story house, where the present brick building of the Nagel Hardware Company now stands. With his family, Mr. Nagel lived upstairs and operated the business, which he had enlarged to that of a tin shop and dealer in Stoves, Iron, etc., on the lower floor. A kitchen and dining room for the family was built in the rear. One of the interesting incidents in the Nagel family is that during the feud days of Cuero, a bullet was fired on the street in front of the building and passed through that building, went through the dining room in the rear and shattered the knob on the kitchen door. Later an adjoining lot and building was purchased and the business was enlarged to meet the demands of a growing community. And in 1888 this second building was torn down and a larger and better building was erected. The business was continued in these buildings until 1907, when the old two-story building was dismantled and taken to Westhoff and the other building was removed in order to make room for the modern two-story brick building that was built in the same year and is the present home of the Nagel Company. This building is 40x100 feet and gives a large amount of floor space for the upto-date line that is carried by this enterprising concern. The present lot is 40x150 feet with an adjoining piece 20x30 feet covered by a warehouse. And acquired in five separate purchases.

The business was operated under the name of J.R. Nagel until 1888 when a son was taken into the business and the firm name was changed to J.R. Nagel and son. Mr. Nagel died in 1897 and the business was under the direction of H.J. Nagel, who was the junior partner of the firm, until 1907, when the firm was incorporated as the Nagel Hardware Company with a capital stock of $10,000 and H.W. Nagel was elected president, H.J. Nagel, vice president, and R.A. Nagel secretary-treasurer. The business of the firm continued to grow and in 1913 the capitalization was increased to

Modern house of Nagel Hardware built 1907

First Nagel Business House in Cuero, built 1873

$30,000 and to $60,000 in 1920.

The business enjoys a large local trade and covers a radius of sixty miles around, doing a large business in hardware and seeds. In addition to the main building a warehouse, 60x100 feet, is used for storage as a stock sufficiently large to supply the needs of their customers is kept by this company.

The Nagel Company is proud of its record of achievement and of the fact that they have had long years of pleasant relations with the buyers of this section. One thing that affords them a particular amount of pleasure is that among their numerous customers there are thirty-five that have dealt with them since the business was established here fifty years ago.

This company is also proud of its high class employees and attributes a large part of their business success to their courtesy to the public. In addition to the officers of the company mentioned above, the following are employees of the firm: C.R. Nagel, Retail Hardware Department; Oscar Probst, Assistant Secretary; S.S. Purnell, Household Goods Department; Albert Nagel, Shipping Department; Hugo Hausman, Accounting; Adelaid Probst, Stenographer; and Edwin C. Buchhorn, Traveling Representative.

What has come to be one of the most important branches of the Nagel Company is the Automobile Department which has the agency for the well known Dodge Brothers car. The Nagel Company showed that they were alive to the possibilities of the automobile industry by establishing an agency in 1914. They first sold only the Maxwell car, but later began to sell both the Nash and Dodge cars. Finally, however, they decided that they could best serve the Dodge owners by confining themselves to that one car. Accordingly, they discontinued the agency for the other cars and put in a complete garage and service station for the purpose of giving a first class service to the owners of Dodge cars. They carry a complete line of parts and accessories and occupy a large building for this important department of the Nagel business.

Mr. R.A. Nagel is the active member of this department and through his efforts a large number of Dodge cars have been sold in this section and that business is one of the most healthy of the various automobile concerns in the city. Thirty cars have been sold thus far this year which goes to show the popularity of the Dodge in this section. Mr. Nagel's son, August, is in charge of the Parts Department and through him Dodge owners are able to get the best of service in this line.

RYAN'S FLOWER SHOP B51

Ryan's Flower Shop became a reality in 1951 when Mrs. Virginia Ryan and her son Richard bought Haak Floral Shop from Julius Haak. It was formerly Wedemeier Florist and was located on East Broadway in Cuero next to the Doll House Cafe. The display ice box in use today at Ryan's was used in the Wedemeier shop. Richard and his mother moved the shop to the W.O.W. building next to Freund Funeral Home on Gonzales Street where it was located for eight years. When this building was sold it was moved to 102 Gonzales Street. A family friend, Howard Person, of Gonzales had a flower shop there and he helped a great deal to get Ryan's started.

After a few years of work Virginia felt that she needed some formal training so she went to Houston to attend Buddy Benz School of Floral Design. When she returned she could compete with the best. Virginia's creations in corsages and wedding flowers were spectacular and she especially enjoyed this delicate work. When Richard was there he did most of the large centerpieces, church and home decorations. They did lovely work for customers to express their sympathy when a loved one was lost. Richard: "We were proud of every floral piece that went out of our shop."

In 1973 Virginia and Richard decided it was time to retire. Virginia's daughter, Rosemary Ryan Carbonara and husband Neal wanted to move from New York to Texas and they purchased the shop.

The shop on Gonzales Street was moved to 112 E. Main in July 1974 when Neal and Rosemary bought the building on Main St. It is housed in former Dixie Cafe spot. Mrs. Ryan continued to work in the shop for about eight years retiring at age 82. She maintained an interest in everything until her death at age 93. Rosemary and her daughters, Roberta and Rosemary, started working in the shop in 1973. Roberta is now manager and a Master Floral designer. Regina, another daughter, is now with the shop as floral designer and bookkeeper. Ryan's Flowers is very active with the Downtown Business Association and The Cuero Chamber of Commerce.

CONRAD AND TARKINGTON INSURANCE AGENCY

At about the same time George Bush came to Texas with his family loaded in his Studebaker, James A. Conrad brought his family to Cuero in their Studebaker after purchasing the Woodworth and Dent Insurance Agency from Jeanette Woodworth on April 27, 1961. Early records of the agency are sketchy. Originally, the business was Newman and Juenger Insurance Agency. A seventy-five year plaque awarded to Conrad & Tarkington February 19, 1962, by the Aetna Insurance Company establishes 1887 as the founding date. Interview with several Cuero citizens reflect that Edith Dent purchased the agency December 1, 1925.

It is believed she was assisted in the office by either a brother or a sister and upon that person's death, J.C. Woodworth, Jeanette's husband, became a partner. At some later date, Jeanette became active in the agency. Mrs. Woodworth died unexpectedly on May 7, 1961, only days after selling her agency to Jim Conrad. Mr. Conrad retained the name of Woodworth and Dent as well as the location, the second floor of the Graves Building, 1011/2 North Gonzales. Mr. Conrad hired June Holster, (now Mrs. June Benton) as his "girl Friday" to hold down the office while he went out meeting the people of Cuero and seeking new business. Shortly thereafter the office was moved to the first floor of the Graves Building at 107 North Gonzales for customer conven-

By September of 1963 the business had grown to the extent that it was necessary to hire additional personnel. Mrs. Lucille Clarke joined the firm on August 26, 1963, and remained until her retirement on December 31, 1988.

On November 1, 1963, Mr. Conrad purchased the J.S. Edgar and Sons Insurance Agency of Cuero, merging the book of business with Woodworth and Dent.

During those early years several other endeavors were handled by the two-girl office; such as the Western Union office and an answering service for Orkin Exterminating – anything to help pay the bills.

The agency continued to grow and on February 1, 1967, Murray Tarkington joined the agency as a partner.

Following the purchase of the Schorre Insurance Agency on May 1, 1969, Mr. Conrad and Mr. Tarkington felt the name of the agency should be changed to Conrad & Tarkington Insurance Agency to more readily identify with the principals of the agency, and this was completed in the early months of 1970. On April 1, 1971, Conrad & Tarkington purchased the Zimmerman Insurance Agency, and on April 15 of the same year the E.T. Teller Insurance Agency of Westhoff was acquired.

Westhoff business was serviced out of the Cuero office.

Effective July 1, 1972, Conrad & Tarkington purchased the Breeden, Dornbluth and Fisher Agency from J.J. Fisher and Herbert Dornbluth. Mr. Fisher and Mr. Dornbluth remained with the agency as producers. At this time the office was moved to 210 North Esplanade due to the need for additional space. The staff had grown to four, with four producers.

The agency was incorporated on July 1, 1973. The J.W. Hoff Agency of Yorktown was purchased on April 1, 1977, and a branch office was opened in that city known as Conrad & Tarkington Insurance, Inc. of Yorktown. The agency operated the branch office until July 1, 1980, at which time the business was sold to John Love who had been the producer in Yorktown.

Conrad & Tarkington, Inc. of Yoakum was opened June 1, 1979. In March, 1981, this office was closed and all business was absorbed by the Cuero office.

In January of 1979 the agency installed an in-house computer, one of the first agencies in this area to do so. Also, additional personnel had been added. These things were done in order to continue to give the people of Cuero and the surrounding area the best possible service and product. With the continued growth of the agency, the time had come to again move to larger quarters. Conrad & Tarkington moved to its present location, 212 North Esplanade, in March of 1981.

January 1, 1985, Conrad & Tarkington merged with Foss, Cates, Hudson & Sims Agency, Inc. of Victoria, Texas. This merger was executed in order for the agency to continue having access to more and varied markets to handle their customers' needs. The Cuero agency retained the name Conrad & Tarkington. Further changes in the insurance industry revealed the need for access to an even broader market; therefore, on November 1, 1988, the agency became a part of Hilb, Rogal and Hamilton Company, whose home office is located in Richmond, Virginia.

Through the years the agency has always been involved in the many varied activities of the Cuero community and will continue to do so. Shortly after going into business in Cuero, Mr. Conrad became President of the Chamber of Commerce and Agriculture, and at the present time, Mr. Tarkington has just completed a term as President of the Chamber.

Elsie Johnson, Mickey Parma, Dorothy Wolf, Mattie Diebel, Bea Johnson, Valerie Duckett, Mollie Escobedo, Monica McAdams and Lynda Worthington make up the present office personnel. Producers are Jim Conrad, Murray Tarkington, Jack Calk, Richard Carbonara, Jr. and Neal Carbonara. This compiles the staff of fourteen; a giant step from the one producer, one girl, one typewriter office started in 1961.

BUCHEL DAM

B53

Buchel Dam

Buchel Dam

In the year 1892, the three Buchel brothers acquired large land holdings North of Cuero, extending along a considerable water frontage of the Guadalupe River, and including the present (1923) dam site of the Texas Central Power Company. These brothers were Otto Buchel, Frederick W. Buchel and C. August Buchel.

A power dam was built in 1898, with a view to supplying lights and power for Cuero and also, water for a rice irrigation project the brothers were interested in. The destructive flood waters of the Guadalupe River, adversities in connection with the rice farming, difficulties in connection with the management of the light plant and finally the shock from the accidental death of August Buchel, caught in a cog wheel and crushed to death, a disastrous fire which destroyed the power house, caused Mr. Buchel to place the dam and kindred interests on the market, and it was taken over in 1908, by a company headed by Wm. M. Ratcliffe and known as the Cuero Light & Power Company. They rebuilt the burned house and reconstructed the dam, and enjoyed a prosperous business until 1914, when it sold out to the Texas Southern Electric Company, backed by Boston capital and later known as the Texas Gas & Electric Company.

The bad luck continued with this company until November, 1921, when a receiver sold out its interests here as well as other places to the Texas Central Power Company. In spite of serious reverses by way of washouts, Texas Central Power Company has again rebuilt the dam, added a one hundred foot wing, installed the latest machinery and out of the Buchel beginning has given to Cuero one of the most substantial power plants in the whole of Texas.

HENNEKE BROS

B54

Auto Sales, Service, Supplies-Farm Equipment Sales & Service

In July 1924, Fred H. Henneke and Henry T. Henneke formed a partnership and purchased an automotive and farm equipment business along with a gasoline service station from their brother, "Charley" Henneke. The Henneke brothers were reared in the Green DeWitt Community of DeWitt Co.

Fred Henneke had worked briefly for the City of Cuero before joining the bookkeeping department of Breeden Bros. General Store. Henry Henneke had been employed by the Buick Automobile Agency. While employed there, he was sent for mechanical training at the Buick Manufacturing Plant. With this schooling, Henry became a highly-qualified factory-trained mechanic on all phases of the gasoline engine and mechanical parts of the automobile.

The two brothers made a good business team. Henry's mechanical knowledge was a rarity at the time and Fred's experience in merchandising and bookkeeping rounded out their business experience. Both Fred and Henry could speak, read, and write the German language which brought them much of the German farming trade in the area.

Henneke Bros. was based on the business generated by the local farm and ranch economy. Most of their business was therefore on "credit." The customer bought everything on a "charge account" payable when the crops were harvested and sold or when the poultry or livestock were marketed. In this type of business, debts were usually paid once a year "When the crops came in."

The business establishment of Henneke Bros. consisted of three adjoining buildings which were located on the West Side of South Esplanade extending from South Railroad St. to the Cuero Water Tower. The corner building included the business office, the sales room for the Moline Farm Implements Agency, and the agency for "Star," "Durant" and "Flint" autos manufactured by Durant Motor Co. As radios became available, the Henneke Bros. had the agencies for Atwater Kent and Stewart Warner radios. This corner building also contained the Firestone Tire Agency and the less expensive Star Tire Agency as well as the Willard Storage Battery and the Reliable Storage Battery Agencies. Anders Auto Parts and Supply, then based in in Moulton, was also represented in Cuero by the Henneke Bros. Along the curb of the corner building and extending in front of the second building were four Gulf Oil Co. gasoline pumps and oil drums. Oil was sold only in bulk since oil in cans had not yet appeared. Alongside they also sold Texaco Oil and gas. Fred usually handled this unit, although the brothers worked together as the situation required. Employees included one full-time tire department employee who changed flats, mounted new tire and vulcan-ized damaged tires or tubes if necessary. Two employees, usually an adult and a teenager were hired to handle the gas pump and oil business.

The center building of the complex housed a "Tin Shop" in the rear. This was owned by Mr. Alois Ramiriez, an immigrant from the German-Austrian border. As a "tinner", he made cisterns, feed and watering troughs for farm animals, and could mend rusted or damaged metal auto fenders and bodies. The front part of this building unit was used as a storage space for four cars and housed the Henneke Bros. wrecker as well as a "road service vehicle" so that service could be provided any place in the trade area for flats, motor trouble, accident damage, etc. This rounded out Henry's full service garage.

The garage occupied the third and largest building of the complex which had four doors opening on Esplanade. Each opening could accommodate three or four cars. Three of these doors were used for all types of mechanical and body repair. Besides Henry, there were three trained mechanics and usually two young men apprentices.

The fourth opening was the "Official Headlight Inspection Station for DeWitt County." This was operated under the sole supervision of Henry who held a "Texas State Headlight Inspectors License." In about 1927 the State of Texas passed a law requiring all automobiles and trucks to install electric tail lights in place of the oil lamps on the cars. Henry taught his nephew, Larry Henneke, the installation procedure for electric tail lamps. Henry gave Larry a cardboard box full of the tail lights, a roll of insulated lamp wire, a pair of pliers, and a screwdriver. Larry pulled the box with a rope from car to car (mostly Model T's) which were lined up usually for blocks. Larry's small size was an asset since he could easily work underneath the cars.

The state law required each auto owner to present an official inspection certificate when purchasing license plates each year. Each county had only one inspection station so every car in DeWitt County had to be inspected by Henneke Bros. each year for a fee of 25 cents plus the cost of bulb replacement, realignment, or other repairs.

In the late 1920's the Henneke brothers sponsored one of the biggest events in Cuero when they brought the original Amos and Andy of early radio fame to their store. Freeman Gosden (Amos) and Charles Correll (Andy) entertained a large crowd in front of the Henneke Bros. store.

Henneke Bros. did very well until 1929 when the stock market crashed. The Great Depression hit suddenly and farmers did not have enough money to pay for items bought on "credit." Due to the rapid expansion of Henneke Bros. from 1924-1929 and since most sales were on "credit", the firm was suddenly in bad financial condition. After they had managed to collect a few of the accounts, in an effort to recoup they acquired a small neighborhood service station with a small grocery which was located on the southwest corner of Morgan and Esplanade. They also acquired another small station with gas, oil, and groceries including a water well and campground for migrant farm workers. This was located on the Yoakum Highway about 34 mile north of Cuero.

In 1933 Fred and Henry dissolved the partnership. Henry moved to another location on the corner of Esplanade and Courthouse St. and opened a garage and gas station including auto parts, wrecker service, and Firestone tires. Henry continued to operate under the name of Hy. T. Henneke Auto Supply Station (See separate story.) until he retired in 1957. Fred kept the small convenience store with gas station and the campground with small grocery and gas station for farm laborers. He also kept the Star Tire Agency. Fred later disposed of these and became associated with the Crescent Valley Creamery in Cuero.

ART STUDIO

B55

Art studio and real estate office in Yorktown. Former Yorktown depot.

When you reach the end of Riedel Street, traveling south in the city of Yorktown, the old railroad depot will loom up directly in front of you. The sign on the building reads "Circle N Realty".

In 1978, Joe and Tommie Nuinez became real estate brokers and started doing business as "Circle N Realty", operating out of the Yorktown Produce Company, which was a feed, seed, and fertilizer business owned and operated by Mr. Nuinez, located on the corner of Westhoff and Eckhardt Streets. In 1982, Mr. Nuinez went to full time ranching and closed the doors of his business.

Looking for a new location for Circle N Realty, it was decided to remove the fertilizer and hay which was stored in the old depot building and set up business there. The depot had been purchased from South Pacific Transportation Company in 1973, to be used as a warehouse for feed and fertilizer.

Along with selling real estate, Tommie Nuinez set up her easel and painted in her spare time. This turned into an ongoing business that is still enjoyed at this writing.

Inspiration for hundreds of paintings came to realization in this historic, hundred year old building, and today the paintings are in homes and businesses scattered to the far edges of Texas, Oklahoma, and maybe another state or two.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK

B56

First National Bank - Yoakum

Like many other small-town general stores, the store of C. Eckhardt & Sons became a gathering place and from time to time, people would ask Caesar Eckhardt to hold money for them. It was put in tagged pouches and stored in the back of the store. At times, as has been done since earliest history, Mr. Eckhardt used some of these funds for his own investments, replacing them as soon as a transaction was completed.

In time, it occurred to him that this was in itself a good business and he started a private bank — still in the back of his store. The bank grew and another building was constructed for it, adjoining the store building.

In October, 1903, William Eckhardt, son of Caesar Eckhardt, withdrew from the mercantile business and established the First National Bank, the Eckhardt family being the principal stockholders. Officers elected were: William Eckhardt, President; Fred Dahme, Vice-President; Charles J. Eckhardt, Cashier and Gus Eckhardt, Assistant Cashier.

By March 2, 1904 all the capital stock in the bank, amounting to $25,000, had been paid in. The panic of 1907 spelled doom for a great many banks about the nation but the First National Bank came through it in good shape. It was reported in January, 1908 that a four percent semi-annual dividend of $2,000 had been paid and $3,000 had been added to the surplus fund. By June, 1908 the surplus fund was $18.500.

During this period the Eckhardt family had gradually acquired more of the bank's stock and the bank continued to grow. By mid April, 1913 the capital stock had increased to $75,000. A statement during this month indicated loans of $218,824.79 and deposits of $177,174.15.

About this time the majority control of the bank stock was sold by the Eckhardt family to Messrs. William Green and Philip Welhausen. Mr. Green took over as president and the bank entered into an era of new ideas. For one thing, it was decided that the bank had outgrown its quarters. By 1914 the bank was installed in a new building at the southwest corner of Main and Riedel Streets and at that time, Mr. Green said, "The new bank building is not too small. It will accommodate the bank as long as there is a bank in Yorktown."

Bank deposits grew until 1928, when they amounted to $868,000. A new president, Mr. E.B. Zincke, had taken command in 1927 after the death of Mr. Green. Apparently Mr. Zincke saw financial storm warnings in advance. In late 1929 the "Great Depression" came, to be marked by bank failures all over the country. However, Mr. Zincke had put more assets into Government bonds and once again the First National Bank of Yorktown came safely through a period of national financial disaster. Deposits did drop to a low of $343,000 in mid 1933 but by December, 1975 Mr. Lou Evans Gips became president of the bank and in the following August, ownership was sold to Family Financial Institution.

Despite the addition of a drive-in facility and a walk-in facility, the bank's quarters were inadequate. A new and far larger building was planned, to include a spacious assembly room for meetings of civic and other organizations, and upstairs office space was provided. Property on the corner of Main and Gohmert was acquired.

Formal groundbreaking ceremonies were held in January of 1981 and the institution's new home was formally opened on March 21, 1982.

MAIN FLOWER AND GIFT SHOP

B57

The Main Flower Shop was established by Mary Frances Gruneward and her brother, Lovel (Dickie) Blain in May of 1972 in their mother's home at 502 E. Main Street. They continued this business until September, 1, 1978.

On October 3, 1978 the present owner Wiona M. (Tonie) Metting, reopened the shop and continued the business in that place for another five years. Then she moved it to the present location at 136 W. Main Street, the former site for housing the First National Bank in the two-tory brick building adjoining the Charles Eckhardt and Sons store. Several offices were upstairs and as a child, Tonie, visited the dentist, Dr. P.C. Kromer's office there.

The brick building was dismantled in the 1970's, leaving a beautiful stone wall exposed. The Metting family, utilizing the old foundation footings along with a new slab, built a two story building of steel framework, steel siding and steel inside paneling. Very little wood was used inside the building. The beautiful stone wall has been cleaned and replastered and adds much to the inside of the shop. Much of the structural steel is salvaged bridge framework.

Almost all of the building was done by the James Metting family with James doing the engineering, designing and most of the work. James, Jr. and David did the welding of the framework. John, even though only ten years of age, put many of the bolts in place. Everyone, including the girls helped with the big job of pouring and finishing the slab.

Tonie and her daughter, Marie, operate the shop with the help of a fine staff. In 1985 the shop was renamed Main Flower and Gift Shop. Many gift items, as well as, china flatware and crystal have been added. Children love the stuffed animals and balloons. Flowers have been prepared for many weddings and special attention is given to families in their bereavement. The florists truly care about the needs of each customer. This full service shop does its utmost to give the best personal service possible.

The Wilders employ three Yorktown residents and have plans for expanding the facilities in the future for increased production. Their products are wholesale throughout the United States.

In several public demonstrations in Yorktown, youngsters, especially, watched wideeyed as the Wilders created handsome vases using a hunk of clay, deft hands and a potter's wheel.

Recently the Wilders opened a retail shop called "Creations" at Padre-Staples Mall in Corpus Christi and a second store will open March 1, in Fredericksburg, Texas.

NAU BROTHERS OF YORKTOWN

B61

E. Nau

The Nau Brothers business was a dry goods store. The brothers were E. Nau and G.J. Nau, who started their business in Yorktown on July 15, 1901. Having a very small capital, they could not make much of a show, but their motto from the first day was to be strictly honest and upright, and by always selling for cash at the lowest possible prices, they succeeded in building up a splendid trade. Their patronage extended throughout the entire county and surrounding counties. They carried general dry goods, clothing, shoes, hats, trunks, etc.

G.J. Nau

Nau Brothers also had a well fitted photo studio in connection with their store. E. Nau, the senior member, had worked at photo business for thirteen years with Fey & Braunig of Hallettsville and had a reputation of being an artist equal to almost any in this part of the state.

G.J. Nau was also secretary and general sales agent of the Yorktown Truck Growers Association, and president of the Yorktown fire department.

OTTO AND HUGO RAU SALOON B63

1910 L-R: Otto and Hugo Rau inside Otto's Saloon

Inside new saloon after 1913 fire. L-R: Hugo Rau, Walter Rau, Otto Rau.

Westoff, Texas

On Nov. 10, 1908, Otto Rau purchased Lot 16, Block 16, in Westhoff, Texas from Otto Bruening which was the site of Otto's saloon. Otto Rau was a farmer and a land owner in the Westoff area since at least the early 1900s and continued to live in Westoff with his wife Mary (Metting) where they raised their two sons Oscar and Arnold.

Hugo Rau moved his family from the Lindenau area to Westoff in the early 1900s to help his brother, Otto, in the saloon business.

At the time Westoff was a new booming community, the prosperity of the saloon business was evident. The Rau brothers, in addition to their saloon and farming endeavors became early land speculators and developers, buying and selling lots in Westoff. On Nov. 19, 1912, Otto Rau dedicated a subdivision on the North West side of Westhoff containing 56 lots called, "Otto Rau's Addition to the town of Westoff."

In 1913 an arsonist set fires to several buildings in Westoff after first draining the town's water tower. Since fire fighters had to bring water from as far away as Cuero, 13 businesses on Houston Street had burned down to the ground before the fire was brought under control, including Otto's saloon. The arsonist fled town and was never caught. The effects of the fire was so devastating to the town, it never fully recovered.

Hugo and Otto Rau rebuilt the saloon after the 1913 fire and the new saloon's bar is shown in the photo with the three men behind the bar. The business name "Rau Brothers" is engraved on a name plat on the top of the brass cash register. On the mirror above the cash register is a sign, "God Bless Our Home". The men are (left) Hugo Rau, (center) possibly Walter Ray, (right) Otto Rau. The calendar on the wall was put out by Lynch Drug Co. of Westoff and indicates a date of Feb., 1915. Sitting on the counter under the calendar is a game board which was a game of chance. This along with cards and dominoes probably provided most of the entertainment. The bar was custom built of solid walnut with a brass foot rail, brass spittoons, and beveled glass mirrors. Behind the bar appears to be two large pillars supporting a section of decorative woodwork. This actually is a hand painted mural on the wall. The new building had electricity and a telephone as can be noted in the photograph.

New saloon built after 1913 fire W. Westhoff. Man holding reins is Otto Rau. Man standing at rear of wagon may be Town Marshall Charlie Rau.

The bar was fully equipped with all the favorite brand brews such as Triple X Lager Beer, Schlitz, and Texas Pride, which were sold for 5° a glass. Various Brands of cigars could be purchased. Liquors were from Hirsch Distillery, Sunny Brook (sign on wall) and probably others.

An event that caused a great deal of excitement occurred when a burglar tried to break into Hugo's safe in the saloon one night and jammed the lock. The next morning, Hugo discovered the burglary, but could not open the safe himself since the lock was damaged. He decided to dynamite open the safe himself, however, not being very proficient with dynamite, he evidently used far too much, for the resulting explosion destroyed all their money that was in the safe. His wife never let him live that one down and it became a family joke that always brought a good laugh.

Another matter of interest, during this same time period, the Rau brothers had a younger brother named Charlie, who was elected by the town folks as town marshall. His jail was located beyond the outhouses that were directly behind the Rau Brothers' Saloon.

Hugo Rau became sole owner of the saloon in 1917 and continued to operate as a saloon until 1920 when prohibition came into effect. He then was forced to convert the saloon into a short-order cafe. Hugo's wife, Ida (Metting), and daughters, Elsie and Erna, managed the cafe. Ida baked fresh pies and bread every day while the daughters waited tables. The cafe was not as profitable as the saloon business had been, therefore, it was sold on Dec. 11, 1922 to E.A. Tully.

Hugo later sold his farm on the Yorktown Road 1 mile South of Westoff and moved his family to Alice, Texas, where he farmed and lived out the rest of his life.

LOUIS KELLER, CROCKERY AND HOUSE FURNISHINGS B64

Probably no city of this size in the Union could boast of a finer or more complete stock of china, crockery, glassware and house furnishing goods than was shown by this firm. The two-story brick building 30x75, which was erected and occupied in the year 1890, is a handsome structure. Inside you could see show cases filled with silver and silver-plated hollow-ware, of which all the best brands were kept in stock. On the left was Haviland china, white and decorated, for painting. This china could be had in tea or dinner sets. In English decorated dinnerware they showed ten openstock patterns. Cut glassware, in handsome designs, mingled with Royal Worcester and Milano Art Pieces, were shown on center tables. The firm was an agent for the American Lamp Company, who were considered the most artistic lamp manufacturers in the world. Also, a line of fancy baskets, stationery and druggists' sundries were kept, with samples of toys and dolls kept down during the summer, completed the lines shown on the first floor.

On the second floor, all the heavy glassware, Carlsbad China and toys were kept. The whole length of this floor had shelves running from floor to ceiling filled with toys.

In the house-furnishing department, 25x65, there was a handsome line of Buck's stoves and ranges; 26 samples were shown. These stoves had exclusive features not to be found in others, and all were in line. Coal oil, gasoline and alcohol stoves, tinware, woodenware, willow-ware and stove fixtures could be had. Agate-ware was shown, and samples of this ware covered half the side shelves.

Messrs. Louis, Anton and Chas. Keller would take care of you in the house furnishings department, while in the crockery department Messrs. V.J. Grunder, George Kleinecke and Miss Nora Nitche would show you the finest stock in all Southwest Texas and Dave Lewis would deliver your purchases.

CUERO CREAMERY

The Cuero Creamery had been in successful operation here for several years, by 1906. It was an enterprise that had earned a neat dividend for its shareholders every year of its existence, and its products were sold all over the state. Some of its patrons had received high receipts during it monthly pay rolls, while a great many farmers of this immediate section of country had been enabled to milk good stock for this creamery and had to maintain themselves and their farms the year through on a cash basis, with all of the satisfaction and advantage which this condition means to a farmer's affairs. The directors of the creamery were Judge Edward Koenig, Charles Fischer, H.F. Dahlman, Henry Rau and Walter Reiffert. They had as buttermaker Mr. J.M. Eubanks, who did all of the work of the plant and kept everything in such thorough and perfect condition as to put out a product second to nothing manufactured in America. The test of merit of this creamery's butter had been that the dealers of the different cities of the state who had been using it for years continued with it and had no complaint except that they could not get enough of it. The introduction of the creamery in Cuero brought scores of the finest dairy cattle to be obtained in the country into this immediate section.

RICHARD HARRIS HACK SERVICE

The bus and transfer business is quite an important item in the transactions of a city as well as a public convenience. This line of business is conducted by Richard Harris, who came to Cuero in 1890 from Tennessee with a wagon and team as the sum of his worldly possessions. He began driving a hack about 1891 and the extensive business he built up was due to his energy and close attention to the wants of this customers. His carriages and baggage transfer, ran from all trains, and he also had a number of fine vehicles which were in constant demand. He owned several dravwagons and took contracts for moving household furniture and hauling building materials. He contracted to excavate foundations and remove the dirt and when a new business block was erected in Cuero he usually did all the necessary hauling. His stable contained fourteen head of horses, five fine carriages and other vehicles representing an investment of $4000. Dick Harris built up a paying business in Cuero and there were few cities in the state which had better service. Cuero offered a fine field for operations in his line and he filled the want in a manner which reflects credit upon himself and made a good impression upon the traveling public.

THE NOSTER MEAT MARKET

B67

Workers at the Noster Meat Market on First Street with the specially equipped horse-drawn delivery wagon. The only person identified is Oscar Noster, 2nd from the left.

Later view of Noster Meat Market building

A Noster Meat Market was maintained over a hundred years in Yorktown by three generations of the family. The first one was established by Gustave Adolph Noster ca 1874 in the area of the southwest corner of the present City Park when beef sold for four cents a pound. His mall rectangular wood frame shop was the first such for Yorktown. Adolph came from a line of butchers, having learned the trade from his father, Rudolf Julius Wilhelm Noster whose wife was Alvina Ernestina Rosalie (Kraege) Noster. When Adolph was born on April 21, 1851, his parents resided in Freideberg, Province of Brandenberg, Germany, Kingdom of Prussia. His grandparents, who lived there too, were butcher Johann Friedrich and Dorothee Frederike (Benekendorf) Noster and Johann Friedrich Wilhelm and Auguste Dorothee (Warnicke) Kraege. Adolph had two younger brothers, Fritz and Rudolf, and a younger sister, Elise Anna (Schuchardt).

When Adolph, as he was called, came to Texas at the age of 18, his ship first landed in New York, then in New Orleans on January 12, 1870 and finally at Indianola. From there he went through Victoria and Meyersville to Yorktown. He made his Declaration of Intention to become a citizen of the United States of America on August 5, 1873 in Clinton, DeWitt County, Texas. This citizenship was granted on March 12, 1875 by the District Court at Helena, Karnes County, Texas.

Adolph married Ida Range in Yorktown in 1874. Her parents were Johann and Pauline (Reuser) Range of Yorktown. Ida had three brothers, Julius, Herman, and Albert, and one sister, Agnes. Ida attended school in Yorktown. The Adolph Nosters had the following children: William (who died at birth), "Fritz," Adolph and Herman (twins), Oscar, Pauline, Agnes, Alvina, and Frieda (who died in infancy). Adolph was a strong husky man. Once when a steer charged him, he caught the animal by the horns and wrestled him to the ground. With his father-in-law, he roped wild horses at Pilot Knob near Nordheim, Texas, and brought them home to tame and to sell. In a more gentle role, Adolph often starred by having the leading part in the monthly dramas presented at the Lenz Theatre. This theatre, saloon and hotel combination, was situated on Main Street where City Hall and Wolf's Store are now.

Ida (Range) Noster died at age 35, on February 22, 1894, after the birth of her ninth child, Frieda. A blizzard that night covered the ground with snow. Her bier was carried on a wagon drawn by horses from her home at Second and Eckhardt Streets to the Westside Cemetery for burial. Thee band to which Adolph belonged, followed the wagon, played and marched in the snow all the way to the cemetery. Baby Frieda lived only a few months. Adolph and his mother-in-law worked together to rear his seven children to be a large family of honorable sons and daughters.

Adolph retired from the meat market around 1914 and turned the work over to his sons, Herman and Oscar, who had learned the trade from him and had helped in his market a number of years. For some time a shop was maintained on First and Eckhardt Streets and later one at 115 S. Church Street in the small frame Louis Strieber building which had a smaller shop in the back for smoking sausages. Emil Galle was a helper and when Herman left the market, Oscar's wife worked with her husband in his shop. Due to ill health, Oscar retired in 1945. Soon after this, his son, Henry, returned from the armed service and reopened the meat market. His partner was Herbert Baschnagel. They named the shop, "H. and H. Meat Market." In 1956 after Herbert moved to Houston, Henry moved the market to 202 E. Main, added a grocery section and had his wife, Mildred, as a partner until the business was sold in 1988 to Gary and Kay Hilbrich. That transaction ended an era of over one hundred years of meat marketing for the Noster Family from a time when the hide of a cow was worth more than its meat to a time when a soup bone costs as much as a whole cow used to cost!

"THE OLD BLACKSMITH SHOP"

1925 Blacksmith Shop with Minnie (Eilers) Mueller and Rudolf Mueller with sons Rudy and Willie

It was a proud day for Rudolf Mueller when he and his brother Johann arrived in the port of Galveston in 1914. Leaving their homeland of West Germany was not an easy decision, knowing they might not see their family again. Crossing the Atlantic Ocean on the "Bremen",

1959 Rudolf Mueller in front of Blacksmith Shop

a huge passenger ship to America, was quite an adventure. Rudolf had just turned 21 and Johann was only 15. They had relatives in the Shiner, Texas are and had hopes of finding jobs.

Rudolf had completed 4 years of training as a blacksmith and wheelwright at one of Germany's best schools of trade. Good blacksmiths were in demand and he soon had a job in Shiner. Johann grew homesick and returned to the family in Germany; where he still lives today at 90 years of age. Rudolf was determined to succeed and worked hard at the career he had chosen. Soon he was able to go into a partnership with Mr. Joe Ruby, the owner of the shop.

During these early years house parties were the popular way for friends and neighbors to get together. It was at a Christmas party where Rudolf met Miss Minnie Eilers from Dreyer, Texas; a small town southwest of Shiner. A special friendship grew into love and they were married on July 20th, 1916 in the beautiful DeWitt County Courthouse in Cuero, Texas. The 16 year old bride was lovely in an old-fashioned lace trimmed dress. She watched in amazement at the jewelers while the matching wedding bands were carved from a block of pure gold and engraved inside with the couple's initials. They traveled to Shiner in a Model-T Ford and moved into a little white frame house that still stands there today.

In 1924 Rudolf and Minnie built their own blacksmith shop in Dreyer on the John H. Mueller farm, where Minnie had spent her childhood. By this time they had 2 sons. Rudy, born in 1919 and Willie, born in 1923. A daughter, Annette was born in 1925. In 1926 the Rudolf Mueller family moved to Concrete, Texas; a tiny settlement located 11 miles north of Cuero.

They rented a house on the W.W. McCormick place. The blacksmith shop was moved from Dreyer to Concrete on wagons pulled by teams of horses and mules.

Arriving at Concrete near sundown, the teams were exhausted and there was very little light to see by. The horses and mules were unhitched and stabled while the shop was left standing in the dirt road which passed through the little town. The large double doors were opened wide and lanterns were hung to light the traffic which had to pass through the shop. There were wagons, buggies, old-tyme cars and even a bus passed through during the night. At daylight the shop was moved onto the McCormick place where it stood for 2 years as a business. In 1929 a 63 acre farm was bought from the Staplefeldt acreage and a new home built. Once again the shop was moved; where it became a lifetime heritage for the Mueller family. Rudolf and Minnie worked hard, with the help of their children, working both the blacksmith shop and the farm. Another son, John Fred was born in 1934 and another daughter, Jo Anne Minnie in 1936.

Rudolf was excellent at his trade, making quality horseshoes, wagon wheels, branding irons, sweeps, plow-points, tools and farm equipment parts. He made special "shoes" for "fresnors" and with the help of his sons, Rudy and Bill, took them to the Allen-Rich Taylor and Boothe gravel pits for "mounting". He also sharpened tools, plow-points, water well bits and many other items.

In 1935 when Highway 183 came through, lots of blacksmith work was needed by the highway department and business was good. One of Rudolf's favorite jobs was working with horses and mules and he was an excellent horseman. The hooves were trimmed and filed with a rasp; then horseshoes nailed on with loving care. This was also a favorite line for the children when they got to hold the horse by the reins and were assured of an exciting horseback ride later. John Fred enjoyed going with his Dad to shoe the horses at thee Tex-Tan Tannery in Yoakum. He held the horses by their harnesses and comforted them during the work so they would not have to be tied or hobbled. The daughters too have special memories of helping out at the shop. Many times Annette would be needed to turn the blower to the home-made coal forge; standing on a wooden box to reach the handle. There was always plenty to do during summer months. During the winter when farm work was slow and business slack, Rudolf would find work in blacksmith shops all over the State of Texas, always returning to his little shop and family in Concrete where his special times were spent on creative work; such as initials and ornamental ironwork.

The shop was sold; dismantled and moved from Concrete in January 1959 and a dream was ended for Rudolf. He left this world the following September at the age of 65, enjoying their children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren until November of 1984. They are both buried in Hermannson's Cemetery; not too far from where they had spent most of their lives.

Now only photographs and memories remain, along with a heritage that will long be cherished and remembered by their descendants.

THE BAR LS RANCH

B69

The dream of being a real "cowboy" is one shared by many Texans over the years, since earliest times of the wild frontier days. For Leo Shimek this became a reality and a way of life. Born in 1928 on a farm near Sweet Home, Texas, he lost his mother at age three. This caused many heartaches for him, his Dad and three older brothers. The depression of the 30's brought hard time for all the country and jobs were scarce.

In 1936 the family moved to the Eugene Placke Ranch near Yoakum in DeWitt County. They did farm and ranch work and Leo learned to love the horses, cattle and country life. They lived in an old log house with a "dog-run", which once had a stagecoach in and relay station. After growing up he tried various jobs but he preferred the country life and work he grew up to love.

1975 Leo Shimek and Tex II, Concrete, TX

1976 Leo Shimek and "Dusty" after a hard day's work

In 1955 he met Miss JoAnne Mueller from Concrete, Texas and they were married on October 19th, 1956. By this time he was employed as a lineman for Lay Construction Company in Corpus Christi, Texas. In 1960 they returned to DeWitt County where they started a small ranch. They raised Braford, Brangus and Charbray cattle over the years; many descended from "Tex I", their first registered Brahma Bull.

Leo did farm and ranch work for many local ranchers, living 13 years on the "Brushy Creek Ranch" near Yoakum. The ranch was owned by the Garland Houck Family. Leo was well known and liked for his good work and his honesty. His pleasant personality won him respect and many friends.

In the 70's Leo and his cow horse "Dusty" became a favorite pair to call on at round-up time and when special jobs needed doing. He was joined by his sons, David and Danny as they grew up under his teaching. His young daughters, Laurelie and Leilanie also learned horsemanship plus farm and ranch chores; so the family was close. The children loved and respected their Dad and he was always a good provider.

The Bar LS Ranch, located near Concrete and Hochheim, Texas grew and prospered. In October of 1979, Leo was called home at the age of 51, leaving a great emptiness in the hearts of his family and friends. Today six lovely grandchildren are told about their Granddad who was a real cowboy, and are taken on horseback rides on "Dusty", who is still a beautiful spirited mare, age 20. For JoAnn and the family, many precious memories remain, along with photographs and the Bar LS Homestead, and a very special heritage. This story is lovingly dedicated to: Tammy Shimek, Nicole Shimek, John Shimek, Issac Lokey, Sharalie Lokey and Cassondra Holeman - The grandchildren who never got to meet their wonderful Granddad. THE FRITZ RIEDEL OPERA HOUSE

A fascinating history is that of a small tract of land at the corner of North Church and Main Street in Yorktown, which through many transactions, went from the hands of Captain John York's Estate to that of the present owners of a modern Texaco Station, Mr. and Mrs. Roland Riedesel. The first transaction came in 1854 when it became necessary to sell some of the York Estate to pay for some debts. At that time Franz Hoppe purchased over 1,000 acres ($2 per acre) of the Yorktown Tract whereby he literally saved the little town from being dismembered by sale to many outside buyers. He was the agent for many Yorktown citizens who had pledged to buy plots from him. Through the years, other owners of the corner lot were the Moritz Ridels, Dr. and Mrs. Wm. Cornick, the Fritz Riedels, the Herman Riedels, the Harlan Riedels, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Gras and eventually the Roland Riedesels.

In 1872 Fritz Riedel purchased the corner "one acre" from Mrs. Mary Cornick for $150. After Fritz Riedel married Johanna Duderstadt in 1866, they lived in a rock home near the corner of North Riedel and 19th Streets. He operated the first brewery in Yorktown and in 1871 established his Lone Star Saloon on the North Riedel and Main Street corner. To the east of the saloon, in 1892, he built the Riedel Opera House. The new two-story colonial style Riedel home was situated just east of that.

The opera house was unique in that it and the saloon were cooled by ceiling fans operated by a gas engine outside of the buildings. The opera house had an arched entrance, a balcony, a stage with footlights, draw curtains and a painted backdrop. Here home talent and traveling vaudeville presentations drew large crowds. Yorktown's own musical groups called the Ideal Band, the Lone Star Orchestra and the later Yorktown Concert Orchestra all appeared regularly at the monthly presentations. A Texas Lutheran College group presented a play. Teamsters made it a point to be in Yorktown for the balls, socials, etc. The town marshall, Mr. Gus Lenz, is still remembered by citizens today for his vocal solos and his melodious voice like that of the late Italian Enrico Caruso.

An excerpt from the Dec. 7, 1897 Yorktown News, notes: "Last Saturday night the Woodman entertainment came off at Riedel's Hall...

. from the applause and hilarity with which it was received, it must have pleased the audience immensely." The first movies in Yorktown were silent and shown in tents. These air domes, as the tents were called, were later named the Electric Garden, which in 1916 advertised, "Three big reels every night." When movies were shown later in the opera house, it actually became the first movie house for the town. Not all movies were for mere entertainment. An ad in the October 17, 1912 Yorktown News announces a movie at the opera house on October 22: "The Clothing Industry.' (From sheep to wearer . . . shows all stages of making clothes.) "The Graduate" showed hand tailored clothes for young men and "Wooly Boy" was about clothing for boys. Admission was free. In 1927 C.W. Frels brought talking pictures to town in his L'Arcade Theatre on East Main.

A favorite type of dance at the opera house was that for which the young ladies made themselves calico dresses and saved a sample of the material. At the dance the men would draw a swatch from a box and whoever got one that matched a lady's dress, became her dancing partner! Masquerade dances for adults and for young people were also popular.

Other places of entertainment before Riedel's Opera House included Strieber's private hall in 1855 and Heissig's hall in Upper Town. In 1856 Gohmert's Theatre was built having a large dance area and a stage with curtain and scenery painted by a Mr. Freye. This theatre was destroyed in an 1862 tornado. Lenz's Theatre at the southwest corner of Riedel and Main, was built ca 1866 and was the center for balls, receptions, musicals, etc.

The Riedel Opera House and the Lone Star Saloon were torn down in the 1940's to make room for a Texaco Gas station and in 1985, the colonial home was moved to make room for expansion of this station owned by Mr. and Mr. Roland Riesdel, and to provide parking space for Cuero Federal Savings situated next door at 225 East Main Street.

YORKTOWN'S FIRST LUMBER YARD

B7

In 1886 Cuero resident, William Westhoff senior and William A. Eckhardt established Yorktown's first lumber yard. It was situated on South Riedel Street near the depot and became one of the best suppliers of lumber in DeWitt and surrounding counties. The plant grew to occupy two and one-half acres with warehouse, store, sash and doors and office in separate buildings. The business was called

The 1913 Yorktown Fire Department and Nau Brothers Yorktown Harvest Feast horse-drawn floats "parked" on the Riedel Corner at Church and N. Main. Festoons across the street and on the Riedel home (right) were hung by a Mr. Todd. In the center is the Fritz Riedel Opera House with its tall facade, and to its left is the Fritz Riedel Lone Star Saloon with its sign: "Glad U Kum."

For the Harvest Feasts begun in 1912, festooned streets and buildings by Mr. Todd add a festive atmosphere to Fritz Riedel's Lone Star Saloon, his adjoining Opera House and the Riedel home, all facing Main Street at North Church. The rider is unidentified.

Mr. Westhoff had a penchant for creating unusual floats for parades. This oxen-drawn boat with wooden door "sails" and "propelled by Messrs. Heath and Wells," was the Westhoff-Eckhardt Lumber Co. (WELCO) entry in a Harvest Feast Parade.

Westhoff-Eckhardt Lumber Company. After the death of William Westhoff, senior, his son, William, junior became owner of his father's share. In1914 he purchased Mr. Eckhardt's share and named the plant W. Westhoff Retail Lumber Yard, which in 1923 was changed to Westhoff Lumberyard. In 1944 the business was sold to Alamo Lumber Company and later the property was sold to Yorktown Elevator Company.

William Westhoff Senior came to Meyersville before the Civil War, moved to Indianola and from there to Cuero in 1878. William junior, born at Indianola came to Yorktown in 1888 after attending Texas A&M College. On November 16, 1897, he married Louise E. Korth in Yorktown. They had one daughter, Rosa Lou (Skinner).

In addition to owning and managing a lumberyard, Mr. Westhoff was a director of the First National Bank, and organizer and director of the Yorktown Cotton Oil and Manufacturing Company. He served as an alderman in the town and in 1929 was elected Mayor of Yorktown.

William Westhoff junior died on July 20, 1940 and Louise, his wife, died on October 15, 1944. They are buried in the Westside Cemetery at Yorktown.

Presently 1990 Yorktown has two lumberyards. They are The Blaschke Lumber Company and The Home Lumber Company.

TEXAS HOTEL

B72

The first recorded land transaction on which this building is situated was redeed from Cuero Land & Immigration Co. to ...L. Qualls and J.H. Kent of Gonzales County in March 1873 for $275.00. This was for the corner property being 60's on Esplanade and 125' on Church Street. In September of that year, the property was sold to Baker and Woodworth for $375.00. In August 1881 they sold 15½' fronting on Esplanade going back 50' on the south part to George Wallingford for $400.00. Jeff Dietze now has his law offices on this land.

In February 1894 John Stratton purchased

the corner property from Baker & Woodworth for $6,000.00. There had been some improvements made and evidently it was a dry goods store. In that same year Mr. Stratton built a two-story brick building on this corner complete with basement. The eye-catching feature was a corner turret with a tin roof of unusual design on the upper story. Mr. Stratton dealt in harnesses, saddlery, carriages, buggies and wagons. An old newspaper article stated he came to Cuero in 1875 and opened a saddlery and harness business the next year. Two years later he added "a fine line of vehicles". This article also noted he would be moving on November 1, 1895 to another building he was erecting which would be two doors down on Esplanade.

În October 1879 Mr. Stratton had purchased a piece of land from Cuero Land & Immigration Co. for $150.00. This was immediately behind the corner property and fronted on Church Street. This land is referred to in deeds as the Stratton Livery Stables property. In 1897 Mr. Stratton extended the brick corner building onto this property. It is not known what the second floor of this building was designed for, but at one time Dr. DeViney had his dental offices in the "tower room". When the addition was put on, the stairway to upstairs was changed. At an early date there was also a two-story wooden porch fronting out on Church Street.

In 1897 Mistrot & Bros. occupied some part of this building. This was a chain dry goods store that had moved from a building in the 100 block of West Main. Also, the front of the building on Esplanade had been glassed-in between the columns.

There are references to the upstairs being the Navidad Hotel in 1912. In 1913 Maude Butler purchased the building for $25,000.00 and the name changed to Butler Hotel. In 1916 Mr. R.M. Insall assumed a note on the building for $18,000. He evidently did not pay this as it was sold at sheriff's sale in 1917 and Mr. Stratton bought the property back for $5,205.00.

In 1929 Mr. C.D. Peavy purchased the property from the Stratton Estate. In the many years past it has also been the Florence Hotel and Texas Hotel and has housed many different businesses on the ground floor. It has been home to the Chamber of Commerce, Cuero Butane Gas Co., Thigpen Shoe Repair, Edgar Insurance, an antique store, a barber shop and an upholstery shop. There was a bowling alley downstairs at one time.

In 1979 Theo A. Reuss acquired the property from Margaret Peavy Heisig through a trade of buildings with the Buchel Bank. It had been used as a hotel until sometime in the 1960's and Mrs. Menke had had a dining room in the rear part at one time.

Joe Reuss acquired the property after the death of his father. Much of it stayed vacant for many years. In 1988 Joe decided to restore the exterior that was badly in need of paint and mortar around the bricks. The metal columns had been covered by wood and the glass in the upper portion of the porch covered over. These were returned to the original state. It was during this time that it was decided to "fix up" the back portion of the downstairs. It had been used for storage for a long time and the roof was gone on much of the one story portion. The interior walls of the front room had to be replastered but it was decided not to change the 15' ceiling. During this time interest had been shown in the upstairs so that came next. Joe decided to paint the hall walls, the stairway and install lighting. The original screen doors on all of the rooms were reworked and rehung. A basic amount of carpentry work was done. The upstairs now is fully occupied by offices, artists, crafts, antiques and pottery. The ground floor contains a dress shop in the newly decorated rear portion, an antique shop, a deli, gift shop and pet store.

This is certainly a far cry from the original intent of the builder and if the walls could talk, it would really be interesting.

This building is listed on the National Historic Register.

"LITTLE" STRATTON BUILDING

B73

This property in the 100 block of North Esplanade was also part of the Cuero Land and Immigration Co. and in March 1873 was sold to W.B. Gorman. In November of that year he sold the south half of the property to Anton Miller. That portion now houses Ruschaupt Plumbing. There is a reference in the abstract to a saloon called "Merchants Exchange" but it is not clear on which portion of land it resided.

In March 1879 John Stratton purchased the north half of this land. He had come to Cuero in 1875 and gone into the harness and saddlery business. It is assumed on this property. He also bought land to the rear of this, fronting on Church Street at the same time.

In 1894 he bought the property to the north of him on the Corner of Esplanade and Church Streets which adjoined his property on Church. He built a two story building with basement on that property. When this building (now referred to as the Texas Hotel) was completed, he moved his leather business there. In 1895 he erected a fire-proof iron, brick and concrete building on his original site. This two story building contained an apartment upstairs and an unfinished basement. The apartment had concrete floors and two fireplaces. It isn't known if the Strattons built this for themselves. The basement was used for tanning hides and had wooden racks suspended from the ceiling and a dirt floor. In November 1895 he moved back from the larger corner

In 1929 Mr. Stratton passed away. He was living in Bexar County at that time and the occupant of the building is now known. At one time Mr. and Mrs. Kautz, owners of the Standard Printing, lived upstairs in the apartment. Elmer Luddeke purchased the building from the Stratton Estate. During recent years it has housed Mr. Luddeke's office, Thompson Cleaners, Fischer Realty, an insurance company and a book store.

After Mr. Luddeke's death, the property was sold to Joe and Wanda Reuss. The ground floor had been divided into two businesses in earlier years and the front changed. Joe found the original doors, put them back on and restored the outside. During this time he decided something "had to be done" about the basement. The entrance was through a hole in the sidewalk covered over with boards. A portion of the front was moved to make room for an outside stairway down. A concrete floor was poured, ceiling installed along with lighting and air-conditioning. This has housed a gift shop and a game room but now is occupied by a financial adviser, Steve Wilde. He and his wife added partitions, installed kitchen facilities, painted the brick walls, carpeted and made a beautiful office in what had been a dirt floor basement.

The upstairs apartment was totally refinished and the fireplaces made to work again. Partitions were added to the one huge room to make a kitchen, bath, closet, utility room, bedroom and living area. A porch was added over the one story part of the downstairs to add a patio area. This apartment is occupied also.

This building is on the National Historic Register.

FIRST STATE BANK AND TRUST CO.

B74

First State Bank - Cuero

In May 1873 the Cuero Land and Immigration Co. sold to Robert P. Carr a parcel of land having a frontage on Esplanade of 78' and 125' frontage on Church Street for $45.00. This is the land housing the Burt Witcher Jewelers now and commonly thought of as the old Farmers State Bank and Trust Building.

In July 1876 the property was sold to Mike Omeara and reference is made to stables and stall improvements on it. In August 1877 it was sold to Mrs. Lizzie Baker and Mrs. V.W. Woodworth.

In 1892 a portion of the original tract was sold to the First National Bank of Cuero for $4000.00. This was a portion with 26' frontage on Esplanade and 125' frontage on Church Street. There was an agreement at that time that the bank was to erect a brick building of not less than two stories to be used for banking purposes. In agreement with this, the Bakers and Woodworths were to remove, within 90 days after completion of the building, the stable buildings situated on an adjoining lot and would not use or allow to be used for stable purposes or as a feed yard or stock pen of any kind. If the agreement was not complied with, damages of $20.00 per month would be assessed until removal. The building was erected in 1893 and was of pressed stone and brick, 26'X75' in dimension, two-story high and contained a two-story double fire-proof vault fitted with burglar proof chests, protected by Yale double time locks.

In 1907 the First National Bank agreed to voluntary liquidation and the First State Bank and Trust applied to the banking commission for charter and assumed this bank property for $11,000.00 on March 1907. At this time the following were named as Board of Directors for the first year and until their successors are elected and qualified as provided by law: Lee Joseph, C.G. Breeden, W.K. Breeden, J.J. Sum-ners, John Y. Bell, M. Byrne, William Buehrig, Stayton E. Weldon, T.A. Graves, Sam C. Lackey, S.J. Lackey, S.J. Friar, J.L. Dubose, A.S. Billings, J.N. Card, Emil Leonardt, John Rogge, Frederick Terrell, T.R. Taylor, John Duderstadt, Arthur Burns, W.D. Finney, Geo. J. Schleicher, J. Ed Lord and John M. Bennett.

In April 1913 the Woodworths and Bakers sold the north 26' of this property to Sam Lackey for $2,000.00 and he in turn sold it to the bank for the same amount. There is no mention of the use of this portion after the removal of the stables and stalls. This is the vacant property that was used for a drive-thru for many years.

In March 1926 the banking commission filed suit to declare the bank insolvent, the bank having closed its doors. The bank showed assets of $643,984.10 and capital and surplus of $147,195.72. They showed liabilities of $496,688.38 with corrections to this later and individual deposits of $340,595.61. The commission in the petition stated that the Farmers State Bank and Trust of Cuero had tentatively entered into a contract and agreement with the commission to take over all of the assets of the First Bank and Trust Co. and assume all liabilities of the bank. The following were selected as Board of Directors: Sam C. Lackey, S.J. Friar, William Buehrig, G.M. Duckworth, J.N. Card, J.L. Dubose, W.K. Breeden and Louis Schorre.

In July 1947 the bank sold the back 40's fronting on Church Street for $3,000.00 to David Stiles with the stipulation the property not be used or occupied as a place where any business prohibited, or made illegal by law, is carried on or where beer or intoxicating liquor is kept or offered for sale or sold, or as a pool or billiard parlor or room or similar game room or a moving picture show or theatre. In August 1950 the property was deeded from David Stiles back to the bank.

In April 1961 Theo A. Reuss acquired this property in a trade with the bank. Mr. Reuss owned the property where the bank is now located on Esplanade and Live Oak Streets and they switched properties.

Since the bank moved out, the building has housed the Selective Service, a beauty shop, a flooring company, an accounting firm and a real estate office. While the bank was there the telephone company was quartered upstairs for many years. Upon the death of his father, Joe Reuss assumed ownership of this property. The ground floor is occupied by Burt Witcher Jewelers and the upstairs is rented as office space.

This building is listed on the National Historic Register.

REUSS PHARMACY

Texas' oldest drug store came into being in Indianola, Texas, in 1845 when Dr. Joseph Martin Reuss immigrated from Germany. Its first home was a tent shared with Dr. Reuss' medical practice and later a wooden structure was built on Main Street. In 1853 Dr. Reuss entered into an agreement with David Lewis and Dr. F.E. Hughes to form a partnership with Lewis and Hughes each having a fourth interest and Dr. Reuss one-half interest. In 1860 Dr. Reuss sought out his partners and

J.M. Reuss and son in late 1800's operated as sold owner.

When the railroad to the coast was completed, Dr. Reuss opened a branch store in Cuero with his son Dr. August Reuss as operator. J.M. Reuss & Son Drug Store was opened on Main Street in a one-story wooden structure.

In September 1875, the hurricane did major damage to all of the coastline. Dr. Reuss made his decision to move inland. He dismantled his home and business and moved to Cuero. In 1876 August passed away and upon completion of pharmacy school, Oscar joined his father in the drug store. They also built a small building to the rear of the store and operated a soda water bottling works that operated as late as 1895.

In 1885 the one-story building was moved to make room for a two-story brick building with the ground floor occupied by the drug store and the second story to house doctor's offices. The 1895 Cuero Star is quoted "This store is handsomely furnished in all white fixtures and the stock of drugs, chemicals, oils, paints, varnishes, proprietary medicines, toilet articles, school supplies and druggist sundries is full and complete. The wooden structure was moved to the 300 block of Gonzales Street across from the courthouse and served as a home for Oscar and his family. This structure is still occupied as a residence.

Dr. Reuss retired in 1895 and Oscar continued in the store until his death in 1908. At that time, Dr. J.H. Reuss, the youngest of Dr. J.M. Reuss' children, returned from Dallas to see to the operation of the drug store. In 1912 Theodore A. Reuss purchased the store from the Reuss Estate. Theo was the son of Oscar Reuss and he continued as owner/operator until 1957. In January 1957 Theo's son, Joe, graduated from pharmacy school and became associated with his father. Shortly after Joe joined the firm, Theo retired due to ill health.

In 1971 Joe decided to build a new and larger building thus ending 99 years on Main Street. The new building was erected at 515 North Esplanade and the name changed to Reuss Pharmacy and after 144 years is operated by the 4th generation in the Reuss family.

The Main Street location that housed the drug store for so long is still owned by Joe Reuss and is now occupied by a ladies ready-towear chain.

This building is on the National Historic Register.

VALUMART PHARMACY

Heaton Bros. Drug Store

The beginning date of this business is not known, but the October 1895 edition of the Cuero Star states that "the widely known and popular Heaton Drug business was founded in 1854 by Lavaca, Texas, by J.C. Heaton who purchased the business of Niells & Wilson, leading druggists of that town." In 1860 L.D. Heaton arrived in Texas from New York to become associated with his brother. From 1865 to 1867 Thomas Wilson was a partner and the firm was Heaton & Wilson until the death of Mr. Wilson. Mr. Heaton bought his partner's interest and the firm again was known as Heaton Drug until July 1870 when it became J.C. Heaton & Brother. In that year the railroad was extended from Indianola to Victoria and the firm broadened their business with L.D. Heaton in charge in Victoria.

In 1870 D.C. Heaton came to Texas and stayed in the Lavaca store until the following spring when he entered the Victoria store. In 1871 they purchased a Cuero site and began a building. D.C. Heaton moved to Cuero and took charge of this store when it opened. In 1879 this store burned down but reopened within 24 hours.

In 1889 they built a two-story brick building on a site next door to their first store and moved into it. In 1891, J.C. Heaton died and his interest was purchased by the other brothers. The firm name was changed to Heaton Brothers, with L.D. Heaton being in charge of the Victoria store and D.C. Heaton in Cuero. The prescription department in Cuero was handled by W.C. Booten, who later became a partner in Booten & Kunitz Drug Store. The store in Victoria was sold in 1907. It is not known if Harding & Parker were the purchasers at that time but they did purchase the store at some time. It is still in operation in a different location and now is owned by Joe Cohen.

In 1921 L.L. Buttery purchased the Heaton Bros. Drug Store in Cuero and it became known as Buttery Drug. Even before the turn of the century, the store was one of the main suppliers of school books, sewing machines, paint, glass, veterinary supplies in addition to the usual medicines. Mr. Buttery, like the Heatons before him, was always looking for better ways the citizens of Cuero and could always be counted on to serve anyway the city, civic clubs, church and customers to their betterment.

In 1972, Mr. Buttery sold the store to Joe Reuss, owner of Reuss Pharmacy. The name was changed to Valumart Pharmacy and David Polasek, a Cuero native and pharmacy graduate, became the operator. Even after selling the store, Mr. Buttery arrived every day to serve in an unofficial capacity of "public relations" and continued in this manner.

Luckily, not much had been done over the years to change the interior or exterior of this building. Mr. Buttery had several times consulted architects about changes but did not make any. when Cuero became a "Main Street City" in 1985, this was the first building to be restored. The awning had been changed and with the permission of the City of Cuero, was changed back. There were a few changes to the pharmacy department in 1972 but structurally it is the same as when completed in 1889 and the original fixtures are still in place inside.

This building is on the National Historic Register.

YORK WELDING

B79

York Welding has been located at 535 E. Main Street, Yorktown, TX since 1953. Originally it was called Yorktown Body & Welding Service and owned by Nelton Lee Borth. At that time it was a combination welding, auto and body garage.

In 1969 Nelton sold the garage business to Werner Borth. Werner remained at this location until 1974 when he moved his business down the street to 233 E. Main Street and used the name Yorktown Garage and Body Shop.

At that time Nelton, with the help of his wife Dorothy, felt they would like to change the name of the business from Yorktown Body & Welding Service to York Welding Service.

On March 26, 1987 John C. Oliver bought the business from Nelton and Dorothy Borth. In the garage portion of the business is located Bobby's Auto Body owned by Bobby Lee Hranicky.

John is a fully certified welder and has been welding since 1965. He formerly owned Big John's Welding Works, located at Rt. 1 Yorktown, Tx. At that time he mostly worked in the oilfield and construction.

York Welding is now a fully equipped welding and machine shop. SOUTH TEXAS UTILITIES COMPANY R80

(a division of Palm Beach County Utilities Corporation)

The Gas Company

South Texas Utilities Company and its predecessor companies have been providing natural gas distribution and services to the seven communities of Cuero, Yoakum, Shiner, Gonzales, Lockhart, Luling and Ottine for 63 years.

Southwest Natural Gas Company, the original Company, was organized in 1927 and in 1961, Arkansas Louisiana Gas Company (Arkla) purchased Southwest and its gas distribution system along with 82 miles of steel main transmission pipeline connecting the South Texas communities from Lockhart in Caldwell County to Cuero in Dewitt County.

In 1974, a 17 mile transmission pipeline extension was constructed from Kyle in Hays County to Lockhart, giving the capabilities of bi-directional gas flow. This expansion provided safer lower operating pressures and increased security of gas supply in case of a line rupture. In 1983, the transmission pipeline to Cuero was replaced with an 8" steel line.

In September 1987, Palm Beach County Utilities Corporation (""PBCUC") acquired the entire distribution properties in all seven South Texas communities and transmission pipeline from Arkla and South Texas Utilities Company, a division from PBCUC, was formed to operate the gas system. An IBM computer facility for customer billing and management information to service the entire South Texas system and permit more local controls was installed in 1988 in Yoakum.

In 1990, South Texas Utilities Company now has some $14,000,000 of gross assets and 33 employees dedicated to serving 12,000 residential, commercial and industrial customers – of which 3,550 approximately are in DeWitt County. The Company's transmission and distribution pipeline system now totals some 759 miles (in 2" equivalent).

Improvements in technology, modern equipment and continuing education training for an experienced professional employee group pro-

H. RUNGE AND COMPANY

B83

In 1845, Henry Runge founded H. Runge & Co. in Indianola, Texas. Mr. Runge was the sun of a German merchant, according to the story told, and received his education and practical business training in his native land. He immigrated to America prior to 1845 as a member of the colony of the German Prince Solms who established the trading post of New Braunfels. Henry Runge saw the possibilities of a Southwest Texas port and cast his lot with a small band of settlers, who established old Indianola on the site where Magnolia Beach now stands.

The original firm was Runge & Fromme Co.

Building built for H. Runge & Co. in Cuero and their first business house was a tent, no lumber being available for the construction of a house at that time. The business which was confined principally to the storage of supplies from the old country to the inland posts, was successful from the start.

In 1846, a two and a half story frame building was built and in the same year Mr. Fromme, tiring of the frontier life, withdrew and Herman Runge, who had crossed over from Europe about the time the young business was taking hold, became a partner in the firm. In 1855 the business moved with the town to Powder Horn, where the steamship wharves were built. From 1855 to 1861 Andrew Dove was associated with the two Runges and as is told elsewhere, he rounded out a very successful business career with the firm of Kaufman & Runge, until the time of his death.

Although the firm bearing his name had prospered and grown in Cuero, it is doubtful if Mr. Henry Runge ever visited Cuero. The Cuero business was not established until 1873. Mr. Emil Reiffert and Mr. William Frobese became associated with H. Runge & Co. in 1866. Mr. Edward Mugge joined the company

In the year of 1868, Mr. Reiffert, Mr. Frosbese and Mr. Mugge bought out Mr. Henry Runge's interest in the H. Runge & Company. In 1873 a branch of the firm moved to Cuero with Edward Mugge as the first head of the Cuero business. At this time Mr. Frosebe was head of a branch in Victoria. Mr. Ferdinand Frobes, brother of William, was the head of a branch in Luling and Mr. Reiffert remained in Indianola until the storm of 1886. Mr. Reiffert then moved to Cuero. Mr. Frobese also moved to Cuero and the business was consolidated in Cuero.

The Cuero business consisted principally of forwarding goods to interior points brought to this place by rail from Indianola, though a bank and grocery department were also started. Early settlers within a sixty mile radius drove to Cuero with ox and mule teams to secure the supply of groceries and beverages. With the founding of the Cuero branch, those at Luling and Victoria were discontinued. And Cuero and Indianola, each dependent on the other, became two of the most important trading points in South Texas.

After the storm of 1886 which destroyed Indianola, the firm headquarters were established in Cuero and the business conducted under the joint management of Emil Reiffert, Wm. Frobese and Edward Mugge. During the same year a branch was opened at Runge under the management of Mr. Gus Tips, bearing the name of Reiffert & Tips, subsequently Reiffert-Frobese.

The first Cuero building was a frame structure built on the corner of Main and Gonzales St. It served as a home for the grocery and banking business. The grocery was managed by Walter Breeden and Gus Tips and later by Henry Keller. A furniture store was also run in connection with G.W. Gerloff as manager. He was succeeded by Charles Kossbiel and the business later became Lord & Kossbiel.

The gin and mill was purchased in 1884 from W.W. Pearce and in 1886 the machinery department opened under the management of Arthur Palmie. H. Runge & Co. also owned and operated a store and gin at Whitsett and had extensive land holdings in that section, in addition to the Runge Ranch near Nordheim and other properties in this and neighboring counties.

Following the deaths of the principle stock holders, Walter Reiffert and William Frobese, Jr. took over the business. Other men associated with H. Runge & Co. were: Herman Riedel, Otto Staerker, Henry Frobese, Paul Dornbluth, B. Schiwetz, Fritz Goehlke, Emil Reiffert, Jr., Henry Koenig and Walter Marquis, Joe L. Sheppard, Mr. Herman Currlin, John Freund, Fritz and Jake Wagner, John Mueller, Victor Moeller, Alfred Palmie, Alois Naunheim, Henry Mugge, Fred Mugge, Alfred Marquis, Dave Lewis, Albert Waldeck, Tom Mayne, Harry Merritt, George Schmidt, Irvin Lehman, and Richard McGuffin were all employees.

HIGH-DAVIS CLINIC

Harold R. High, M.D.

High-Davis Clinic

In September of 1955 Dr. Harold R. High and his family moved to Cuero to establish his medical practice. The family at that time consisted of wife, Paula, and daughter, Karon. They moved from Fort Worth where he had just completed his internship at John Peter Smith Hospital.

Dr. High established and equipped his first office in a two story frame house which was owned by Mrs. Marion Leonardt. His medical office was in the downstairs portion and consisted of two small waiting rooms, one bathroom, a combination consulting and examining office and a small kitchen which served as a small laboratory. He practiced medicine and was associated with the Burns Hospital which was owned and operated at that time by the Sisters of Incarnate Word and Blessed Sacrament. The hospital was originally owned and operated by the Burns family.

In 1957 Dr. High contracted with Adickes Building Supply Company of Cuero for construction of a medical clinic building to be located at 615 North Esplanade, adjacent to the dental office building of Dr. John F. Wheeler. The original clinic building consisted of two waiting rooms, three rest rooms, Dr. High's private office, a small laboratory, limited business office space and an outside courtyard. The new clinic building was formally opened on July 7, 1957.

Willie Marie Kahlich, R.N., and Rosalie Parks (Mrs. Horace), L.V.N. were nurses at the clinic in the beginning, and Mrs. Billie J. (Mitzie) Merzbacher was the only business office employee.

In 1958 Dr. High invited Dr. John C. Davis who was practicing at the time with the Trott Clinic in Yoakum, TX., to join him in Cuero. Dr. and Mrs. David and their family moved to Cuero in August of 1958 and Dr. Davis became associated with Dr. High, and some three years later Dr. Davis purchased an interest in the clinic. The name was changed to High-Davis Clinic.

Additional land was purchased from Mr. and Mrs. J.D. Cravens located at the back of the original property on Clayton Street, and the clinic building was enlarged to include additional examining rooms and office space for Dr. Davis, and complete X-Ray facilities.

Additional land adjacent to the clinic property was purchased from Joe B. Reuss, and in 1980 the clinic building was almost tripled in size and completely refurbished throughout. The name was changed to Cuero Medical Clinic. The building now boasts complete office suites to accommodate four physicians. Each suite consists of the physician's office, three examining rooms, and a rest room. The clinic building also contains X-Ray facilities, complete laboratory, emergency room and minor surgery room, treatment room, X-Ray file and viewing room, nurses station area, staff coffee room and rest room, greatly expanded reception area, enlarged registration and billingfiling area, as well as three separate office staff facilities. The staff has grown from the original number of three to fourteen employees, plus janitorial coverage. Longtime employees as of this writing are: Willie Marie Kahlich 33 years; Barbara Flessner (Mrs. Harlan) 24 years, Anna Macha (Mrs. Albert)? years.

Since the enlargement of the clinic and the change of name to Cuero Medical Clinic there have been some young physicians who have come to Cuero to practice medicine — the first being Dr. R.D. Edwards who stayed in Cuero for five years and moved to Fort Worth area; Dr. Mark Pucek who was here for two years, and then moved to the Fort Worth area. At the present writing Dr. Mark A. Heard/is associated with the clinic and also has his own facilities in nearby Goliad.

Drs. High, Davis and Heard are all members of the American Academy of Family Physicians, which requires continuing medical education on an annual basis to maintain membership. The American Academy of Family Physicians established a specialty board in 1970, and in that same year Dr. High took the required examination and was duly certified a charter member of the specialty board. He has continued the board certification status through required examinations, and as of this writing is certified through 1996.

Dr. High has been extremely active in the efforts of organized medicine throughout his entire medical career — his interest being in the preservation of patient care and the physician-patient relationship, and first rate medical care for all.

Highpoints of his activities have been his membership in the Texas Academy of Physicians, having served as president, treasurer, director, Texas delegate to the American Academy Congress of Delegates. In the American Academy he has served two terms on the scientific program committee, two terms on the commission of continuing education, charter diplomate, charter fellow, ad hoc task force on cardiovascular diseases, sub committee on home study – self assessment, and on the American Diabetes Association on diagnosis and treatment of type II diabetes mellitus.

In the Texas Medical Association he has served as family practice program chairman at the annual session, delegate from DeWitt Lavaca Counties, Member of the Executive Committee, Man Power Committee, Alternate Delegate to AMA and then full delegate to American Medical Association. He is presently serving an elected term on the Board of Trustees (1986 to present) where he has served on the Physical Reimbursement Committee, Future Planning Committee, Finance Committee, and Investment Committee.

THE LESKE BUILDING

The first record of this building is in the year 1890. Built of long-leaf (pitch) pine, it was erected in the 100 block of West Main Street in back of the present Buchel Bank. An early Cuero pioneer, Mrs. C.A. Waldeck, related being born in this building at this location.

In January 1896 the building was purchased by Mr. Thomas S. Williams and moved to its present location in the 400 block of West Main Street. It was turned into a saloon and named the "S.P. Saloon", no doubt because of its proximity to the depot. The local artist, Mr. Drew Reese, captured this perfectly in his oil of the old depot, long torn down, and this building.

In July 1896 Julius Leske purchased the property. Ida and Julius Leskie ran a boarding house where meals were served family style each day and it was most popular especially on Saturday when "everyone came to town". Rooms also were "let".

Julius Leske died in 1904 and several years later, the property was turned over to the eldest son, Rudolph, and changed into a restaurant and saloon. There was an outdoor, treed "biergarten" which proved popular especially with train travelers who came to eat and rest. But, the busiest time of the year was August and September when the farmers brought wagonloads of cotton to be ginned at the gin across the street and often had to wait in line all day and into the night.

During the prohibition era, the building was turned into a confectionary and service station with a paint shop next door. There were times when payment for gas and oil was made with bushel baskets of vegetables, and on one occasion, a horse.

The exact age of this building has not been determined as of this date; however, it has been in the Leske family 94 years.

Things of interest taken from the deeds in 1896:

The payment of a note was "to be made in gold coin of present standard of weight and fineness".

Also, in 1896 the first use of a typewriter appeared on a deed by a notary.

CAGE HATCHERY, CAGE FARMS, CAGE FEED STORE

B86

Margaret and Gus Cage moved from Weimar to Cuero in 1942 where he was an Ag teacher at Cuero High school. Sons Lowell, now an attorney in Houston, and Don, now a banker in San Antonio, were born in Cuero. Lowell and Connie have Shea, Hunter and Travis. Don and Sharon have Kyle and Chad.

Gus became interested in the turkey business, and he and Fred Hansen went into business with a feed store, several farms, and a hatchery managed by Wilbert Aschenbeck starting in 1956.

Later, the dissolved the partnership, pursuing separate business careers.

Gus' philosophy was that you had to be in the turkey business from "womb to tomb" or "basket to casket" (total vertical integration) to make any money. Some years you made money in one phase and lost money in another. So, besides a feed store, hatchery, he had three farms where 360,000 birds were raised to maturity each year. He also got into special vehicles to take poults from hatchery to Oklahoma, Arkansas, Mississippi, Mexico, and San Salvador. To protect against price fluctuations, he acquired an interest in a freezing plant in Fredericksburg. He was a true entrepreneur—he took chances.

He was very active in state and national turkey associations, having served in many offices. When he, or any of his customers had a problem, he called in expert help from A&M. He got help for domestic and foreign customers alike.

From Fresno, Cal., he got the idea of a special hatch in the off season. Birds were kept in a dark room to retard maturity, delaying egg production. This idea spread from Cuero over the whole United States. This increased the hatch from 125,000 per year to 1,000,000. He was fortunate in having a man like Wilbert Aschenbeck to keep up with the demand.

He was on the phone constantly selling feed, poults, etc. He also spent much time in his car; his driving was legendary. Too bad car phones weren't as available as today.

He was the consummate salesman. He believed in himself and the turkey business. He brought to Cuero a lot of out-of-town money, and, with his varied enterprises, had a very good payroll.

It's too bad he died before turkey got to be everyday fare rather than Thanksgiving and Christmas specialties. Now there is turkey sausage, turkey ham, and turkey hamburger. Reportedly, it is one of the healthful foods.

He was an integral part of Cuero's Turkey Trot, furnishing birds for many years. In 1972 his success in producing birds for the table was a factor in spelling the end of Turkey Trots as we knew them. Broad breasted birds would die before they'd walk.

BAUER PRODUCE

B8'

In 1947 Kenneth A. Bauer (see Bauer Family story) bought out a produce business from James Pearson, and called it Bauer Produce. Kenneth's brother, John D. (see John D. and Dot Bauer story) went to work running the business for him. John D. recalls that they started the business with a new blue and black 1946 Chevrolet model bob-tailed truck. To get the business off to a start, Mr. Pearson rode with John D. about three times to the San Antonio Market.

After a while Kenneth bought out a produce route from Eldred Schultz and another from Finley Benton. After increasing their business, Kenneth began working with the produce business for a while before he died in 1956.

After Kenneth's death, John D. took over the business and things were really booming. The routes were getting bigger and another truck had to be added, so John D. called upon his other two brothers, Bill and Garlan, for their help.

At this time they covered areas of Yorktown, Goliad, Fort Lavaca, Schulenburg, Moulton, and Flatonia, plus smaller surrounding areas.

Through the years, the routes have been changed somewhat and John D. has changed types of trucks a number of times, going up to the very largest of 18-wheel trucks and vans.

Between 1975-76 John D.'s youngest son, Chuck, went to work in the family business.

After 42 years in the produce business, the route now consists of two trips a week to San Antonio. Produce is bought from the large market where produce is shipped in fresh daily from California, Mexico, and other areas. They leave for San Antonio in the middle of the night so that they can be at the market when it first opens in the early hours before daylight. After loading up with produce they leave San Antonio before dawn and start their way back home and deliver to all of the grocery stores, cafes, and restaurants along the way.

JAKE COHN - THE FAIR

Jake Cohn came to the United States from Poland at the age of 16 with few worldly possessions and didn't know a word of English. From his port of entry at Galveston, he was sent to San Antonio. There he met and married Mollie Tudzin, a Russian immigrant, in 1916.

Jake worked first as a peddler and then as a salesman in clothing stores. He was learning about the clothing business and making contacts that would serve him well for many years. One of his friends told him about Cuero and the need for a store here. His dream was to own his own business so the Cohns came to Cuero and after meeting the friendly people and seeing how pleasant the town was, Jake felt this was the right place to open his business.

Jake Cohn's Dry Goods Store was founded in 1918 by Jake Cohn and his wife Mollie. The store was located in the 200 block of West Main Street in the Gohmert Building. At that time, West Main Street was the main thoroughfare to San Antonio and was the hub of many thriving businesses. Jake needed no financing; he had saved enough money to finance his own business.

"A good name is something you always own" Jake was fond of saying. Mollie was famous for her sermonettes, her favorite – "Be Yourself". Important values of the Cohns were honesty, good credit and a good name. These were considered priceless possessions. In San Antonio they had learned to speak Spanish and much of the population of DeWitt County were German, Czech, Polish and Hispanic so there was no language barrier and business was often conducted in these languages.

During the depression years money was scarce and merchandise was cheap. Overalls were 99¢, shoes 1.98 and 2.98 a pair, piece goods 25¢ a yard and men's work shorts 59¢. Work was hard and the hours long as the store was usually open from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. six days a week.

By 1930 the Cohns had three daughters – Annie, Sarah and Bernice. The children grew along with the store. There were no latch-key children in those days so after school the girls walked to the store, studied their lessons and learned about the business.

The many friends and customers the Cohns gained through the years resulted in the growth of the business and in 1934, the Cohns moved "Uptown" to 101 West Main, corner of Main and Esplanade. The name was changed to The Fair and the building was bought from H. Runge & Co. The Cohns were very aware of their customers needs and kept the store well stocked with good quality merchandise. Jake's contacts made in San Antonio were invaluable. Salesmen called on him and kept him informed of the latest styles and trends. Jake and Mollie Cohn were popular buyers. The Cohns were now making apparel and shoe markets in New York and St. Louis, as well as Dallas, Houston and San Antonio.

During WWII The Fair was able to supply their customers with many rationed items – shoes, linens, nylon hose, and many more. Because the Cohns had always bought in large quantities and had a good credit rating, they received their allotments of merchandise. All, when certain items were available, their salesmen friends saw that they got their share.

In 1946 after WWII, their son-in-law and daughter, Maurice and Sarah Aronstein came to Cuero to assist in the operation of the store. In 1951 their daughter and son-in-law, Harry and Annie Jacobs joined the firm. Maurice was in charge of the shoe department and Harry was in charge of the men's department. Mollie Cohn and her daughters took an active part in all phases of the business – buying, selling, bookkeeping and advertising. As the daughters children grew, they also worked in the store. Bernice did not return to Cuero, but lives in San Antonio with her husband, Larry Mazer.

In 1968 The Fair was completely remodeled inside and the business was incorporated and the name changed to Jake Cohn, The Fair, Inc., doing business as The Fair. Two years later the outside of the building was remodeled.

Cuero has a large trade territory since it is the county seat of DeWitt County. Through the years many first, second and third generations of families were clothed at The Fair. Mollie Cohn personally outfitted many young brides in their wedding dresses and trousseaus. As the customers families and children grew, many went to the cities to work and live, but when they came home to visit, would always come to The Fair to shop and were always warmly welcomed. Some fondly referred to The Fair as Cuero's little Joske's, a reputation the Cohns were proud to have.

The Fair had 10 to 15 employees on their payroll most of the time, more during the war years. Many DECCA and VOE high school students were hired over the years and many young boys and girls received their early business training at The Fair.

The Cohn family sold The Fair in February 1987. They had many loyal employees; Tony Hahn had been with them over 46 years, Polly Schultz and Mary Galindo were employed over 20 years each, Mrs. Hertha Morgenroth retired with over 20 years service, Mrs. Annie Adams Brantley started working during the war and returned twice, Iriz Hotz and Rose Sysdek were new employees of 2 years each. Other employees with many years of service were Mr. George Dietze, Charles Matejek, Mrs. Nora Adams, Mrs. Myrtle Rentz and Johnny John-

For 68 years, the name - Jake Cohn, The Fair – was synonymous with good quality merchandise and friendly personal service.

HISTORY OF THE COCA-COLA BOTTLING COMPANY OF CUERO

In 1912, the Coca-Cola Bottling Company was moved to Cuero from the plant location in Yorktown, established 1910. It was located on West Broadway near the old SAAP railroad depot. Owner's name is unknown. The plant was purchased by Mr. W.E. Bogard for $2,700.00 in 1913. Their first truck was a Buick passenger car converted to a pick-up. They were very proud to produce and sell 5,429 cases of Coca-Cola in 1913.

Mr. H.C. and R.A. Randow purchased the plant from Bogard for $14,000.00 in 1916. They immediately moved into a new building located on West Main Street. They were good business people, and the plant prospered for by 1918 they were delivering Coca-Cola to Victoria, Texas. Just two years later, 1920, they delivered Coca-Cola to Calhoun County by rail on a temporary basis. In 1921, 7,976 cases were produced and sold bringing their per capita consumption to 8.7 drinks consumed by their territorial population. Plant warehouses were opened in Victoria and Yoakum in 1922, and in 1923 the first cartons holding six bottles were introduced. This changed a season cold bottle business to a year-round business. The advertising slogan, "Thirst knows no season" was used for the first time.

In 1925, Mr. E.T. Summers, Sr., and Mr. W.H. Carr of Covington, Louisiana bought the plant from the Randows for $55,000.00. Mr. Summers had been associated with Coca-Cola in Covington, Louisiana before coming to Texas to buy and manage the Cuero plant. Mr. Carr remained in Louisiana. H.E. Dromgoole became the plant foreman. (Mr. Dromgoole still lives in Cuero.)

"The pause that refreshes" was introduced in 1929. A big step forward was the erection of a modern red brick building designed in Coca-Cola architectural style at 306 East Main Street for both plant and business operations. The year was 1931. A fleet of five Ford trucks was also purchased, and Calhoun County was added to the franchise.

In 1932, per capita consumption reached 15.4 bottles with a total population of 23,323 in the territory. By 1933, the total population climbed to 55,597, and the plant had a per capita consumption of 17.2 bottles per person. By 1934, the total population of the territory was approximately 83,147, and the per capita consumption went to 176. Lavaca County was added to the territory and was responsible in a large part for the increase in population and per capita. By 1935, the first models of coinoperated vending machines were placed in factories, offices, and institutions. In 1936, a new Red Diamond Bottling Line was added, and a new warehouse was constructed at 1707 North Main, Victoria with Mr. W.H. Carr of Covington, Louisiana moving to that city to become manager. The territory now consisted of four and one-half counties: Dewitt, Lavaca, Victoria, Calhoun, and half of Refugio. In 1937, a new Liquid Carbonic Line was added, and the company was incorporated.

In 1939, E.T. Summers, Jr. graduated from the University of Texas with a Bachelor of Business Degree in Management, and joined the firm as vice-president and sales manager.

Karnes and Goliad Counties were purchased from Louis W. Anderson in 1940 with the plant remaining in Kenedy. B. Aoueille, Sr. moved to Kenedy from Covington, Louisiana to manage

W.E. Tolbert, Sr. joined the company in 1941 as refrigeration and sales manager and remained there until his retirement. World War II brought sugar rationing to civilians, but military bases such as the Brayton Flying Service in Cuero, and Foster Airforce Base and Aloe Field in Victoria were not restricted. By 1947, sugar rationing was removed and business boomed.

F.M. Summers joined the company as manager of the Victoria Warehouse. He had received his B.B.A. Degree from the University of Texas and worked in San Antonio with Joske's before joining the company. Ed Heisler was another talented employee. He was head of the vending department and an inventor as well, and remained until his retirement. Jack Rohan joined Cuero Coke moving from Yoakum to become plant foreman in 1948. He was a valued employee serving in that capacity until ill health caused his early retirement.

In 1948, second plant expansion in Cuero was begun by Nathan Post, contractor, with approximately 60x102 feet added. Just two years previous an expansion had been made. In1949, the first Port Lavaca Warehouse was built at 148 Seadrift Street with W.W. Lorrance as manager.

Paul Summers joined the organization in 1951 upon receiving a B.B.A. from St. Mary's University in San Antonio. Anthony Miculka was made head of the sign department. He was a talented artist in his own right as well as an excellent sign man.

By 1956 16-oz. and 26 oz. Coke were added as well as pre-mix bulk dispensing. A new Meyer 34 valve washer-filler was added. Mr. W.H. Carr passed away. Roy Binz, Sr. joined the firm, and remained until his retirement. He became famous as Co-Co the Clown, appearing for Coke at all fairs and celebrations in their territory. Orange, strawberry, root beer, and lemon flavors were added under the "Buck Brand" flavor name.

1960 was an important year for the firm celebrated its 50th anniversary of bottling Coca-Cola. This event took place at the time of the Cuero Turkey Trot. Souvenirs for guests and tours of the plant were featured, and the President of the Company, E.T. Summers, Jr. was chosen Sultan Yekrut XII (King) of the celebration. Pages were his two sons, E.T. Summers, III (Toby) and John Morris Summers. Over 565 out-of-town visitors and Coca-Cola officials attended.

Everyone was saddened by the death of E.T. Summers, Sr., founder of the company, the following year, 1961. He had led his company and witnessed great growth and achievement.

A new warehouse was built at 4002 North Navarro in Victoria that same year, and Coca-Cola in cans was added to the line in 1962. The next year, employees of the company were given a non-contributory pension plan, and a new, popular low-calorie, sugarless soft drink TAB, was introduced.

The next six years saw tremendous growth. The Cuero Plant added its third expansion; a second Port Lavaca Warehouse was constructed on Highway 35; the product, CHIME, was added as was a new sugar-free product, FRESCA. There was also an addition to the Yoakum warehouse, a new product line was installed in Cuero, and a new office wing built, a Fanta flavor line added, and the Kenedy plant merged with Cuero. The company now had 67 employees, 41 vehicles and comprised seven counties: Dewitt, Victoria, Calhoun, Lavaca, Karnes, Goliad, and one-half Refugio. In 1970, production for Gonzales started.

To commemorate Cuero's centennial in 1972, the company issued a special bottle showing scenes of Cuero's past, the All-American City logo, and a picture of the Summerses Medallion home.

E.T. Summers, III (Toby) joined the firm as a vice-president and general counsel after graduating from the University of Texas in 1969 with a B.B.A. degree, serving in the National Guard, and graduating from the University of Texas Law School in May, 1973. That same year, the quart returnable, resealable was introduced, and in 1974, a new production line was installed that would produce over a million cases a year. MR. PIBB was introduced, and the Port Lavaca warehouse was doubled in size, and the Yoakum warehouse enlarged.

Paul Summers, Sr., son of the founder of the company, passed away March 18, 1975. Only the year before his son, Paul, Jr. had joined the firm at the Victoria warehouse upon his graduation from the University of Texas. Consumption of the company's products rose to 310 bottles per person this same year, and a further warehouse was added to Cuero.

John Morris Summers, son of E.T. Summers, Jr., joined the firm after his graduation from the University of Texas Business School in June,e 1976. The 16-oz. returnable/resealable Coke was introduced, and a 32-oz. sugarfree Sprite was introduced. A new production line to be installed in 1977 was ordered, and the company had 83 employees.

Coca-Cola of Gonzales was purchased in 1978. The office was kept open for several months, but all bottling was done in Cuero.

In 1980, the Rialto picture show and the Muti Hotel property were purchased. The building was converted and modernized for reception office, business office, and five corporate offices and a director's meeting room. The facade was kept in original design and was tiled entrance and ticket foyer in interest of historic preservation. The hotel site was utilized for parking. The original 1931 plant was now used with all additions and warehouses for bottling operations.

In 1981 a canning co-op, "Crossroads Canning", was formed with Cuero, San Marcos and Del Rio as partners. Land was purchased in the Cuero Industrial Foundation, and a modern canning plant was built. In 1982, McAllen joined the co-op.

In 1981, Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Cuero had the largest per capita Coca-Cola consumption in Texas, and ranked 17th in the nation. In 1982, they continued to have the highest in Texas, and rose to 14th in the nation.

In 1985, Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Cuero and Victoria as well as their interest in Crossroads Canning was sold to the Coca-Cola Bottling Company of the Southwest, San Antonio. Bottling operations were transferred to San Antonio, but the business office remained open, and the former plant was used as a warehouse.

This was the end of an era. Coca-Cola, Cuero had been in continuous operation for 75 years, and under the same ownership for 60 years. The company produced 1½ million cases of product in 1985. Per capita consumption was 450 bottles or cans per person as compared to 15.4 bottles in 1932.

In 1986, the entire operations, offices and warehouses, were moved to Victoria. This same year, the parent company, Coca-Cola, U.S.A. celebrated their 100th anniversary in Atlanta, Georgia. Crossroads Canning Co. remains in Cuero where it has expanded and continues operations under different owners.

Cueroites still remember the free Cokes furnished the elementary grades of all schools for their Christmas parties, and the colorful football programs provided the Gobblers for their games. The Coca-Cola Company of Cuero was always ready to help their community when asked.

W.B. McCLUNG'S GROCERY AND MARKET

B90

W.B. McClung's Grocery and Market was preceded by several family businesses. The first such enterprise was begun in Indianola by Mrs. Dora McClung's grandfather, August Fuhrman, sometime in the 1840's. Mr. Fuhrman purchased his first business, a saloon, from Louis Kleinecke. Later he added a billiard parlor. August Fuhrman and his wife Caroline had one daughter, Mary Fuhrman. She married August Franke on March 16, 1885.

August Franke operated a general merchandise store and sold supplies and water to boats at Indianola. He used two one-horse delivery wagons. After the storm of '75, a store room was all that survived. He rebuilt but in the '86 storm, all was lost to the pounding waves. Mrs. Caroline Fuhrman, widowed in 1877, was then living with Mary and August Franke. She rescued the Presbyterian silver comunion service, now displayed in the First Presbyterian Church in Cuero.

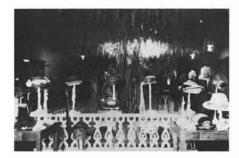

August and Mary Franke and Caroline Fuhrman moved to Cuero on August 27, 1886. August first operated a furniture and mortuary business on Main Street. His hearse was drawn by a matched pair of black mules decked in plumes. Later, he moved to the Coppedge Building on Esplanade where he continued in business until his death in 1915.

In 1912 W.B. McClung established McClung's Dry Goods and Ready to Wear in the Hamilton Building on Esplanade, moving to Cuero from Victoria because he felt there was no future in the latter town. He made trips to New York twice a year to buy merchandise. In 1918 he bought Bonham's Cash Grocery located in the corner building next to his dry goods store. He changed the name to W.B. McClung's Grocery and Market, establishing the first meat market in a grocery store in Texas. He learned of this new trend in New York. His store was also the first Cash and Carry Grocery in Cuero.

Dora Franke, daughter of August and Mary Franke, married W.B. McClung on July 26,

Within a year of the death of her husband in 1928, Dora McClung sold the dry goods store to Leo Mendlovitz. She continued to operate the grocery store until 1936 when her health failed. Mrs. Agnes Spangle then managed the grocery store until 1945 when Walter Brown McClung Jr., the only child of W.B. McClung and Dora returned from college and army service with the United States Air Force. On June 21, 1946 Walter B. McClung, Jr. married Ernestine Elser of Dearborn, Michigan in the Martha Mary Chapel in Greenfield Village, Dearborn. They have three children. Irene Dora (McClung) Hahn, Franke Lois (McClung) Albrecht and Walter Brown McClung III, all of whom worked at the store. Their grandchildren include Clay and Luke Albrecht and Walter Brown McClung IV. W.B. McClung Jr. managed the store until 1975 when the store was closed and he moved to Edna to operate his cattle ranch.

The building was subsequently torn down and the site of McClung's store is now the drive in area of the Buchel National Bank.

DUCKETT MOTOR COMPANY

B91

Duckett Motor Co. Nov. 1956. C.L. Duckett '57 Olds

C.L. and Faye Duckett purchased Mobil Motors, an Oldsmobile dealership at 201 N. Gonzales from Edward (Edu) Mugge on November 7, 1956. They renamed the dealership Duckett Motor Company. Mugge had opened this dealership in June, 1946. It was located in the old Masonic Lodge Building.

In 1958 Duckett Motor Company also handled Rambler automobiles and opened a used car lot at 307 N. Esplanade. The lot was under the management of Vic Schroeder. Ramble automobiles were dropped in 1959.

On August 1, 1959, L.N. Smith, owner of Smith Motor Company (Chevrolet) and C.L. Duckett, owner of Duckett Motor Company (Oldsmobile) merged the two dealerships to form Smith-Duckett Motor Company at 712 E. Broadway.

On May 1, 1964, Duckett bought out the dealership and it again became Duckett Motor Company. L.N. Smith moved to Houston where he was affiliated with the Bill McDavid Oldsmobile dealership.

On June 7, 1976, C.L. sold the Chevrolet-Oldsmobile dealership to Bob Farris of Houston, and it became Bob Farris Chevrolet-Oldsmobile. After selling the dealership, the Ducketts purchased the property at 511 E. Broadway in 1976 and moved the used car operation to that location, where Duckett Motor Company remains today.

On May 19, 1978, they opened a parts store next door to the used car operation at 507 E. Broadway. This store was first called Mr. C Auto Parts. On April 1, 1983, they re-named the store Duckett Auto Parts. Their son, Brett, is manager of that business.

GULF COAST WOOD PRODUCTS

B92

Back in 1956, Clete P. Ernster, then a thirtytwo year old salesman living with his wife and three small kids in Cuero, Texas, twenty eight miles northwest of Victoria on U.S. 87, got the urge to go into business for himself.

His homebuilder customers, mostly in Victoria, really didn't like the metal cabinets he sold for a St. Louis, Mo., manufacturer. (The metal cabinets were prone to rust in the humid climate of South Texas)

Mr. Ernster saw an opportunity to manufacture quality wooden cabinets and sell them to those same homebuilders in the Victoria area.

So he rented an abandoned Buick dealership showroom near downtown Cuero, and established Gulf Coast Kitchens, Inc., with $5,000 (borrowed from a Cuero bank) and a Sears Roebuck sabre saw. In 1958 the name was changed to Gulf Coast Wood Products.

In 1972, the firm began manufacturing laminated plastic doors, and had to move this production into a separate plant at the old Brayton Airport on Cheapside Road, three miles north of Cuero.

A new company was founded — Timco Industries, Inc. Using about 100,000 square feet of former airplane hangar buildings on a 10 acretract, Timco shipped its doors nationwide in the company fleet of 14 trailer trucks.

The largest and most modern laminate door manufacturing facility in the United States, Timco combined the durability and color diversity of high pressure laminate forces with the workability of hardwood edges to meet the heavy demands of the commercial and institutional construction market.

In 1974, another major expansion was realized when a new division, Modulect, was opened in a 40,000 square foot building on ten acres of land at 514 West Sarah Street in Cuero.

Modulect was organized for the production of institutional furniture and cabinets, referred to in the business as casework. At it's peak Gulf Coast Wood Products, Modulect and Timco employed 360 people.

The July, 1979, issue of Plywood and Panel Magazine, a national trade publication, described the Modulect plant as "one of the most automated casework plants, and perhaps the most innovative, in the United States."

Mr. Ernster's manufacturing firm, Gulf Coast Wood Products, Inc., and its two affiliated firms — Timco Industries, Inc., and Modulect — served a national market with architectural millwork, custom cabinets and furniture, and laminated plastic faced doors for office buildings, schools, hospitals, banks, and other institutional buildings.

Two of the children, now grown, were active in the family business. The oldest, C.P. "Phil" Ernster, Jr., was executive vice president of the Gulf Coast Wood Products, Inc. A decorated Army veteran of the Vietnam War, Phil and his wife, Sherre, are the parents of two children, C.P. Ernster, III, and Sharleen.

Mr. Ernster's other son, Timothy "Tim" Ernster was president of Timco Industries, Inc., the door manufacturing company.

Mr. Ernster has received national recognition for his industrial accomplishments. In 1979, he was named "Texas Small Business Person of The Year" by the United States Small Business Administration. In competition with recipients of similar awards in the other states, Mr. Ernster was one of three businessmen chosen for a national award as businessman of the year, presented personally by President Jimmy Carter. In 1981, he was president of the Architectural Woodwork Association of America, a national trade organization.

In 1983, C.P. Ernster, Sr. sold his controlling interest in Timco Industries to Tim Ernster, and in 1985, Gulf Coast Wood Products and Modulect were sold to his son Phil Ernster.

The business operated through 1989 under family management.

ADICKES, CAESAR HENRY

F1

Caesar Henry Adickes was born September 27, 1906 in Meyersville, Texas. He was the youngest son of William August and Bertha (Post) Adickes. The Adickes' experienced much tragedy since their first two infants died in 1898 and 1899. Oscar was born in 1901, Edgar in 1903, and then Caesar. The children were educated in the Meyersville School and the family attended St. Johns Lutheran Church.

The Adickes family originated in Wurstenland, a division of the Province of Hanover on the northwest coast of Germany. The Adickes family of Germany spent most of their lives designing, building and maintaining the dikes which reclaimed the marshlands from the floodwaters of the North Sea. The family became known as "The Keepers of the Dikes".

Arhend Adickes, a descendant son, married Dorathea Hass in the early 1840's. Their children were Marie born in 1842, Dora born in 1846, and Ibe Fredrick born in 1848. They departed Germany in the mid 1800's and came to settle in Meyersville, Texas.

Ibe F. Adickes grew up, worked and farmed in the Meyersville area. He married Katherine Urban September 18, 1872. Their children were William A. born in 1873 and married to Bertha Post, Emilie born in 1874 and married to Ben Eckert, Laura born in 1876 and married to Otto Stahl, Louis born in 1879 and married to Dora Ruschaupt, Otto born in 1883 and married to Mariechen Soehnge, Emma born in 1887 and who never married, Edmund born in 1890 and Lillie born in 1894 who both died during childhood.

During the late 1920's, the William Adickes family moved to Cuero, Texas. They purchased property located at the corner of Gonzales street and Prairie street and built a home and the business of William Adickes and Sons Building Supply.

Emma Nathlie Konrad came to Cuero in 1931 to work as a companion for Mrs. Huddleston. During this time, she met Caesar and they were married on June 4, 1933 by Reverend J. Kern at the St. Mark Lutheran Church in Cuero, Texas. Caesar and Emma built their home at the corner of Gonzales and Prairie streets in Cuero. The beige stucco house still stands with a large A on the chimney at the front of the house.

Emma was born on January 4, 1907. Her parents, Fredrich and Elizabeth (Uhl) Konrad came from Steinau, Austria to Texas in the mid 1890's. After living in Lavaca County near Moravia, they finally settled at Nopal, near Westhoff in Dewitt County. They had a family of 13 children. Their children were: Henry born in 1891 and married to Nancy Heinson; Paul born in 1896 and married to Albertine Schneider; Willie born in 1897 and married to Anita Schneider; John born in 1898 and married to Elsie Schlenker; Wilhelmina born in 1901 and married to Henry Hahn; Adolf born in 1902 and married to Helen Ashurst; Elsie born in 1903 and married to Eric Munke; Arnold born in 1905 and married to Leona Schlenker; Rudolph born in 1909 and married to Ella Schulte; Emil born in 1911 and married to Hertha Pfeifer; Adelhide born in 1912 and married to Alfred Pfeifer; and Caroline born in 1914 and married to Edwin Pilsner. The Konrads were blessed with 35 grandchildren and numerous great grandchildren.

Caesar and Emma were blessed with two children, Marjorie Mae born on August 19, 1934 and Melvin Caesar born on September 17, 1936. Marjorie married Lee Robert Hartman, Jr. of Houston, Texas and Melvin married Evelyn Radjnoch of Gonzales, Texas and they reside in Conroe, Texas. Emma and Caesar were blessed with two grandsons, eight granddaughters, four great-grandsons and six great-granddaughters.

Life was difficult for Caesar due to the arthritis which crippled him, but despite his handicap, he worked very hard at the family lumberyard. Glass cutting, lathe wood work and locksmithing were a few of his specialties. He was patient and eager to help his friends and customers with special home projects or whatever they required. One of Caesar's hobbies was growing, grafting and managing the many pecan trees on the Adickes property. He enjoyed harvesting and eating them as well, and since he and Emma were good cooks, there were many pecan goodies at their house. Emma always had fresh homemade bread and coffee cakes waiting whenever the family came to visit. This expected treat always excited the grandchildren who loved the trips to visit their grandparents.

Emma's love in helping other people led her to a career as a Licensed Vocational Nurse. She worked for many years at the Burns Hospital and the Cuero Community Hospital. In later years, she did private duty nursing. She was very active in organizations at St. Mark's Lutheran Church. One of Emma's favorite hobbies was sewing beautiful clothes for her grandchildren. She also made quilts and did crochet work which today is cherished by her family.

Caesar celebrated his 75th birthday on September 27, 1980. All his family and many other relatives and friends were present to help him celebrate this memorable occasion.

Caesar passed away in the Cuero Hospital on May 20, 1981 after a prolonged illness. He was buried on the Adickes plot at the Hillside Cemetery in Cuero. Emma lived eight more years and after suffering a stroke, she passed away on June 2, 1988. She was buried beside Caesar at the Hillside Cemetery.

AFFLERBACH, JOHANN AND MARIE

Johann Heinrich Afflerbach

Johann Heinrich Afflerbach was born in Westphalia, Germany on Sept. 23, 1824. As a young man, he was apprenticed to a blacksmith. Upon completion of his apprenticeship, he was presented with a pipe which his still in his descendants' possession.

Johann then left Germany for religious reasons and to escape military service. He landed at Indianola, Texas on December 17, 1852, and settled near Yorktown, Texas, where he worked as a blacksmith. Johann's sister came to Texas at a later date and married Moritz Riedel, who owned Riedel's Drug Store in Yorktown. Her name was Sophia Afflerbach Riedel.

On April 12, 1858, Johann married Marie Aschmann in Yorktown. Marie was born March 19, 1828 in East Prussia to an aristocratic family. Her reason for coming to Texas in November of 1856 with her brother was to search for adventure.

She also landed at Indianola and then moved inland to the town of Clinton, near Yorktown. The sense of adventure soon died, however, with the death of her brother. To support herself, Marie worked as a servant, quite a comedown from her background in Prussia. Her fortunes improved, however, when she married Johann. They built a log house two or three miles from Yorktown. Johann became a farmer while continuing to do his own blacksmithing.

Their first child, Emma, was born on Feb. 4, 1859. On March 26, 1860, Johann applied for citizenship in Clinton, which was the county seat of DeWitt County at that time. On July 24 of that same year, their second child, named for her mother, was born.

Twins named Heinrich and Bertha were born on March 14, 1863. The twins contracted an ailment common to children at that time. The illness, known as the "summer complaint," caused its victims to become nauseous and unable to eat. The twins died of dehydration the following year within six days of each other - Heinrich on May 21, 1864, and Bertha on May 27.

On March 3, 1865, the Afflerbachs had another daughter which they named Bertha after her dead sister. On Sept. 9 of that year, Johann gained the right to vote. On Feb. 8, 1867, another Heinrich was born. Tragically, he died on June 5, 1870 of the same sickness that had claimed his namesake. On a happier note, Johann received full citizenship in the United States on July 22, 1867, after he had

The Afflerbachs' last son, Berthold, was born April 8, 1869. The last daughter, Lydia, followed on Feb. 2, 1872. Of Johann and Marie's eight children, five lived past infancy. Emma died on Jan. 9, 1941; Marie on March 27, 1913; the second Bertha on June 1, 1936; Berthold on been living in Texas for more than fourteen

Aug. 4, 1938; and Lydia on April 4, 1961. Johann did not believe in slavery, nor would he fight in the Civil War as he had left Germany in the first place to avoid the military. He was classified as a Conscientious Objector and forced by the Confederacy to haul freight on the Indianola Trail, which ran from Indianola to San Antonio and passed close to the Afflerbach

A story has been passed down in the family of how Northern soldiers came to the farm one day to fill their canteens, but killed Johann's chickens for food as well. When the next group of soldiers came, they were told they could have water only if they left the rest of the farm alone. A captain then guarded the gate, allowing only two soldiers in at a time, and making sure they took only water with them.

On Nov. 2, 1883, the Afflerbach family moved and built a new house two miles from where the original log cabin had been. They wanted to be closer to a creek which assured them of a better water supply. This land is still owned by their descendants today.

Johann died on Oct. 4, 1907. Marie died on Nov. 26 of that same year. Their fifth child, Bertha, was the only one to marry. Her history is given in another story.

ALBRECHT, FREDRICK AND LOUISA (HARSDORF)

Fredrich Albrecht, laborer, farmer, rancher, soldier, home guardsman, and ranger. He was born March 25, 1824, in Schmalsfeld, Grafenschaft Wernegerode, am Harz, Prussia, a Province of Germany. He emigrated in 1848 and landed at Indianola, Texas. He had instructions from the ship's captain to go to Clinton, Texas, where he was to be employed by Mr. Robert Kleberg. He started out on foot, but became ill and was picked up by a passing freight wagon going to Clinton.

Louisa F. (Harsdorf) Albrecht was born in Finenburg, K/R Hanover, Germany, on April 1, 1831. She emigrated to Texas, landing at Galveston on November 30, 1850, from the Bark "Solm" out of Bremen. Her parents, Fredrich and Caroline Harsdorf, six other children and numerous other German emigrants settled in the Meyersville, DeWitt County area.

On April 9, 1853, Fredrich Albrecht and Louisa Harsdorf were married in Clinton, Texas, by their friend, Robert Kleberg, Chief Justice, in the courthouse, which was a log structure. In 1854 they became members of St. John Lutheran Church at Meyersville. He helped in th building of the new church by hauling rocks for the building.

Fifteen children were born into this family. The first, Ferdinand, was born January 20, 1851, soon after his mother's arrival in Texas. father unknown, but adopted by Fredrich. 2) Fredrich Ludwig, born November 30, 1854. He drowned July 5, 1863; 3) Ludwig Christoph, born September 17, 1856; 4) Louisa Sophia, born September 19, 1858; 5) Karoline Theresia, born August 28, 1860; 6) Maria Henrietta, born November 6, 1862; 7) Wilhelmine Johanna, born February 8, 1865-died February 13, 1865; 8) Fredrich Christoph, born December 20, 1866; 9) Marcellus Robert, born May 12, 1869; 10) Christian, died at birth; 12) Henry Fredrich, born May 30, 1871; 13) Robert William, born January 24, 1873; 14) Albert F., born April 1, 1874; and 15) Sophia, born February 5, 1877.

On July 25, 1856, at Clinton in DeWitt County, Texas, Fredrich Albrecht became a citizen of the United States with the evidence of Jonah Taylor and John Richter, both citizens of the United States, who testified that the said Fredrich Albrecht has continuously resided within the limits and jurisdiction of the United States of America for more than five years and at least one year in the state of Texas. James N. Smith served as clerk of the court.

At the beginning of the war between the states, Fredrich joined the Home Gaurd. Mr. Kleberg outfitted him with a horse, saddle and side arems. Kleberg was also his captain. In 1861, Fredrich served with the Coleto Guards Reserve Company under Capt. Robert Kleberg, who had headquarters at Meyersville, DeWitt County, Texas. In August of 1861, he mustered in or joined Home Guard under Capt. John Jacob Schiwitz. On October 28, 1863, he served in a company of unattached infantry at Fayetteville, Texas, under Capt. Martindale with Gen. Wm. Webb commanding. Fredrich also served in the Victoria area, in the 24th Brigade of the Texas Militia. During the Indian uprising, he volunteered for a six-month enlistment in the Texas Mounted Volunteers, better known as the Texas Rangers.

Fredrich "Fritz" Albrecht came to Texas by a request from Robert Kleberg, who operated a general store in Clinton, Texas. He asked a ship captain to bring him "A strong German boy" to work for him. He may have worked for his passage or Mr. Kleberg paid for it. He apparently lived with the Kleberg family until he married. The 1850 census of deWitt County shows him as a member of the Kleberg Household.

When he saved enough money, he would send for another brother and his family, if he had one. He had six brothers: Andreas, Christoph, Christian, Wilhelm, Ludwig, and August. A sister Sophia did not come over.

ALBRECHT, LUDWIG "LOUIS" AND MARY (LUTENBACHER)

Ludwig "Louis" Christoph Albrecht was born September 17, 1856 in Clinton, Texas. His parents were Fredrich and Louisa (Harsdorf) Albrecht.

Louis married Mary J. Lutenbacher on November 13, 1877, in Goliad, Texas. Her parents were Cornelious and Mary Lutenbacher. She was born June 2, 1861 in DeWitt County.

Louis and Mary's children were: 1) Mathilda, born June 12, 1880-died May 20, 1962. She married Louis Miller on January 22, 1902; 2) Mamie, born March 25, 1882-died February 17, 1968; 3) Molly, born March 2, 1884-died April 15, . She married Louis Schiwitz on November 9, 1904; 4) Lillian, born July 15, 1886died March 10, 1976; 5) Louis J. "Bud," born August 26, 1888-died January 27, 1966. He married Lenora Schwartz on February 9, 1915; 6) Minnie, born December 22, 1890-died as an infant; 7) Alonzo T., born December 24, 1893died December 1, 1961. He married Louise Weigmann on September 20, 1920; 8) Irene, born April 5, 1895. She married Jim Miori; 9) James "Jim" Emil, born December 1, 1898-died January 30, 1949. He married Lydia Metting on November 20, 1919; 10) Rubena, born August 12, 1904-died June 19, 1925. Two other infants died in this family.

Ludwig "Louis" C. Albrecht and wife Mary seemed to be an exceptionally happy couple with a good sense of humor. They married quite young, he 21 and she 16. They seemed to get a lot of fun out of their family and just out of life in general. He loved to listen and tell jokes and get a good laugh out of them. He was tall, 6 ft., 6 in., and slender with broad shoulders. He was always a neat dresser. They were excellent family parents and good providers.

During the early years of their married life, they lived on his ranch on Milby Creek in a small house on land out of the J. Clifford Grant, which he purchased from Henry Maumbrauer on February 25, 1882. About 1900, the family moved to Goliad where he bought a saloon in The EBerhardt Building located on the southeast corner of the Square. About 1904 or 1905, he built one of the nicest homes in the area on his Milby Ranch but did not move back immediately. While in Goliad, they lived for a while in the Redding house on East Pearl Street and later in the Dr. Knott house on Franklin Street. About 1909, they sold the saloon in the Eberhardt Building, which later became the Lindberg Market, to his brother-in-law, John Bluntzer. The family then moved back to the ranch.

They lived on the Milby Ranch until his death in December of 1920. The family moved to San Antonio for a time but returned to the ranch about 1925.

Mary Albrecht died June 9, 1948. Both of the Albrechts are buried in the Meyersville Catholic Cemetery.

ALEXANDER, CHARLES H.

F7

Charles H. Alexander, one of seven children born to James Sidney and Ann Allison Alexander, was born, raised and died on the land bought by his father in the early 1850's. The land was bought from A. Biddy and wife and deeds were recorded in the DeWitt County Courthouse on Jan. 1, 1855. This property was in the Stratton area.

Charles H. Alexander was born in May, 1859. On Dec. 22, 1879 he was married to Eliza Adams, the daughter of Aquilla and Mary Bowen Adams. The Adams land joined the Alexander land.

James Sidney later divided his land among his children. Charles H. later bought land from other brothers who were leaving DeWitt County to go further West.

Charles H. and Eliza Alexander had nine children, six boys and three girls.

Lee Alexander died early in life, a bachelor. Mary Ann married John Means and had two sons, Arthur and Hugh. Arthur had two girls, Beatrice (Boone) and Sybil, and twin sons, John and Arthur who still own their father's business, Means Furniture Co. John Means, Sr., died of typhoid while still a young man. Mary A. Means later married Ben Benbow and had two sons and two daughters. One son, Tom, lives in Yoakum and one daughter, Melva Benbow Koehl, lives in Victoria, Texas. One daughter, Johnnie Benbow married Joe Kirkland, deceased. William "Bill" Benbow married Merle Maness. He is deceased.

George Thomas Alexander married Nellie Ridgeway and they had three boys and a girl. Joseph Berlin lives in San Antonio, Charles M. lives in Cuero and Ruth married Bill Cox and lives at Lake Mathis. George Thomas, Jr. married Wynell Wyatt and lives in Texarkana.

Aquilla Alexander married Nora Rice and they had one son, John B. and one daughter, Jewell Alexander Henderson. She lives in Houston. John B. is deceased. Aquilla died of typhoid while still a young man.

Charles H. Alexander married Zora Carter, a school teacher in the community. They later left DeWitt County and moved to West Texas. Both are buried in San Angelo, where they had lived for many years. They had two boys and one girl, Louie Conner, Charles, and Iris Lorea Alexander Grady. They all still live in San Angelo, Texas.

John Wesley Alexander married Irene Matthew in 1912. They had five children, 3 girls and 2 boys. Roxie Alexander Cage, Fay Alexander Calhoun and Wesley B. "Alec" Alexander all live in Cuero and Fannie Corinne "Connie" Alexander Carroll lives in El Campo and John Henry "Fritz" Alexander lives in Corpus Christi.

Sidney "Sid" Alexander married Ethel Boothe. They had 3 girls. Two died in infancy. One daughter, "Billie" (Mrs. Bob) Lee lives in

Susie Alexander married Albert Morrow in 1916. They had 3 girls and 2 boys. Edith Morrow married Curtis Owen and lives in McMahan. Aline Morrow married Joe Deir and they live in San Antonio. Pauline Morrow married Elvin Eggelston and lives in Catsprings. Aline and Pauline are twins. Joseph Morrow married Dorothy Parr and lives in McAllen. Marcos Morrow drowned at an early Lottie Alexander married Henry Parker and had 3 boys and 2 girls. Charles Parker married Myrtle Schultz. Charles was killed in an accident early in life. Hayes Parker married, is retired and lives in Cuero. Kathleen Parker married Huson Maness and lives in Cotulla. Ruby Lee Parker married Philip "Phil" Asbeck and lives in Victoria. Arnold Peavy Parker married, and lives in Victoria.

Typhoid fever left its mark on the Alexander family. It struck the family three different times. The first time it killed one; the second time, one; and the third time, two. Charles H. Alexander and his son-in-law were buried on the same day.

After Charles H. died, Eliza continued to live on their old home place, still having unmarried children. When the children later married, Eliza gave John W. the house and it was torn down and rebuilt on his part of the land. Eliza had divided the land equally among her nine children. Part of the land stayed in the Alexander name for 116 years. The last Alexander land was sold by Aquilla Alexander on August 17, 1971. J.C. "Bud" Adams now owns the land where the old home place was. Jess Sapp owns the land where the John W. Alexander family lived. The original house has been remodeled but still sits beneath large oak trees on a hill. I still remember climbing those oaks with my sisters and brothers when we were children.

All the Alexanders are buried in the Alexander Cemetery at Stratton except Charles W. who is buried in San Angelo. The original acre was given for a cemetery by my great grandfather, James Sidney Alexander. He and his second wife, Ann, are buried there in a family lot. There are three known graves of sons in the cemetery — Uncle George, Uncle Ben, and my grandfather, Charles H.

I have been told "Uncle Frank" and his wife, "Aunt Lizzie" are in the family lot. Uncle Frank was a freed slave who stayed with the family. No records can be found to verify this.

ALEXANDER, EMMA LETITIA

F9

Emma (Alexander) Goodman

Emma Letitia, daughter of George Leander and Annie Amanda (Hill) Alexander, was born August 11, 1883 in the Stratton Community. She grew up there and attended school in a one room school house that was located a short distance west of the Alexander Cemetery. Mr. Edgar was teacher.

After the death of their grandfather, Henry F.W. Hill, the daughters of George and Annie took turns staying with their grandmother Susan in Cuero. It became Emma's turn when she was fourteen and she lived with her grandmother until she left to go with her family when they moved to Caldwell County in early 1899

Soon after their arrival in Caldwell County, Emma met Edward Alexander Goodman. They were married November 13, 1900. Ed farmed in an area near Mineral Springs and Clarks Chapel before moving to Carruth where he ran a gin. In 1911, they sold the gin and purchased a ranch in Delhi Community. The land is still owned by her son Thomas and daughter Veltmon White.

Shortly after her marriage, Emma's parents returned to DeWitt County. She missed them and her friends there, very much. (Many years later, as an "only child" growing up on a remote ranch, I spent many happy hours listening to stories about her friends and relatives in DeWitt County).

Emma had four children: 1. Albert Eli, born January 29, 1902, married Pearl Perry. They had three daughters: Loraine Keller, Bessie Thorn and Susan White. Their grandchildren were: Shirley Thorn, Lois Keller, Jacqueline and Latricia White. 2. Covey Lee was born August 31, 1903 and passed away July 21, 1927. 3. Thomas Edward, born February 20, 1905, married Radie Rawlinson. They had one daughter, Olamae who married Lester Jacobs and had Glenda and Judy. 4. Veltmon Olivia, born March 24, 1925, married George Alexander Black June 2, 1945, had one son Arthur Alexander Black, two granddaughters, Heather Alexander Black and Amber Alexander Black. After George's death, Veltmon married Norval P. White on May 4, 1986.

Emma was a Christian and nothing less than a serious problem or illness prevented her attendance at the nearest Baptist church, for every service. She was an avid gardener and her pantry was always filled with canned vegetables, jams and jellies. She loved her fellow man and was always ready to aid friends and neighbors when they needed a helping hand.

A few years after Emma's father passed away, her mother Annie came to make her home with the Goodman family. Emma cared for her mother until 1930 when Annie passed away.

When Emma was left alone in 1952, she lived with her daughter in Lubbock, for a few years. She was fiercely independent and wanted a place of her own. She chose a warmer climate and rented an apartment in San Antonio, near her sons, where she lived until her death February 2, 1966.

Her love of DeWitt County remained to the end and when she passed away we honored her wish to be laid to rest beside her parents in Alexander Cemetery near Stratton.

ALEXANDER, GEORGE LEANDER

F10

George Leander Alexander, son of James Sidney and Mary (Allen) Alexander, was born April 30, 1839 in Mechlenburg County, North Carolina. His mother died in 1841, when he was only two years old. His father remarried in 1843 and after a few years moved the family to Yalobusha County, Mississippi. When George was eleven, in 1850, the family moved to DeWitt County, Texas, where he grew to manhood.

During the Civil War, George served in the Confederate Army, Company H, Captain John J. Dix's Frontier Regiment of Texas Rangers, later changed to Texas Cavalry, CSA.

George left home in early spring of 1866, with trail boss Thornton Chisholm, to go on the first cattle drive going north from Texas. It was a long and perilous journey that lasted until late fall of that year.

George was married in DeWitt County on October 28, 1868, to Annie Amanda Hill, daughter of Henry F.W. Hill and Amanda Susan Seymour (Garey) Hill. Annie was born in DeWitt County, July 27, 1853.

They lived on a farm in the vicinity of Stratton Community where fifteen children were born to them: (1) Mary Ann, born September 25, 1869, died December 17, 1875, is buried in Alexander Cemetery, Stratton, Texas. (2) Royal Henry, born February 25, 1871, died October 13, 1873, is buried in Alexander Cemetery. (3) Elam Elijah, who changed his middle name to Edward when he was grown, was born November 28, 1872. (4) Susan Harriet, born in 1874, first married Henry Cook. They had three children, Henry, Adderine and Kelzie. After Henry Senior's death, Susan married a Mr. Driscoll and had Irvin. (5) George Benjamin, born May 23, 1875, married Lily Popps in Caldwell County and had Elroy, Bertha, Dovie, Alma, Artell, and Beatrice. Ben died about 1915 and is buried in Caldwell County. (6) Noah Ishmael, born June 6, 1877, married Annie Grunewald October 28, 1908 in DeWitt County. After her death, Noah married Mrs. Ernestine Alex November 5, 1913 in DeWitt County. They were parents of Mary Esther and Georgia. (7) Timothy Seymour, born Jan. 3, 1879, died, unmarried, in an Oregon paper mill accident on July 2, 1907. (8) Annie Ninnie, born August 9, 1882, disappeared from her grandmother Susan Hill's home in Cuero about 1902 and was not heard from again. (9) Emma Letitia was born August 11, 1883. (10) Edith May was born January 15, 1886. (11) Nellie Garey, born June 18, 1887, married T. Coleman Wilson on November 28, 1906 in DeWitt County. They had one daughter, Naomi who married Newt Hahn. Naomi is a widow and lives in Gonzales. Nellie next married Malcolm Smalley and had two sons, Freeman and Roy. She passed away, Jan. 13, 1928, at the home of her sister Emma and is buried in Delhi. (12) Curtis Lee was born May 8, 1889. (13) Irvin Ross was born March 3, 1891. (14) Amos Adams was born March 24, 1893. (15) Ola Pearl, born March 26, 1895, married C.C. Flowers October 9, 1912, had one daughter, Cleo, passed away January 14, 1914 in DeWitt

In late 1898 or early 1899 George moved his family, less the four oldest, to Caldwell County where they settled south of Lockhart. Ben and Emma were married while in Caldwell County and were left behind when their family returned to DeWitt Co. in 1902. They lived near Yoakum until George passed away February 27, 1911. Annie lived with her son, Elam, in the same area, for a few years then moved to Delhi and lived with her daughter Emma until her death February 2, 1930. They are both buried at Alexander Cemetery.

ALEXANDER, GEORGE M. (TIP) FAMILY

FII

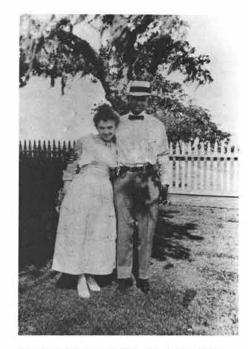

George Monroe Alexander was born in 1840 in Yalabusha Co., Miss., the son of Robert and Sarah Alexander. According to stories he told his children in later years, his family came to Texas about 1854 by going to the Mississippi River and traveling by boat down the river to New Orleans, then out into the Gulf of Mexico and across to Indianola, Texas. He said that so happy was he finally to be on land again that he knelt and kissed the earth, thanked his Maker, and swore never to get into another boat as long as he lived. He kept his word.

The Alexanders settled in DeWitt Co., and when the Civil War began young Tip (as George M. was always called) enlisted in the Confederate Army. He was, however, never in battle as he served in West Texas guarding the frontier from Indians and Union sympathizers.

Soon after the end of the war, Tip hired on as a cowboy to herd cattle going "up the trail." He was one of the men who left DeWitt Co. on April 1, 1866 with 1800 head of Longhorn steers belonging to Crockett Cardwell. Thornton Chisholm was trail boss of this first herd to be driven north to market. The drive took all summer. Tip's brother, Green, who was also with the cattle drive, took sick and died on the way. He was buried somewhere on the prairie.

An account of the trail drive written by descendants of Chisholm from notes written by his son, Jim, who was born only days before the drive began, states that the drive ended at St. Joseph, Mo., where the cattle were sold. Tip Alexander told a different story, saying that when they reached Sedalia, Missouri, in September the cattle market had broken and there were no buyers for the steers. According to him, Mr. Cardwell had to winter the cattle there and sell them the next spring. Tip said he was "paid off" with the saddle he had ridden up there and that he and the other men then began the long ride home.

During the following year, 1867, Tip was married to Miss Susan Marshall. She was the daughter of Isham and Elizabeth Music Marshall, who owned land which is now a part of north Cuero. Susan was born there in 1847. She rode horseback to school in Clinton, having to ford the Guadalupe River.

Tip and Susan raised eight children: George M. Jr. (Young Tip), who died young leaving one daughter, Bonnie Lou; Robert (Bob), who was a farmer near Edinburg, Tx.; John, who lived in Sinton, Tx.; Aaron, who lived in Beeville; Ben and Blake of Cuero; Sally, who married Zann Peavy and lived in Houston; and Annie (see Dunn family).

Blake was the youngest of this family except for baby Susan, who died of burns received when she tipped a pot of boiling water over onto herself. He grew up running behind older brothers on the north outskirts of Cuero, went to school at "Old Man" Nash's, and at the age of 11 ran away from home, making his way down into Jackson Co. to the prairie where his brother Ben was herding their papa's cattle on the open range. Blake never returned to school, and having always regretted not getting an education, he helped a number of young people to stay in college.

When he was nineteen, Blake went to work for Mrs. Warrenetta Blake Peebles, a widow, taking care of the cattle on the Peebles Ranch. He and Mrs. Peebles formed a lasting partnership which was cemented by his marriage to her only daughter, Fannie, in 1914. Perhaps we should explain that he was named for Mrs. Peebles' older brother, Dr. Dan Blake, who brought him into the world.

Mrs. Peebles passed away in 1959, after which Blake and Fannie continued to operate that land which had come to them. They had one child, Elizabeth Blake, who was educated at the Valley View School (where Blake served as trustee for many years) and the Cuero schools, after which she attended Southern Methodist University, earning a degree in English. In Dec. 1942 she married Lt. Douglas H. Muir from Birmingham, Ala. During World War II he served as an Army Test Pilot at Bell Aircraft Corp. in Niagara Falls, N.Y. and with an Electronics Experimental Squadron at Ft. Dix Air Base, N.J. After the war, they lived first in Alabama and later in San Antonio. Their children are Douglas M., who lives in Birmingham, Al.; Patricia P., a practicing attorney in Houston; and Blake A., who lives on the Peebles-Alexander Ranch working for his mother.

Blake and Fannie both died in 1966, and Douglas Muir died in 1969 at the age of 51. Elizabeth and her son Blake moved to the ranch from San Antonio in Jan. 1970. He transferred into Cuero High School, and later attended college in San Marcos and Kingsville. She assumed management of the ranch, being helped greatly by her uncle, Pat Peebles, who was by then a near neighbor. After his death in 1973, she struggled on with the help of a longtime family employee, Vollie Henderson.

In 1987, after seventeen years of widowhood, Elizabeth married Julian W. Taylor of Nanafalia, Ala. and Lake Jackson, Tx.

ALEXANDER, IRVIN ROSS

FL

Irvin Ross Alexander was born March 3, 1891 in DeWitt County, Texas, the son of George Leander and Annie Amanda Hill Alexander. On the 19th of Nov. 1913 he was married to Lola Irene Wofford, daughter of John and Mertice Hoggatt Wofford. They settled on a small farm near Yorktown where their children were born. Orval Ross was born April 5, 1915; Wyvonna Belle was born June 6, 1916; and Sybil Irene was born Sept. 29, 1919.

Early in the winter of 1919 along with some other families in that area, they rented a railroad box car into which they loaded their belongings and moved to Alberta, Canada. The first few years were spent west of Calgary where Irvin worked on a sheep ranch, a wheat farm, in a general store, and running a truck line which ceased after an accident totaled the truck. In 1924 or 1925 they moved to Red Deer where Irvin worked in a meat market. Feeling the extreme distance from families and seeing their children growing up without knowing the land of their birth, in 1929 Irvin and Lola decided it was time to go back home. In Oct. of that year they sold the household goods and motored back to Texas. They had a tent and camped out each night and every turn in the road revealed something new about our country. In Texas, old friendships were renewed and families reunited. This was the year of the stock market crash and the beginning of the depression so Irvin felt lucky to find a job at a grocery in Drumright, Oklahoma. He also did work as an oil field roustabout until he went to work for the Tide Water Oil Refinery at Drumright where he stayed long enough to get a 20 year pin and take early retirement when the refinery was sold. By this time all the children were married. Orval to Eleanor Johnson; they have retired to Pleasant Hill, Tn. Wyvona married Joseph Lane; they live in Alexandria. Virginia. Sybil married John Hickam; they retired to Langley, Oklahoma, where she still

After retiring, Irvin and Lola moved to St. Cloud, Florida, where they lived for a time and then returned to Texas and settled in Rockport where they could fish, have a garden and flowers, and enjoy the good fellowship in the Methodist Church. Irvin died at Rockport April 19, 1970 and was interred in the Alexander Cemetery at Stratton. Lola was placed beside him after her death Oct. 14, 1988. They were survived by their three children, three grandchildren, and five great grandchildren.

ALEXANDER, JAMES SIDNEY "JIM"

F13

Traditionally, seven Alexander brothers came to the new world, from Ulster, and settled in Cecil and Somerset Counties and surrounding areas of Maryland in the late 1680s. The DeWitt County Alexanders descended from two of these early settlers: James born ca 1650 (through his son Moses and grandson Daniel) and Samuel born ca 1655 (through his son Andrew and grandson Moses).

Under heavy handed English rule, the freedom they were seeking was elusive. In the 1740s and 50s, due to political unrest and need for more land for their rapidly increasing numbers, most of them started moving farther inland. They settled in what is now Mechlenburg and Cabarrus Counties in North Carolina, where they were soon to outnumber settlers by any other name.

They established plantations, were active in many areas of government and helped plot the overthrow of English rule, with six Alexanders signing the Mechlenburg Declaration of Independence. They were prominent in the Revolution and James Sidney's story will start with three of Captain Stephen and Martha (Wilson)

Alexander's daughters.

Stephen was the son of Daniel and Prudence Alexander and Martha was the daughter of Mechlenburg Declaration of Independence signer Zaccheus Wilson. Prudence, who died July 18, 1800, was honored June 23, 1953 by the naming of the Prudence Alexander D.A.R. Chapter in Dallas. Stephen and Martha's daughters were (1) Mary, born February 8, 1785, married Benjamin Alexander on June 28, 1808, son of Moses and Martha (Kirkman) Alexander. They lived in Cabarrus County, near the Mechlenburg County line, where they raised eleven children. Among them were two sons, James Sidney, born February 7, 1811 and Robert, born April 22, 1815, who were to settle in DeWitt County. (2) Sarah, born August 26, 1777, married George Allen Jr., March 18, 1802, lived in Mechlenburg County and had a daughter, Mary Allen. (3) Martha, born July 23, 1793, married William Allison, December 27, 1814 and lived just over the state line in South Carolina. They had a daughter, Anna Allison.

James Sidney "Jim" b. Feb. 7, 1811 in Cabarrus Co., North Carolina, married his first cousin Mary Allen, February 17, 1836 in Rocky River Church, Cabarrus County. They lived in Mechlenburg County where they had three sons: Robert, born in 1837; George Leander, born April 30, 1839 and James Jr., born in 1841. Mary died soon after James Jr.'s birth and the children went to live with their grandparents, Ben and Mary Alexander.

Jim's second marriage was to another first cousin, Anna Allison in 1843. After the wedding, Robert and George made their home with their father and new mother but James Jr. was

In the latter part of 1846, Jim and his family started on their long trek to Texas, where he and his brother Robert had gone several years earlier to join the Texas forces in their fight with Mexico. They stopped in Yalobusha County, Mississippi to visit relatives and were persuaded to settle in that locale. About four years later Jim's oldest son, Robert, was killed by an alligator while playing in Yalobusha River. Soon afterwards they started to Texas for the second time.

The first land they purchased in DeWitt County was in 1850. Their land surrounded the site of Alexander cemetery and they lived a short distance east of that site. The last of the Jim Alexander land, purchased in 1855, was sold by a great-grandson in 1971, after 116 years in the family.

Jim and Anna's children were: (1) Allison, born 1844 in North Carolina. He was killed in battle during the Civil War. Upon receiving a letter from his sister Mary, informing him of his brother Allison death, George replied to her from the Confederate camp where he was stationed. From George's reply dated March 25, 1863: "I often think of my brother James and think he too may be gone but, oh sister, he is not as dear as the one I so often played my youthful hours away with". (2) Martha Ann, born February 14, 1846 in North Carolina. (3) Benjamin Franklin, born January 28, 1847, in Mississippi. (4) Mary Talitha, born October 7, 1849 in Mississippi. (5) Letitia Caroline, born September 25, 1854 in DeWitt County. (6) Thomas Livingston, born 1858 in DeWitt County. (7) Charles Henry, born May 1859 in DeWitt County.

Jim set aside land for a family cemetery and it is believed that his grandson Royal Henry Alexander, who died in 1873 was the first person to be interred there. Anna died April 5, 1879 and is buried in Alexander Cemetery. James Sidney died December 24, 1888 and is buried beside Anna. Jim's beloved brother Robert (with whom he traveled, on horseback, to so many far away places when they were young) passed away in 1882. Robert and his wife Sarah (Turner) Alexander are buried beside Jim and Anna, in unmarked graves.

The accompanying photo was taken in New Orleans when Jim was returning from service with the Confederate forces. He was discharged in July 1862 for disability.

ALVARADO, JACOB AND MACLOVIA (URESTI) FAMILY

F14

Jacob Alvarado was a resident of Cuero, DeWitt County, Texas from 1920 to 1970. He was the owner of Cuero Jewelry Shop on West Main Street. Jacob was born in Matehula, a town founded in 1520, state of San Luis Potosi, Mexico on February 15, 1893, and was baptized on March 10, 1893, Church of the Immaculate Conception there. His parents were Isidro Alvarado and Josefa Ramírez, whose families were pioneers of that town. Jacob's maternal grandparents were Claro Ramírez, a tailor, who died October 17, 1894 in Matehula, and Jesus G. Vda de Ramírez, died September 17,

Maclovia Alvarado, Jacob Alvarado, Charles Jacob Cilfone (8 months), Lois Alvarado Cilfone, 1897, Tampico, Mexico. His father's people were ranchers, landowners and workers at the silver mines near Real de Catorce. His mother's families were tailors for three generations of Matehula residents. The sons were sent to France to study tailoring.

Jacob grew up in San Salvador, near Saltillo. His schooling was provided by Jesuits. Not liking school, he would jump the fence to go observe the watchmaker from Switzerland in town, who gave him a job sweeping and taught him watchmaking and the jewelry business.

During the Mexican Revolution of 1918, Jacob was sent to San Antonio several times by the leaders because he was an intelligent and trustworthy young man. Many times Jacob talked of having met Pancho Villa and knowing the colonels and generals who later became the presidents of Mexico and governors of various states. Because of the revolution, Jacob, who was in his 20s, decided to leave Mexico. In San Antonio, he worked for the jewelry firm of Betancourt. When Jacob heard of the need for a watchmaker in Cuero, he moved there.

Jacob brought with him from Mexico his mother's sister, Dona Silvina and her husband, Don Miguelito. This aunt has raised him from childhood when his mother died. He also brought his aunt's son, Frank Martinez. Other family members who came to live in Cuero were his sister, Aurelia Hernandez and her daughter, Carmen, who married Henry Uresti, Maclovia's brother. In Cuero, Jacob met his wife, Maclovia Uresti of Victoria, during her visits to her half-sister, Guadalupe Uresti Henson, wife of Julius Henson.

Maclovia was born at the Uresti ranch in Victoria, Texas, on April 25, 1899. She was baptized in San Diego, Texas, at St. Francis de Paula Church by Rev. I.P. Bard, on 26 August 1900. Maclovia's parents were Inocencio Uresti of Victoria and Maria Garcia of San Diego, Texas, where they married on December 9, 1889, by Priest J.P. Hass. Inocencio Uresti was born on December 28, 1855 in Spring Creek, Victoria, Texas. At the age of 37, he was appointed School Trustee of Spring Creek No. 5, in Victoria by the Department of Education "for the year beginning September 1, 1892 and ending August 3, 1896." Innocencio Uresti died at age 79, on his ranch in Nursery while sitting at his dining room table after returning from horseback riding, February 3, 1934. Maria

Garcia was born in San Diego, Texas, May 17, 1871, baptized May 20, 1871 at St. Francis de Paula Church by Rev. Adolph Guichon. Maria was 18 when she married Inocencio, 34, a widower with 6 small children. His first wife was Carmen Mora. Maria and Inocencio had 10 children. Four died very young. Maria's parents were Matianna Perez and Jose Maria Garcia, ranchers and landowners of Duval County, Texas. Her brother, Vidal, was one of the earliest postmasters of San Diego. Maria was widowed at age 63, at the Uresti ranch, later came to Cuero to live with Jacob and Maclovia and died on June 17, 1955 at age 84, in San Antonio. Both are buried in the Uresti family plot in Victoria.

Maclovia's early education was at the country school in Nursery, where she went to school on her horse, Charlie, or in bad weather by buggy driven by her father. She later became a boarding student at Nazareth Academy in Victoria. Maclovia loved riding her horse bareback, playing the piano and canoeing on the Guadalupe River at the pecan bottom of the Uresti ranch in Nursery, 9 miles from Victoria. This 442 acres of the Sylvestre De Leon grant was purchased by Maclovia's paternal grandparents, Guadalupe Uresti and Francisca Garcia from Francesco DeLeon on July 17, 1854. Maclovia's father, Inocencio was a general store owner in Victoria, and a rancher and farmer in Nursery, who took his cattle to Kansas to sell.

Jacob and Maclovia were married in a civil ceremony in Houston on November 5, 1921. They were married by Catholic rites at Guadalupe Church in Cuero, November 19, 1933, witnesses being nephew Ernest Henson and Emma Lee Joseph of Cuero. They had three children: Gilbert, September 9, 1922; Robert, February 25, 1924; and Lois Josephine, August 5, 1927, all born in Cuero.

During the depression, hungry men who came to the Alvarado house at 401 West French Street, were given a warm meal. Needy women were given employment at the modest home during these lean years. During World War II when his son, Gilbert, served in the U.S. Navy, Jacob proudly became an American citizen with the help of his friend, District Judge Howard P. Green, who drove him to Victoria for the ceremony. Maclovia planted a victory garden, raised chickens and did canning of fruits and vegetables. They grew many roses and had bee hives in their yard. She made homemade soap, ice cream and root beer capped in bottles. She was recognized for her outstanding cakes.

Jacob was a respected leader in his community and was often called upon to deliver eulogies at funerals because of his eloquent speech. An avid reader, he taught himself to read and write in English by using phonograph records and dictionaries. He had great admiration for President Franklin Roosevelt, whom he liked to quote.

Jacob died at the age of 86 on February 24, 1979, and is buried at San Jose Cemetery in San Antonio, Texas. Maclovia still resides, at age 90, in her home at 1017 South Mesquite, San Antonio, since 1947, with her son Robert, a bachelor and retired watchmaker. Gilbert Alvarado and wife, Yolanda Flores Marquez reside in San Antonio and Port Aransas. Lois Alvarado and husband Charles Joseph Cilfone reside at 134 Postwood Drive in San Antonio. Their story is given separately. Jacob and Maclovia had 7 grandchildren and 3 great grandchildren. One namesake, great grand-

AMBERSON, JAMES

James Amberson (22 Jun 1816 - 9 Feb 1886), of Swedish descent, was born in western Pennsylvania where the Ambersons had settled in Mercer County in colonial times. James married his first wife ca 1834. Their three children - William, ca. 1835, a daughter, ca 1838, and Anna Elizabeth in 1847 — were born in Monroe County, Mississippi. James' wife apparently died soon after Anna was born.

James moved his family to Texas where he married his second wife, Mrs. Mary Jane (McKenzie) Finch, on 13 November 1851 in San Antonio. Mary Jane was the widow of John H. Finch who had land holdings in Caldwell and DeWitt Counties. Mary Jane (30 Mar 1836 -25 Aug 1909) was born in Tennessee. She and John Finch had only one child, John M. Finch, born in 1847 in Texas.

James and Mary Jane first settled in Caldwell Co. along Clear Fork of Plum Creek near Lockhart, Tex., accumulating other properties from time to time. Four children were born to them in Caldwell Co.: Roderick Toliver (18 Aug 1852 - 3 Jan 1931), Martha Ann (20 Jun 1855 - 4 Jul 1940), James R., Jr., (Mar 1858 - 3 June 1909), and Mary V. "Jennie" Amberson (b. Dec. 1860).

William Amberson (1835-1858) married Sarah Louisa Tomerlin (22 Jan 1837 - 14 Feb 1898), a daughter of James Tomerlin (1804-1854) and his wife Frances, who had moved their family from Washington County, Arkansas, to Rusk County, Texas, in 1846, then on to Caldwell County in 1852 where James was shot from ambush and killed on 29 May 1854 near Lockhart, Texas. William and Sarah had two children: Frances J. "Fannie" Amberson (1854-1902) and George Wesley Amberson (b. ca 1857). After William died (under unknown circumstances) in Medina County, Sarah married James P. Shoemake in 1859, and had eleven more children.

James Amberson's residence during the Civil War has not been discovered, but the DeWitt Co. tax roll of 1868 and deed records show that he bought land in the Benjamin McDaniel League east of Yorktown. In 1872, he bought more land located nearby in the Caruthers survey along Twelve-Mile Creek. James' family was enumerated in the 1870 and 1880 censuses of DeWitt County. The Texas Agriculture Schedules indicate that he was an industrious farmer and stockraiser, and the county tax rolls indicate that he was a prosperous landowner in DeWitt County.

Mary Jane and her son, John M. Finch, were the only heirs of John H. Finch. He provided a substantial inheritance of land for them, much of which was located in DeWitt Co. on Clear Fork of Sandies Creek, However, by 1872 most of Mary Jane's inheritance had been sold off.

Anna Elizabeth Amberson (March 1847 - 4 Jan 1916) married David R. Maxey (Sep 1833 - 15 Jan 1938) on 22 Dec 1870 in DeWitt Co. Their children: Rice (b. Mar 1871), Cora (1874), John M. (1877), James S. (1881) and David (1884). Anna and David remained in DeWitt County the rest of their lives. Rice Maxey was listed as a widower in the household of his cousin Frances J. "Fannie" (Amberson) Ragsdale in the Cooke Co. census of 1900. The 1910 census listed Rice as a farmer in Travis Co. with his (second) wife Janie (b. 1882 in Arkansas) and four children: Jennie C. (b. 1903), Georgia O. (b. 1905), Chester (b. 1907), and David R. (b. 1909). Some of these children later returned to DeWitt County where they married.

Roderick Toliver "R.T." Amberson married Georgia Ann Wilson (20 Feb 1860 - 7 Nov 1945) on 6 Nov 1878 in DeWitt Co. She was a daughter of Samuel Wilson and Rachel Leric. R.T.'s children (all marrying in Kimble County) were Emma Rebecca (b. 1880) m. William Chandler, Mary J. (Jul 1882) m. Aaron D. Cummins, William (1885-1926) m. Mary Bell, Addie (1888-1973) m. John Spruell, Roderick Ray (1892-1978) m. Lydia Deck (1895-1984), Ethel (1894-1916) m. Mr. Duff, and Tom (1901-1959)) m. Eva Strader.

Martha Ann Amberson m. ca 1882 to Samuel A. Hunter (1 Mar 1854 - 25 Nov 1936). Their child was James R. Hunter, b. June 1884.

James R. Anderson, Jr., m. Georgie Celeste Walton (16 Apr 1868 - 1 Jun 1941) on 8 Nov 1887 in Kimble County. Children: George (Sep. 1888) m. ARNECKE, C.A.H. FAMILY

F18

Dr. Arnecke lived in the community of Arneckeville – named for his father – his entire life. He was a successful and well known pioneer of DeWitt County. In addition to his medical practice, he also operated a drug store. He practiced medicine in Arneckeville and the surrounding area for over 50 years – from 1895 until his death on September 02, 1947.

Dr. Arnecke was born Christoph Adam Henry Arnecke, April 20, 1860 – the son of immigrants, who came to America from Germany in 1854. His parents were Andreas Christoph Heinrich "Henry" Arnecke and Ursela Barbara Sager. (see related story)

He attended the public schools of DeWitt County and worked in a local drugstore for fourteen years before attending the medical schools of the University of Kentucky at Louisville, University of the South at Sewannee, Tennessee, and the Sewanee University of Nashville, where he graduated and received the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1895.

Dr. Arnecke was a member of Woodmen of the World, Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows, O.D.H.S., Modern Order of Praetorians, and County, State, and American Medical Associations. He also served as a Notary Public. He was a member of Zion Lutheran Church at Arneckeville.

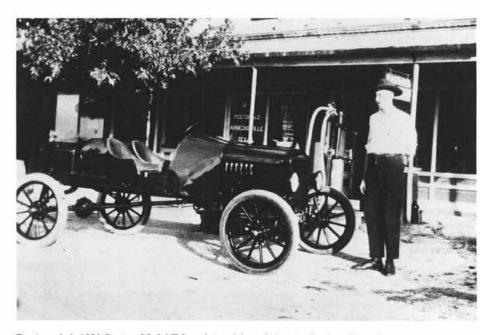

In his time, very few people went to the doctor's office – the doctor came to them, sometimes free of charge. Dr. Arnecke was a typical country doctor – first on horseback and then by buggy pulled by two horses, Nellie and Dollie. He had to travel rugged roads, with no bridges, and many gates to open, but he never refused a call, regardless of circumstances. In 1820, he bought his first automobile, a 1920

Custom Model T Speedster, and hired drivers – the first two were Sylvester Jendry and Newton Koenig – since he never learned to drive.

On 08 April 1883, Dr. Arnecke married Mary Louise Wilhelmina "Minna" Hausmann, the daughter of Henry and Caroline Dreier Hausmann. She was born July 05, 1858 in the community of Kilgore in Goliad County; died June 05, 1948 in Arneckeville. Both she and the doctor are buried in the Zion Lutheran Cemetery.

Minna was a small, very energetic woman. She loved the outdoors and enjoyed gardening and growing flowers. In her childhood days, she was a very good horseback rider, helping her father on their farm and on cattle roundups.

Dr. Arnecke and Minna were the parents of Postmaster in 1919, and served as such until his death in 1947. The store was destroyed by fire August 14, 1947.

Charlie and Bonnie had two children: (1) Carl Earl – born March 25, 1912 and (2) Hazel Jean – born September 08, 1921.

ARNOLD, ALBERT F. AND AUGUSTA A. GUDAT

F20

Arnold, Albert F. and Augusta A. (Gudat)

Albert F. Arnold was born in Weser, Texas on Nov. 14, 1863 to John Peter Arnold and Fanny Braden (Bluntzer) Arnold. His father, John Peter Arnold was born in Kruth, Alsace on July 14, 1832 and emigrated to Texas in August of 1855 through the port of Indianola. Albert's mother, Fannie Braden Bluntzer was born on November 14, 1838 in Oderen, Alsace and emigrated to Texas with her father Peter Bluntzer in December of 1843. John P. Arnold and Fannie B. Bluntzer were married on April 6, 1858 in Meyersville, Texas by Rev. A. Gardet, a Catholic priest from Victoria. Their marriage was blessed with 14 children, 7 boys and 7 girls. They acquired extensive lands near Weser on the Coletto Creek in DeWitt and Goliad Counties: 1600 acres in all, at the time of his death. They also owned a General Merchandise Store, Cotton Gin, and a Grist Mill at Weser and also operated a freight line by wagon. It can be concluded that he was ambitious, energetic, and possessed considerable business instinct. However, John Arnold in no way accomplished his fortune on his own, the assistance of a dutiful wife and the motivation, cooperation, and hard work of all the children must be properly acknowledged.

The girls were all taught the skills of home management. The most delightful aspect being crocheting, knitting, quilt-making, and embroidery of all kinds. It was instilled so deeply that in later years and generations it was considered almost sacreligious to sit without one's hands occupied. The boys were directed in woodcutting, fence-building, herding sheep, tending cattle and horses, hauling freight, crop production, and some understanding of accounting and finances. The value of ambition and hard work was the cornerstone of their early development.

John died on January 5, 1897 and Fannie died on January 29, 1904. They are both buried in Sts. Peter and Paul Catholic Cemetery in Meversville.

Albert F. Arnold was the 4th child of John and Fannie Arnold and married Augusta Amelia Gudat on December 26, 1889. Augusta Gudat was born on March 19, 1868 to Henry Gudat (6-27-1828) and Johanna (Englke) Gudat (7-20-1833). Her parents were married in Germany in 1857 and emigrated to Texas in 1872. Albert and Augusta lived and farmed in the Weser area and later moved to Falls County, Texas. They raised 11 children and 1 foster child. Frank N. Arnold (9-10-1891), Charles Henry Arnold (9-11-1893) twin Alonzo A. Arnold (9-11-1893) twin, George Wlm. Arnold (11-15-1896), Effie J. (Arnold) Zengerle (7-17-898), Walter Leon Arnold (10-14-1901), Geneva T. (Arnold) (Raabe) Rieger (1-3-1904), Dicy Johanna (Arnold) Harms (10-18-1906), Theresa Elizabeth (Arnold) Witzsche (12-18-1908), Joseph B. Arnold (4-7-1911), Mary Agnes (Arnold) Rabrocker (1-12-1913), fosterchild Frank J. Gudat (1-19-1916).

Albert F. Arnold died on January 16, 1949 and Augusta A. (Gudat) Arnold died on March 26, 1953. They are both buried in the family plot in St. Mary's Cemetery in Westphalia, Falls County, Texas.

He was the youngest of seven children; four boys Lee, Charles, Sam and Maurice, and three girls, Rae, Fannie and Eva Joan. His mother died March 8, 1928 when he was very young. His oldest sister, Rae, took over as head of the household and kept the brothers and sisters together until 1940. His father later married Esther Lieberman and lived with Esther and her children. Hunt and Prairie was a very bad flood area in those days. The Aronsteins were married by Rabbi Jacobson of San Antonio. By the time the Rabbi arrived, all the streets were flooded and Charles Aronstein carried the Rabbi into the house. The ceremony was performed quickly and the Rabbi left immediately because all roads in and out of Cuero were being closed because of the flood.

Maurice and Sarah lived in Houston until Maurice was drafted into the Army in February 1942. He was inducted at Ft. Sam Houston, Texas, then shipped to Camp Joseph T. Robinson in Little Rock, Ark. for basic training. From Little Rock he was shipped to Fitzsimmons General Hospital in Denver, Colorado for training in the Medical Corps. She found employment in the personnel department of Winter General Hospital and later was Secretary to Director of Personnel.

After Maurice was discharged, they returned to Houston. He went back to his old job, but after several months decided to make a change in his employment. Jake and Mollie Cohn, Sarah's parents, asked him to come to Cuero and help manage "The Fair" store. They arrived in Cuero with their infant daughter, Marian Adele, who was born in Houston, October 5, 1946. Their son, Robert Allen, was born in Cuero, January 12, 1950. Marian and Robert attended Cuero Schools. Marian graduated in 1964, went to the University of Texas two years, then decided to seek a career and went to work in Houston in 1968. They have one daughter, Jennifer Lauren, born February 12, 1982.

During the years Maurice and Sarah both worked at "The F air". Maurice was active in community projects and downtown merchants' activities. He held offices in various organizations, was Vice-President of the Chamber of Commerce, Worshipful Master of Cuero Masonic Lodge, member of Alzafar Shrine Temple of San Antonio, and a member of the Rotary Club.

AUDILET, ALEXANDER AND ANNA

F25

Franz Alexander Audilet "Alex" was one of the two sons of Karl Audilet of Saxony, Germany. Karl, a prosperous well educated man wanted his son to become a priest. Alex, faced with the drab prospect of the monastic life of a priest decided there were worse things than losing his birthright to share in the family estate. Considering his options, his choice was clear. Without benefit of parental blessing, he would go to America.

Alex Audilet had a good education, good knowledge of the Bible, and could converse in seven languages. He had studied music and played the violin. He was a natural musician and could read music or play by ear.

Since he left Germany without his father's blessings, and was short of funds, he went to sea as a member of a ship s crew. He was a sailor for seven years. No record has been written relative to where he went or his experience during that time. However, on his last voyage there was trouble on the ship and Alexander suffered a severe beating. The nature of the trouble is not known, but when the ship landed in Savannah, Georgia he was cast ashore.

Alone, destitute and severely injured he was placed in a charity ward on the upper floor of a hospital. Because of his financial status, Alex was receiving minimal care and little food. He was befriended by a young female orderly in the hospital, named Anna Bertha Bathke. Anna, herself a recent immigrant, was trained as a nurse in Germany. She shared her food with him, and his health and spirits improved. They became friends, and friendship blossomed into romance, and soon they were talking of marriage.

Alex had an aunt, named Rosa Kurtsch or Krusch, whose husband owned, or worked in, a button factory, in Brooklyn, New York. Alex queried his relatives about work and living conditions, and found that jobs were available.

His health restored, Alex Audilet and Anna Bathke went to Brooklyn, New York, where they were married an August 25, 1894 by Reverend C.H. Schwarzbach.

They worked and lived in Brooklyn for about three years. During that time they had two daughters. Ruth Annie Wilhelmine was born September 11, 1895, and Hertha Elizabeth was born January 17, 1897.

After the birth of Hertha, they decided to move to Texas. They set sail from New York, and landed in Galveston, Texas, sometime during the year 1897. Their first home in Texas was in the Weesatche community in Goliad County. Their first son, Osmar, was born on December 2, 1898, probably while living in Weesatche.

The family later moved to Nordheim, DeWitt County, and from there they moved to the Nopal Community, in DeWitt County, Texas.

Though the family occupation was farming, it was not easy as Alex had no training or experience in agriculture. While repairing the windmill, Alex fell, and was badly injured. The injuries were aggravated when he imbibed too freely and literally fell off the wagon, and it was necessary for him to use a cane at an early age.

Though he had his problems as a farmer, Alexander Audilet was a well read, multilingual man who had more education than the average settler in the Clear Creek neighborhood. He had a high regard for education, and took the lead in helping to provide schooling for the children of the community. He was on the school board of the Clear Creek School District No. 39, which was founded July 8, 1891. The school was probably first called Sandgate, then renamed Clear Creek in 1893. The first school was there when he arrived in the area. Most of the Audilet children attended the school, and some of the teachers took room and board with the family.

Anna Audilet served the community as a nurse and midwife in addition to her normal household duties.

Church services were held in the Clear Creek School house twice a month. The church, known as the Gruenau-Nopal Church, was transferred to Yorktown in 1936.

They had hard times and happy times. Alex had an active and inquisitive mind and he enjoyed visiting with the neighbors, exchanging ideas on politics, current events, farming and education, while the women talked of cooking, sewing, and babies. There were house dances, hunting, and Easter egg hunts in the pasture for the children and grandchildren.

Money was short and many times that are now commonplace could not be bought. By necessity most things used on a day-to-day basis were homemade, or raised on the farm. Such items included cottage cheese, butter, bread, sausage, and other cured meats, soap, goose down pillows and comforts, and farm tools. Homebrewed beer was a special delight. Anna had a concoction that was considered a very nutritious and refreshing afternoon drink. The recipe has not survived, but it is remembered that the first of the ingredients was an egg and the last was beer.

The Audilets were a musical family. Economic conditions precluded formal training for the children, but they were good, natural musicians. Osmar played the drums in different bands most of his life. Gustav "Gus" and Henry "Buddy" played the violin, banjo, and accordion. The entire family enjoyed singing.

Married life was not completely harmonious for Alexander and Anna. They had marital troubles that led to divorce in the 1920's. The land was divided and the large house was cut in two. They each lived in their own portion of the house, on their own portion of the land.

Alex, who gave up his birthright rather than become a priest, was not long content to live alone. He apparently did not deem any of the local crop of widows as a suitable mate, or perhaps vice versa. At any rate, he answered a magazine ad of a "Lonely Hearts Club". An interested correspondent was found, and letters and pictures were exchanged. The pictures were meant to impress rather then inform, and both parties felt it expedient to use pictures other than their own. In due time, Alex proposed and Mrs. Alice House of Kentucky saw fit to accept.

The small train that ran twice daily between Cuero and Kenedy was dubbed "The Dinky" but its patrons, and on this noble conveyance Mrs. House was to arrive. On the appointed day, several family members accompanied Alex to the station in Yorktown to meet her.

Recognition was a bit of a problem as neither party had a reliable photo to go by. Alex approached several suitable looking women only to be rebuffed, but by the process of elimination he finally found the right lady. They ere married December 12, 1928, in Yorktown, Texas.

After a few years, Alice longed to go back to her native Arkansas. They moved to Evansville, Arkansas, and found a place on the edge of town. They had a small plot of ground, large enough for a garden and an orchard of apple and other fruit trees. Alexander was in his early sixty's and with their plot of land, and family help, they were able to sustain themselves until the fell victims to the problems of old age.

Old, alone, and away from family, they were beset with ill health, and neither was able to help the other. Neighbors by the name of Bristow, helped them and kept the family informed. Franz Alexander Audilet died January 2, 1944, at the age of seventy four years, seven months, and fourteen days. He was buried in Arkansas.

When Alvin Salge, a son-in-law, Walter Audilet, and Rugh Audilet Thieme, children of Alexander, arrived for the funeral, the children of Alice (House) Audilet had taken their mother and the possessions to Kentucky. They never saw her again.

The life of Alexander Audilet was hard, and beset with frustration and disappointment. In some respects, a man of his ability and knowledge was wasted on the frontier, but probably no more so than if he had become a priest. One can only wonder why he left the East Coast, where his talents could have been better utilized, to settle in the raw frontier and to follow a strange occupation for which he was not well suited. It is a pity that his father was not more flexible in his choice of a career for his son.

Anna Bertha (Bathke) Audilet was born April 7, 1869 in Koepitz, near Stettin, Pomerania, Germany. She always longed for her native Germany and it was her lifelong hope that she would return. This hope was never realized. She died in the Garfield community February 14, 1948. In accordance with her wishes, she was cremated and her ashes were taken to Corpus Christi where they were scattered in the sea. Her hope was that some of her remains would wash ashore in her native land.

Franz Alexander Audilet and Anna Bertha Bathke Audilet had ten children: 1) Ruth Annie Wilhemina was born September 11. 1895, married Charles F. Thieme, and died September 8, 1976. 2) Hertha Elizabeth was born January 17, 1897, married Otto George Schroeder, and died April 14, 1987. 3). Osmar A. was born December 2, 1898, married Selma Block, and died July 11, 1965. 4) William Paul was born September 1, 1900, married Minnie Hulda Louisa Rabenaldt, and died July 16, 1956. 5) Jack Ernest was born March 14, 1901, married Vella Mae Hickmon, and died July 27, 198?. 6) Arno Albert was born March 19, 1904, married Tracey Strakos, and died January, 1986. 7) Walter A. was born October 19, 1905, married Ethel Bolt, and died August 11, 1985. 8) Gustav Adolph was born December 2, 1906, married Laura Lee Hoffman, and died March 28, 1974. 9) Forrest Marie Lina was born September, 1909, married Alvin Adolph Salge. and died March 11, 1971. 10) Henry Alexander was born September 2-, 1912, married Clara Lorena Hoffman, and died July 11, 1986.

BACA, JULIUS

F26

Julius Baca, son of Adolph and Julia Jalufka Baca was born near Nopal, Texas, DeWitt County on May 19, 1910. He went to school at Clear Creek. He did not finish high school because at the age of 16 he became the man of the house. He was to farm for his mother and care for a sister. His father had died when he was six years old.

Julius loved baseball, fishing, and dancing. Julius met the girl of his dreams at a house party. This young lady was Ellenora Schaffner of Westhoff. Ellenora was the daughter of Gus and Rosa Mueller Schaffner. Ellenora was born January 3, 1916. Now Ellenora desired to go to college. She finished high school in Yorktown and attended S.W.T.T.U. at San Marcos, Texas from which she received a Bachelor of Science Degree. After two years of teaching, Julius and Ellenora were married in St. Paul Lutheran Church, December 30, 1937 by Rev. Hankammer.

They farmed and ranched together and Ellenora continued to teach.

In August, 1951, they were blessed with a son, their only child. Ellenora took leave of absence from the Yorktown Independent School District. She had taught seventeen years, so she would enjoy her baby.

Tragedy happened in 1954. Julius was in a combine accident in which he nearly lost a foot. For two years he was unable to operate the farm, but Ellenora did, and also looked after the leased cattle ranges with her little son.

Byron grew up, went to college, served in the Air Force and then got married. He is employed in the U.S. Post Office in Victoria.

Julius' poor health caused the doctor to give him this ultimatum: Quit your work or die. Julius and Ellenora sold their farm, and everything else. They moved into Yorktown in 1974. They bought a home in 1978. Ellenora retired from teaching in May 1979, after 42 years with Yorktown Independent School District. Julius died in November 19, 1980. Ellenora still lives in Yorktown.

BADE, HEINIE AND FRIEDA (SAGER)

F2'

Heinie Bade was born October 22, 1917, in DeWitt County, Texas, the second child of Henry J. and Amanda Krueger Bade. His grandfather, William Frederick Bade, came to America from Viescke Germany in 1867 at the age of 4 years. William grew up in the Arneckeville community and settled on a farm in the area. There he raised his family, one of which was Henry J., the father of Heinie. On October 13, 1940, Heinie married Frieda Sager. Frieda was the daughter of C.A. Henry Sager, whose story is given separately.

After struggling through the depression years followed by a tour of duty with the U.S. Navy in World War II, Heinie and Frieda bought a farm. They raised turkeys and Heinie was active in the Cuero Turkey Association. In 1947 Heinie personally coaxed his flock of Beltsville white turkeys down Main Street in the famous Turkey Trot Parade. In 1948 a herd of dairy cows was acquired and the family started a small dairy operation.

Heinie's ambition to make the farm as progressive and productive as possible led to involvement in various farm organizations. He was dedicated to soil and water conservation and has served on the district conservation board since 1947. He is a member of the state legislative Committee of 100 and chairman of DeGola, a seven county resource conservation district.

Knowing personally the need for assistance in financing the farmers' operation and production, he became involved in the Farm Credit System. He served as a director of the local Production Credit Association and on the Texas Farm Credit Bank board of the national organization.

Heinie was always a leader in the community. He served as a director of Cuero Chamber of Commerce, Golden Crescent Council of Governments, Texas Agricultural Cooperative Council, Cuero community Hospital, Cuero school, DeWitt County Producers Association, and Lions Club. He is also on the Board of Regents of Texas Lutheran College.

Frieda Sager Bade was also actively involved in the family business and supportive of Heinie's civic involvement. In addition to raising a family, she was bookkeeper for the business and spent time doing farm chores. She kept a garden and canned the produce. She enjoyed cooking and sewing for the family and found time for PTA, home demonstration club, and other community activities.

The Bades' involvement in the community stemmed from their faith in God and desire to serve their fellowman. They both taught Sunday school for many years and served on various church committees in the local congregation and in state and national areas. They were co-recipients of the Distinguished Service Award given by Texas Lutheran College for service to church, community, and profession.

Heinie has been honored by many agricultural and community organizations. He was named Outstanding Conservation Farmer. He received the Cuero Chamber Community Award and Agricultural Award and many other plaques from various organizations.

The Bades have seven children. All seven graduated from Cuero High School and went on to receive college degrees. They have been recognized as leaders in their professions, churches, and communities. Lawrence is a Lutheran minister serving as the assistant to the bishop of the Southwestern Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America. Norman is an agronomist with the Soil and Water Conservation Service. He served in the state office in Temple. David is an agronomist with the Agricultural Extension Service. He serves an area of south central Texas as a forage and small grain specialist. Margaret Drushel works with the Texas Employment Commission in Houston. Lois Tolbert teaches math at the Cuero Junior High School. John is a Lutheran minister serving a congregation in south Austin. Bernice Huie is an accountant with an electronics manufacturing company in New Hampshire. The Bades also have eleven grandchildren.

BAKER, CALVIN CASON

F28

Calvin Cason Baker and daughter, Jerry Baker Mauer

Calvin Cason Baker was born Feb. 7, 1903 in Williamson County, Texas, the first son of Robert Zebulon and Ellen Swindle Wilson Baker. He grew up on his father's farm with his brother, Bethel, and nine sisters – Bertha (Bernard), Eva (Maness), Edna (Weisse), Lovie (Pipkin), Florence (Day), LeLa Mae (Baker), Grace (Stubblefield), Arminta (Chance), and Emilee (Love).

Calvin and Bethel worked with their father to produce foodstuffs to eat, corn for the livestock, cotton to sell at the gins in Florence and Georgetown, and keeping bees for honey. But Calvin was not born to be a farmer. After his long days of labor in the rich, rocky fields, the kerosene lamp burned late into the night while he studied everything available to him about electricity, power, and a new form of communication and entertainment called "radio".

His talents were recognized by his brotherin-law, the late Frank Weisse, who has been called an electronics genius. Frank encouraged Calvin and helped him find employment with Central Power and Light Co. in Cuero and later in their shops in San Antonio.

In December, 1922 in DeWitt County Calvin met and married Pearl Matthew. He took his bride back to the farm to live in the little house his grandparents, Obed and Eliza (Cottle) Baker had built in 1884. I was born there May 15, 1926, their only child, and was given the name "Geraldine", the title of a song my father loved.

My earliest recollection of "home" is that little Texas-style house with its wide gallery, stone fireplace, and lilacs blooming by the gate. A "dog-trot" divided the four rooms – the parlor and my Mother's kitchen on one side, the bedroom and a room my father equipped as a little shop on the other.

For as long as I can remember, my father has had a shop. He devised a system of light for our house long before anyone heard of REA and built a crystal radio that brought music and far-away places into our lives. As a child I often sat by his side watching as he drew electrical diagrams. Once, when he needed copper wire, I "helped" by removing a coil from our Model T. I unwrapped yards of wire from the cylinder and brought it to him, expecting him to be pleased by my ingenuity. Obviously I did not inherit his mechanical talents.

We lived in Stratton for a time and during the Great Depression my parents found work as weavers in the Guadalupe Valley Textile Mills in Cuero. Finally he realized his life-long dream of opening a business for the sale and service of radios, continuing to study a new field called "television".

Through the years he had shops in a number of places – Western Auto in Cuero and Yorktown, Stowers Furniture, with B.B. Thorn on Main Street, adjacent to his own home on Clayton Street, and finally in association with Thomas Kahlich downtown on Esplanade prior to his retirement.

My mother ran his business office, answering the phone and the mail and doing his bookkeeping. She died December 3, 1965 of a massive coronary and is buried in Alexander Cemetery, Stratton, beside her mother, Martha Frances Newman Kirkland Matthew.

I married Ray Mauer June 1, 1941. We were pleased to live in Cuero near both our parents for a number of years. Our three children David Ray (June 15, 1942), Robert Michael (Sept. 25, 1945), and Melinda Lou (Aug. 3, 1951), Calvin's only descendants, were born while we lived there.

In 1958 we moved to San Antonio. Our children graduated from Highlands High School and attended San Antonio colleges. David, who lives in Lakehills, married Sandra Joy Laue. Their sons are David Ray, Jr. (Jan. 13, 1961) and Randall Keith (May 5, 1964). David commutes daily to his insurance office in San Antonio. Sandra is employed in the business office of Bandera Independent School District. Following his graduation from Texas A&M, David Jr. joined his father in business. Randy also attended Texas A&M and works for Tracor Corp. in Austin. He is married to the former Sherri Marshall of Pipe Creek. Their daughter, Heather Christine (b. June 7, 1985), is of the fifth living generation on both the Baker and Mauer sides of her family tree.

Michael married Shirley Alice Moran. Their children are Lisa Marie (Nov. 14, 1969), a student at Texas University, Austin, and Garrett Michael (May 5, 1974), who lives with his mother in San Antonio, where he attends Judson High School. Divorced, Michael later married DeAnna Skinner. They live in Topeka, Kansas where he works in management for Yellow Freight Lines. Her children are Nicole and Russell Skinner.

Melinda married E.A. "Bubba" Hermes, Jr., whose mother was the former Mary Alice Koenig, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Koenig of Cuero. Melinda's and Bubba's three children were born in San Antonio. Ashley Alise (Feb. 13, 1974), Lindsey Reagan (Apr. 7, 1978), who died May 5, 1978, and Todd Everet (Apr. 11, 1979). Bubba is a San Antonio home builder and Melida works for Tesoro.

Ray served with the U.S. Air Force during World War II and maintained Reserve status until his retirement in 1982. His civilian career in Federal civil service concluded at Kelly AFB with his service as world-wide systems manager of C5 aircraft. I worked as a medical secretary at Baptist Memorial Hospital and for a physician-surgeon in private practice.

On retiring, we built a home in Lakehills on Medina Lake in Bandera County. Ray is presently serving as Bandera County judge, an office to which he was elected in 1986.

In 1966, my father and Eddie Merle Carroll Matthew, widow of my mother's youngest brother, were married in San Antonio. They lived in Cuero until Dad retired. They now live in a country home near Terryville in the Bear Creek community. Her two sons, Jerry Arlen and Dennis Van Matthew, live with their families in Houston.

BAKER, JUDGE JAMES McCULLOCH

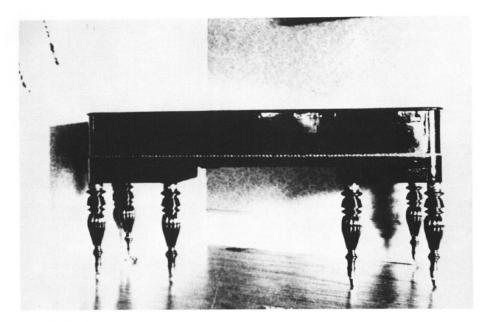

F29

James McCulloch Baker

Judge Baker was a prominent figure in the pioneer times of Texas, especially along the Guadalupe River. He was a cousin of Generals Ben and Henry McCulloch, two of the most brilliant soldiers Texas ever produced.

Judge Baker was born November 27, 1797, in South Carolina. He married Martha Jane Smith in Maury County, Tennessee, August 27, 1818. Their first ten children were born in that county, and the other three were born in Mississippi and Texas. The names of their thirteen children were: Martha Jane, Samuel Smith, Joseph Lock, Nancy Ann, Mary Clementine, Margaret Mackey, James Porter, Elizabeth Gillia, William Williams, John Brown, Michael Jefferson, Eliza Eudora, and Sarah Alison who married John Harland Blackwell in Concrete, Texas, August 19, 1863. To this

First piano brought to area union ten children were born, and my mother, Beulah, was one of them. (See John H. Blackwell family)

James M. Baker moved his family from Tennessee to Sharon, Mississippi, when it was still a territory, and there he enjoyed association with some of the most prominent men of the time. He held a number of important positions in early Mississippi history.

In 1840, when Texas was still a Republic, Baker moved his family to the Cuero Creek area (Concrete), where he purchased a plantation, which is still owned by family members today. In 1841, he was a founder and Ruling Elder of the first Cumberland Presbyterian Church in what is now DeWitt County. The Honorable James McCulloch Baker served the Republic of Texas as Chief Justice of Gonzales County and as Probate Judge from February 26, 1844 to February 19, 1846. He then served as the first Chief Justice and the first Probate Judge of Gonzales County, State of Texas from February 19, 1846 to July 27, 1846. As Chief Justice, he was designated by the first governor of Texas, J.P. Henderson, to "inaugurate" the government of DeWitt County.

Journal Of Record For the Commissioners Court Of DeWitt County, Texas Book A., pages 1 and 2.

"Be it Remembered that on the 27th day of July in the year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Forty-six the oath of office was administered to John Troy as Chief Justice for said County of DeWitt (who was duly Elected to said office on the 13th day of July, 1846 agreeably to the Proclamation of the Governor of the State of Texas) by James M. Baker, the Chief Justice for Gonzales County, and the State of Texas, and said Oath of Office was ordered to be filed in the Clerk's office. Be it also Remembered that on the 27th day of July, A.D. 1846 that James M. Baker did subscribe to and take the Oath of Office for Probate Judge of DeWitt County, agreeably to the Constitution of the State of Texas.'

Thus, he became a "Founding Father", of DeWitt County after having guided Gonzales County through the transition period from Republic to Statehood. He served as County Judge of DeWitt County from 1850-1852. Later after the Civil Way, in those early trying days, he was appointed by the Provisional Governor to Texas, A.J. Henderson, to again serve as County Judge from 1865-1866 in the Provisional Government of Texas.

When the Bakers came to Texas in 1840, they brought a piano with them, most of the distance by wagon. Later, it was buried in the Guadalupe River bottom land near Hochheim, Texas. This was done to hide it from the Mexican army when the family hurriedly left their home during the "Second Run Away Scrape", and it remained buried for almost two years. It is conceded to be the first piano seen on the west side of the Colorado River.

This spinet had been a cherished possession of the Baker family for a long period of time prior to 1840. A duplicate of this musical instrument, one of the very few built, is in the New York State Museum, Albany, New York. Today it is the property of Mr. Ross Boothe, Jr., of Gonzales, who is the great, great grandson of Judge Baker.

J.M. Baker lived through two generations and was on his way into the third when he died at his family home near Concrete in March, 1882. His public career was quite a success, and he was the typical personification of the grand old southern gentlemen of chivalry and honor.

He and his wife, Martha Jane, were buried on their plantation on a hill overlooking the Guadalupe River, and a beautiful granite tombstone marks the location of their graves.

BAROS, JOHN F. AND PAULINE (HUFF) FAMILY

F31

Sometime in the year of 1870, Michael Baros living in the area of Roznov pod Radhostem Moravia in Czechoslovakia made a decision which would make a drastic change in the life of his family and many generations to come. That decision was to immigrate to the United States of America. This is where Michael, wife Anna and their eight children began their long journey not certain what obstacles may lie ahead. They arrived in Bremen Germany about the 24th of October of the same year. They boarded the ship Frankfurt. After 22 days at sea, where Anna gave birth to their ninth child, Captain J. Barre steamed his ship into the port of New Orleans La. It's difficult to imagine what went through the minds of this family and the other two hundred sixty six Czech immigrants on board, when they had their first sight of their new world.

They made their way to Frelsburg Texas a few miles north of Columbus. In a short time they began their new life in this farming community under what seemed harsh conditions. They were not accustomed to the hot climate found in the general area, nothing like the colder environment of their homeland. Excessive rainfall and flooded streams brought hardship and disease. Tragedy struck on Sept. 4, 1873 when the head of the household Michael passed away, followed by wife Anna on Jan 18, 1874, leaving the nine children to comfort each other and forge for themselves. One of these was John F. Baros. In his early youth he was employed by the saw mills of the local area. When reaching manhood he met and married Pauline Huff, also an immigrant from Prussia which is now Germany. She was the daughter of Fritz and Augusta Huff, arriving in America with her mother, her father being detained by service in the Prussian army, after the conclusion of the Franco-Prussian war. They chose the Bleiberville community in Austin County for their first home, where the first two children, Albena and John Jr. were born.

In the early 1890's they moved to Shiner in Lavaca County. This change came about as Austin and surrounding counties were bearing the brunt of influx of immigrants continuing to arrive from the old world. Also favorable publicity from newspapers such as Colorado Citizen, Columbus Texas Nov. 30 1871, as in part, "picturesque landscape" and "fertility of soil" can not be surpassed, if equaled, by any other in the world. Cotton farming being their main occupation, living on three different farms during their stay of about twenty years. During that time eight of their children were born. They were Frank, Louise, William, Edward, Emilie, Joe, Gus and Anna. They all attended Michna School located in the general area of the lodge hall, Vlastenec SPJST and the Czech Moravian Brethren Church. Dances at the hall were very popular of that era. During their stay in the Shiner area Albena was married to Charles Malina. They continued farming and spent the remaining years of their lives in the area. John Jr. married Emilie Malina and they continued to live on the Malina homestead for most of their lives. He was active in SPJST lodge functions and served as board member at the Shiner Farmers Co-op Gin Assn.

In the year of 1911, John F. and the balance of the family moved to the Westhoff community, DeWitt County Texas. Tragedy struck the same year when their daughter Emilie, age 13, passed away.

Three of their children married members of the Joe Lukas family. Frank to Amalie, Louise to Edward and William to Louise. Farming was the main occupation of these three families. William took some time off to serve his country in US Army in WW I. They all took part in SPJST social and business activities.

The year of 1916 brought about a new adventure, the purchase of a new automobile, a 6 cylinder Buick touring model. This provided ample transportation for families living in other towns to gather for reunions.

Edward married Matilda Orsak, farming their main occupation. They lived in the general area of Yoakum, Petersville and Hochheim, later residing in Victoria Texas. He took some time off to serve in the military in the post WW I era. Their next two sons married into the Jim Simecek family, Joe to Frances and Gus to Vera. Joe and his family started farming in Westhoff, and later moving to the Yorktown general area. After a few years of farming, Gus went into the automobile repair business and continued into semiretirement. They too were SPJST members. Anna married Lee Danish, farming most of their lives. They resided in Shiner, Westhoff, Beeville, Berclair and Goliad. Charlie the first born in Westhoff married Beaulah Heider. He served in the US Army, European theatre of WW II, then continued to live in the Lindenau area. Otto the youngest of all the family married Earline Belitz. After active duty in the US Navy, Pacific theatre in WW II, he lived in the Victoria general area.

Pauline (Huff) Baros passed away July 24, 1935, John F. Baros following her Sept. 18, 1944. They are buried in the Westhoff cemetery with members of their family.

They left behind a legacy of hard work, honesty and a love for family friends and neighbors. They instilled into their offspring the facts concerning the harsh realities of life. Those qualities they possessed will be passed on from generation — to generation — to generation.

THE BASS FAMILY IN DEWITT COUNTY, TEXAS

F33

The earliest Bass that can be identified from family records was my great, great, great, great grandfather, Benjamin Bass (birthdate unknown). His son, John Hix Bass (1763-1850), was born and raised in Brunswick County, Virginia, and later moved to Georgia. At the time of the Civil War my great grandfather, James Arnold Bass (1828-1912), lived in Carrolton, Georgia. He was a cotton broker and owned general merchandise stores in Athens and Rome as well as in Carrolton. A shipload of cotton he had shipped out of Savanah before war broke out was confiscated by the Yankees upon its arrival in New York. At the time of his death in 1912, an attorney in Georgia was still attempting to collect from the U.S. government.

Following the Civil War three of my great grandfather's sons moved to Texas. James Lewis Bass (1864-1941), John McMillan Bass (1871-1937), and my grandfather, Paul Leon Bass (1875-1955) all worked as young men for the Perkins Brothers dry goods chain owned by noted Texas philanthropists, Joe and Sam Perkins.

In 1913 Uncle Jim, Uncle John, and my grandfather quit their jobs with Perkins Brothers and opened a dry goods store in Yoakum. The slogan for the store was 'Just one price, one just prices," and the building for the store survives to this day. The Bass Brothers logo is embedded in the sidewalk in front of the hardware store it now houses. Later that year my grandfather moved to Kenedy where the Bass Brothers had opened another store. His stay there was brief, however, as he found the "low moral standards" of the town not to his liking. He returned to his previous residence of the historic northeast Texas town of Jefferson as Manager of the Perkins store there and later opened his own store. He is buried in the historic Oakwood Cemetery in Jefferson.

In 1920 Uncle John bought the Graves dry goods store in Cuero from John Graves. Family legend has it that Mr. Graves refused to take a check in payment and that Uncle John had to deliver a suitcase full of cash to pay for the store. The store was located in the Graves building on Main Street in Cuero and for more than a decade, until the effects of the great depression were felt in Cuero, was a prosperous enterprise. I have memories as a small child of Uncle John's Pierce Arrow automobile and his fine gun collection. Although Uncle John's daughter, Tennie Mae, was a grown woman when they moved to Cuero and lived there for only a few years before her marriage to W. Scott Robinson of Chicago, she always regarded Cuero as her home town and maintained lifelong friendships in Cuero.

In 1922 my father, F. Myron Bass, Sr. (1901-1986), graduated from Southwestern University and moved to Cuero to work for Uncle John in the Bass Brothers Store. In 1923 he married my mother, Elnora Thomson (1902-1931). She was a teacher in the Cuero schools. My father and mother met while they were students at Southwestern University.

In 1926 my parents built a house on the northwest corner of Clinton and Clayton streets in Cuero. The basic plan for the house came from Holland's Magazine, but my father modified the basic plan to include, among other things, an attached garage, the first such in Cuero. They moved into the house on December 15, and I was born on December 27 in the house which stands today at 702 North Clinton Street.

My mother died in August 1931, and in the summer of 1932 my father traded the house on Clinton Street for some cash and a house at 905 East Morgan Avenue. My grandmother, Ida Mae Thomson (1879-1956), lived in the house with my father and me while I was growing up.

In 1935 the Bass Brothers store in Cuero closed, a victim of the depression. At that time my father opened the Bass Shoe Store in Cuero. He operated the store until 1966 when it was sold. For many years he was a director of the Cuero Federal Savings and Loan. My father lived in Cuero for sixty-four years. Throughout that period he was a dedicated and active member of the First Methodist Church. Following my father's death in June 1986, my aunt, Olivia (Bass) DeVaux moved into the house at 905 East Morgan Avenue.

BASS, ESSIE NAOMI WALKER CROZIER

F3

Essie Naomi (Walker) Crozier Bass was born in Waelder, a small Gonzales County community about 15 miles north of the DeWitt County line, on January 4, 1884, the youngest daughter of Ezekiel Dennis Walker (1854) and Sarah Maleta Chandler (1857-1929). Her grandparents Ezekiel Wesley Walker (1828-1923) and Mary Ann Hopkins (1828-1903) had moved by wagon from their farm in the Pearl River in Simpson County in southern Mississippi to Copperas Creek, a tributary of the Guadalupe River in northeastern Gonzales County in December, 1850. Her Chandler grandparents, Willis Chandler (1811-1897) and Miranda Hildebrand (1818-1888), had moved south in 1851 from their home on the Missouri River where Willis operated the "Maleta," a river freight boat, to western Fayette County near the Gonzales County line.

Guy Crozier and Essie (Walker) Bass, c. 1900.

Ezekiel Wesley's grandparents, Isaac Walker (1721-1807) and Elizabeth Stuart, had immigrated to Maryland from Scotland with a price on his head immediately after the Scottish Rebellion of 1745. Isaac had fought against England while serving under Bonnie Price Charlie. He fought them again as an officer in the Maryland Militia during the American Revolutionary War.

Isaac had a second grandson in Texas during the 1840's, Ezekiel's cousin, Captain Samuel Hamilton Walker, the distinguished Texas Ranger and leader in the Mier Expedition, who designed the Walker Colt revolver. Captain Sam Walker was killed during the Mexican War near Mexico City while leading the advance guard of Rangers to capture Santa Anna at the battle of Huamantla in early October, 1847.

Mary Ann Hopkins' father's family had immigrated from Wales and England first to Maryland like the Walkers, but had done so at an earlier date in the 1660's. By 1812, Mary Ann's father, Samuel Hopkins, was in Georgia having successfully drawn land in an early Georgia land lottery. He enlisted in the Second Regiment of the Georgia Militia during the War of 1812 and fought first the Creek Indians in northern Alabama at the Battle of Talladega (1813) and later the British at Mobile (1814). Mary Ann's brother, Dennis Hopkins, and his family moved from Georgia, first to Mississippi and then with the Walker family on to Gonzales County to establish the community of Hopkinsville.

After returning home from serving as a sergeant in the Texas 17th Infantry during the Red River Campaign, E.W. Walker was elected Justice of the Peace in Waelder in 1866. "Squire" Walker, as he was later called, was reelected to that office every two years for over fifty years, refusing to stand for reelection once he reached the age of ninety. His numerous court and personal journals with daily notations about the Waelder community from 1866 to 1918 are held in the Barker Library at the University of Texas Archives. In the early 1920's Ezekiel was recognized as the oldest Mason in Texas.

E.E. Walker, Ezekiel Wesley's son and Essie's father, was elected Constable for Waelder in 1878 and served the community as a lawman for several years thereafter. During his period of public service, Constable Walker took a Derringer pistol from the boot of a belligerent barroom gunman. He later gave it to his daughter, Essie, who carried it, with appropriate .41 caliber rim fire shells, tightly knotted in a handkerchief in her handbag until she died.

In 1900, Essie married William Guy Crozier whose grandparents, James Allen Crozier (1817-1899) and Nancy Ann Nation (1828-1858) had moved from northern Mississippi, Yalobusha County, to Gonzales County, Texas near Hopkinsville in the early 1850's. Nancy Ann's father, Baalis Nation (1801-1851), and his older brothers, James and Nathaniel, who had earlier fought the British under General Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812 at the Battle of New Orleans, moved together as a large and extended family with the Croziers and their slaves into Gonzales County. James Crozier's son, Robert Baalis Crozier (1848-1910), was too young to serve the Confederate cause, but his oldest brother William was killed in the Battle at Franklin, Tennessee serving in Grandbury's Texas Brigade. William Guy, who was Robert's eldest son, loved his studies, excelled in school and graduated with distinction from San Marcos Academy in 1903. He subsequently taught in one-room schools in several small communities in central Texas before developing terminal consumption and retiring to the Crozier farm near Waelder to die at the young age of 29. The Crozier family still owns and operates the farm. Guy was survived by Essie and their three young daughters, Ima, Ura, and Avis, ages five, four and three.

After Guy's death, Essie with her three young girls moved from the Crozier place to live with her parents who farmed the Walker place adjoining the Crozier farm. Work in Waelder for a young woman, age twenty-four with three young girls, was hard to find in 1908, but Essie found employment first in Waelder with the post office and the local dry goods store and later near Corpus Christi. She moved to Cuero in the early 1920's to work for and later marry the prominent local dry goods clothing store owner, John M. Bass. Essie's family then affectionately referred to her as Mama Bass. Mama and Mr. Bass were both active members of the Cuero Methodist Church

Essie's oldest daughter, Ima, married Robert Sims Wilkinson when Essie and her three daughters were living in Robstown near Corpus Christi. Sims and Ima moved to West Texas, Sanderson, where Sims served as County Judge of Terrell County for many years and where Ima still is the organist at the Presbyterian Church. The Wilkinsons had two sons, Jim, who is retired in Durango, Colorado, and Bobby who is a construction contractor in Florida. Ura married Mack Lester. They reside in Cotulla, Texas, and their son Preston lives nearby.

Essie's youngest daughter Avis married Chester C. Foster shortly after Essie and Avis moved to Cuero to work. Avis had two children, Avis Marie and Billy C., before she received her divorce in 1930. She then returned to Cuero with her two young children to live with her mother and Mr. Bass and to work at Bass Brothers' store. In 1936 while she was still working at Bass Brothers', Avis married Walter Reiffert, Sr. of Cuero. After their return from their honeymoon in Mexico City, they lived at his residence on Reuss Boulevard until Mr. Reiffert died in December, 1941. Avis Marie graduated from Cuero High School in 1945 and Billy C., in 1946. After World War II, Avis was employed as an accountant by Cuero Lumber Company and later, Coppedge Tire Company. She constructed her present home on the Reiffert family property adjoining the Reiffert-Muegge residence that had been moved to Cuero from Indianola after the 1886 hurricane. Avis died in 1989.

Avis' son Billy C. graduated from the University of Texas School of Law in 1959 and has been practicing law in Washington, D.C. since 1961. He has four children, William Crozier, who married Kirsten Westervelt in 1988, Ebba Birgitta, who married John Red Horse in 1985, Eric Lindh, who married Monique Lowery in 1987, and his young daughter Claire Kearney born in 1983.

Avis' daughter Avis Marie married Bill Cochran of Sanderson, Texas in 1949. Shortly thereafter, they moved to Cuero where he was employed by Texas Eastern Transmission Company for whom he continued to work until his retirement from the company's Houston office in 1988. They now reside at their new home on the Reiffert ranch on Verhelle Road near their son Bobby who directs the ranching operation. The Cochran's daughter, Avis Ann, her husband Lovell Blain, a well known rancher and horse breeder, and her three daughters, Avis Lynn, Amanda Rose, and Alexis Ann Bramlette, are residents of Meyersville, Texas. The Cochran's daughter Susan Lynn, her husband Mark Fischer, an oil man formerly of Cuero, and their two children, Scott and Christy, live in Edmond, Oklahoma.

Before Essie's death in Cuero in December, 1972, she selected the family burial site at the Cuero Hillside Cemetery based upon her own personal criteria — there should be members of the Woodman of the World Lodge buried nearby — (she had known some good men in that lodge and wished to have their continued support), there should be no cedar trees near the plot because cedars discolor tombstones, and lastly there should be no neighboring burial sites with artificial plastic flowers because Mama Bass loved real roses. Red rose bushes at the four corners of her burial site are a reminder that Mama often got her way.

BAUER FAMILY

Lawrence A. (Buddy) and Ruby (Coward) Bauer

Anton Bauer (August 22, 1841 in Saxon, Germany-January 25, 1915) immigrated to the United States, and in Indianola, Texas, met and married Catherine Kessler (November 18, 1847-November 23, 1907). On January 25, 1888, Lawrence Alexander (Buddy) Bauer was born.

On April 6, 1888 in Sealy, Texas, Ruby Ann Coward was born to Willis B. Coward and Elba Thomas Coward.

Buddy Bauer met and married Ruby Coward in 1911 in Galveston, Texas. On November 13, 1912 their first and only daughter, Elbie, was born. The first son to be born on December 4, 1913 was Lawrence Alexander Bauer, Jr. (nicknamed Bill). After the bad storm of 1917 hit Galveston, Buddy and Ruby took their family and left Galveston and moved to Cuero. During his first years in Cuero, Buddy worked as a druggist in one of the local drug stores.

On September 11, 1922, the second of their four sons, Kenneth Anton was born; on July 6, 1924, John Davis was born; and the last of their family, Garlan L. was born on April 3, 1926.

After his days as a druggist, Buddy bought the Sinclair Agency and delivered gasoline to the local filling stations using cans similar to the old milk cans. After getting out of the gasoline business, he worked for Southern Pacific Transport for a number of years, and then became a rancher.

Their first son, Kenneth (see business – Bauer Produce) preceded his parents in death due to a drowning accident on February 21, 1958, when he was 35. Buddy and Ruby owned property off of the new San Antonio River Bridge. During early flooding stages as the Guadalupe River began to rise, Kenneth took out on horseback to round up some cattle. After a while, his horse returned to the house without him. After a search in boats, his body was found, and laid to rest in Hillside Cemetery in Cuero.

Lawrence Alexander Bauer, Sr. (nicknamed Buddy) died on November 28, 1964, at the age of 76, after having lived in Cuero for 47 years. He was buried along with his son in Hillside Cemetery in Cuero.

The only daughter, Elbie Gaida (married name), died of cancer on April 14, 1969, at the age of 56. A year later Ruby Ann Coward Bauer died on June 4, 1970 at the age of 82, leaving behind her remaining three sons. Both Ruby and her daughter were buried in Hillside Cemetery in Cuero.

Bill Bauer remained in Cuero, and died on July 12, 1984 at the age of 70. He is also buried in Hillside Cemetery in Cuero. The remaining two sons, John Davis Bauer, Sr. (see his story) and Garlan L. Bauer are still living in Cuero.

Marsha was born on October 3, 1960 in Gonzales, Texas, the youngest of three children born to Sterling Boothe Morrow and Norma Jean Koenig Morrow (see their story). She was delivered by Dr. Walter Sievers at the Holmes Memorial Hospital.

Marsha's early childhood days and first few years of school were in San Antonio, until the family moved to Houston in 1968. There she attended Spring Branch Schools until 1972, at which time the family moved to Cuero. In Cuero she attended Cuero Junior High School, and graduated from Cuero High School in 1978.

Following Chuck and Marsha's wedding, three weeks after her graduation, she worked for her parents at Morrow Fence & Hardware and The Decor Shoppe until October 1978. At that time she started a career in banking that would last for nine years. Periodically, during that time, she attended Victoria College.

BAUER, FRED C. AND MATILDA (EHRENBERG)

F38

Fred Christian Bauer was born in Prussia 30 August 1818. He married Matilda Ehrenberg in 1846. Her maiden name may have been Ehrenberg or Ehrenbrecht. She was born 22 September 1821 in Landsberg on the Warte, Prussia, and died 21 September 1917 in Yorktown, at the age of 96 years.

Fred C. and Matilda Bauer and their two daughters, Anna and Bertha, immigrated to Yorktown from Prussia in 1853. He was a saddler. He was a charter member of Yorktown when it was laid out. The town was incorporated in 1871 and Fred Bauer was one of the aldermen appointed by Gov. E.J. Davis. He served as a Lieutenant in Capt. Eckhardt's Homeguard Company during the Civil War. For 22 years Mr. Bauer owned a saddle shop in Yorktown, moving to Oakville, Live Oak County, Texas in 1876. He died there in 1833. Mrs. Bauer lived either in Beeville, Bee County, Texas or in Yorktown with one of her children after his death.

Their first daughter, Anna, was born 16 October 1847 in Prussia and died 15 February 1918 in Yorktown. She married Franz Gips 14 July 1872 in Yorktown. They had seven children. (See separate story.) The second daughter of Fred and Anna Bauer, Bertha, was born about 1850. She did not marry, and we were unable to trace her. After Fred and Matilda arrived in Texas, a son, Paul, and another daughter, Amelia, were born. Paul was born in Yorktown 30 October 1855 and died in Beeville 28 October 1934. He married Carrie Reagan 12 February 1878 and they had five children. The 1880 Texas Census for Live Oak County shows a daughter, Amelia, 12, but we were unable to gather information about her. We found a cemetery lot in Oakville with the headstone showing only Bauers - no dates. Perhaps Fred Bauer and his daughters are buried there.

BELL, JOHN J.

F43

John Junior Bell, member of a prominent pioneer Texas Family, was born May 15, 1910, in Cuero, Texas, at the home of his maternal grandparents, Victor J. and Augusta Keller Grunder. This home, located at 409 East Morgan Street, has been designated as an historical site by the Texas Historical Commission.

He was the eldest son of John York and Gertrude Grunder Bell. His paternal ancestors were early ranchers in the DeWitt County area, his family having lived in Texas since before the Texas Revolution in 1836. He was a direct descendant of James Madison Bell and Captain John York, both of whom participated in the Texas Revolution. His great grandfather, James Madison Bell, was a combatant in the storming of San Antonio and fought with the Texian army at the Battle of San Jacinto. His great grandmother was a daughter of Captain John York founder of the city of Yorktown in DeWitt County. He was also a direct descendant of Josiah Bartlett, governor of the state of New Hampshire and a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

His maternal ancestors were early settlers of

John Junior Bell

Mabel Claire (Breeden) Bell

the ill-fated seaport town of Indianola in Calhoun County, Texas. His great grandfather was a Confederate veteran. Following the storm of 1875, in which Indianola was washed away, the family moved to Cuero, where they later became engaged in the cotton compressing business.

John J. Bell was educated in the public schools of Cuero and was valedictorian of his high school graduating class. He received the Bachelor of Arts degree in government and economics from the University of Texas at Austin in 1932, and the L.L.B. degree from the same university in 1936. While attending the University Law School, he was a member of the University teaching staff, a member of the debating society, and of the Phi Beta Kappa honor society. He was president of the Student Assembly, and held memberships in the Pi

Kappa Alpha fraternity, Delta Sigma Rho, the Texas Cowboys, and the Friar Society. In the 1935 Cactus, yearbook of the University, he was described as "An Outstanding Senior. A leader of men and a speaker of great ability, John Bell has been the ideal Student President."

Upon graduation from law school, John Bell was elected to the Texas Legislature in 1936, serving in the House of Representatives from 1937 to 1944, when he waived his legislative draft immunity to enlist as a private in the United States Army during World War II. While he was still in the military service, the people of his legislative district again placed his name on the ballot and reelected him to the House of Representatives. He was honorably discharged from the Army in 1945, and returned to the Legislature, serving as a Representative until 1947, when he was elected to the Texas Senate.

On December 29, 1948, he married Miss Mabel Claire Breeden, daughter of Charles Goodwin Breeden, a prominent South Texas merchant.

During his years in the Texas Legislature, John J. Bell served on many important committees. A recognized authority on water law, he was a leader in establishing the water conservation program in Texas, initiating the plan which resulted in establishment of the Texas Water Development Council. In 1949, as a State Senator, he called for an amendment to the United States Constitution repudiating the federal claim to the Texas tidelands.

He was also the author of an amendment to the State Constitution which resulted in a reduction of the state ad valorem tax for general fund purposes. He was a leader in bringing the Rural Electric Cooperative to DeWitt County and served as attorney for the DeWitt County Electric Cooperative from the time of its inception until his election to Congress.

On February 12, 1963, the Texas House of Representatives unanimously passed a resolution in Bell's memory: "In Memory of the Honorable John J. Bell, who has served here with distinction; and in respect of John J. Bell and to pay tribute to this outstanding statesman, the House adjourn this day in respect of John J. Bell as a token of our esteem and respect.

On January 30, 1963, a unanimous resolution was passed by the Texas Senate: "To recognize the manifold contributions of John J. Bell and to express its sympathy, a page of the Senate Journal on this day be set aside in his memory and the Senate adjourn in his honor."

In 1954 Bell was elected to the Eighty-Fourth United States Congress from the Fourteenth Congressional District, where he served from 1955 to 1957. In the Congress he continued his efforts in the areas of water conservation and agriculture. He was also active in a variety of projects ranging from small watershed developments, post offices, and radar stations to multimillion dollar dam and bridge construction appropriations.

On January 28, 1963, former United States Representative Bell was eulogized on the floor of the House, with the Congressional Record of that day including these statements: "During the time John Bell served here, he made many friends. Every Member seemed to respect him. and all admired his courage and his statesmanship. He always put the welfare of his country ahead of all other considerations and never faltered in his sincere efforts to serve his district and his country well. By so doing he

John bell was admitted to the State Bar of Texas upon his graduation in 1936 and was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States in 1955. He was a general practice attorney, specializing in corporate, probate, administrative law, and litigation. He was a member of the DeWitt County Bar Association, Texas Bar Association, American Bar Association, and the American Judicature Society. In 1948, and again in 1952, he was a delegate to the Democratic Convention.

Following in his family tradition, Bell was president of the Victoria Compress and Warehouse Company, the Shiner Compress and Warehouse Company, the Cuero Compress and Warehouse Company, and the Taft Compress Company.

He was a member of St. Michael's Catholic Church in Cuero and the Knight of Columbus. He was a charter member of the Cuero Lions Club, and a member of the American Legion, Herman Sons Lodge, the Ex-Students Association of The University of Texas, Texas State Society of Washington D.C., and the Texas Cotton Association. He held honorary memberships in the George Washington Memorial Battalion, was a Director of the Texas Safety Council, Sultan of the Cuero Turkey Trot in 1936, and Honorary State Farmer of the Future Farmers of America in 1955. His hobbies were hunting and fishing.

John Bell has been listed in Who's Who in America, Who's Who in the South and Southwest, The Congressional Directory, 84th Congress, Campbell's List, The National Cyclopedia of American Biography, Texas Bar Journal of March 22, 1963, and the Biographical Directory of the American Congress.

John Bell died at his home in Cuero following a heart attack on January 24, 1963. He is interred at Hillside Cemetery in Cuero, Texas.

James Madison Bell came to Texas from Tennessee with his parents and brothers and sisters in January 1834. James served in the army during the revolution under Captain John York. He married Miriam York, the daughter of Captain York and moved to DeWitt County in 1846. They had two daughters, Sarah Jane Bell and Julia Bell, and two sons, John York Bell and James Robert Bell. In 1848 a group of volunteer soldiers which included Captain John York and James Madison Bell surprised a band of Indians raiding near Yorktown. Bell, owned 177 acres in Austin County, Texas, near San Felipe on East side of the Brazos River. Today it would be Waller County. Wm. G. Bell was the oldest son of James H. Bell and Wincy (Bird?) and the brother of James C. Bell who married Fannie Busby. Wm. G. Bell enlisted in the Confederate army in Clinton, Texas in 1861, under Capt. Josiah Taylor, Jr. It looks as though he left the State under General Hamilton Bee and was in the awful battles in Louisiana where so many Texas cavalry men died. Wm. G. Bell's widow remarried in 1865 to Alvan Carter Walker who was dead by 1870.

Permelia Jane's sisters and brothers were: 1. Thomas Jefferson Bell who was born in 1853. He married Missouri V. Walker in Fayette County, Texas, in 1875. 2. We feel that Permelia Jane was close to her siblings and her half-siblings because she named her children after them.

BENBOW FAMILY

David Harrison Benbow and Ruth (Morrow), 1903

The Benbows who now live in DeWitt County are descended from two Benbow brothers who came to America as boys, from Wales, in the year 1718. They first landed in Pennsylvania. After serving their apprenticeships, they headed south to the Carolina colonies. The DeWitt Benbows went to what is now South Carolina between 1725 and 1750. They moved to Alabama territory which was newly opened. They served in the militia during the Indian Wars that were fought to win the territory.

James Benbow and his wife, Nancy, were married in early winter, 1839. They had two sons, James Richard, born in 1844 and George Washington, born in 1850. Their father died about 1850, leaving Nancy a young widow with two small sons. After his death she married William Pierson and came to Texas, to the Stratton community, about 1860.

James Richard enlisted in the Confederate Army. He returned after 1865 and began to acquire substantial holdings in DeWitt County. Much remains in the hands of descendants today.

After the Civil War, George Washington Benbow became one of the most skillful horsemen in the county. He was one of the trail riders who drove herds up the Chisholm Trail to Abilene and Kansas. After several trail drives, George married a young widow, Frances Elizabeth Cudd. They settled in the Stratton community where he farmed and ranched, and around 1890 he operated and owned a gin. He and Fannie had eleven children, one of whom, Mrs. Ima Hilburn, survives to this day.

David Harrison Benbow (Man) was born in Stratton in 1878. He married Ruth Morrow in 1903. They had five children — Alta Belle, Lee Coffery, Gertrude, Alex Boyd and George Morrow.

Man Benbow and Ruth Morrow both attended the Nash Academy.

Alta Belle married Frank Hallon and Gertrude married Arlin Borrom. Both are deceased. Man and Ruth Benbow are buried in the Alexander cemetery.

F47

Lee C. and Mary Ann Benbow

Lee and Mary Benbow, March 30, 1930, wedding photo.

Lee Benbow was born April 11, 1907 in the Stratton Community, the eldest son of D.H. Benbow and Ruth (Morrow) Benbow. Lee attended Stratton school, also, Baldwin's Business College. He served in World War II and was overseas 14 months. He retired from Mobil Oil.

Mary Ann was born in Victoria, Texas, October 5, 1913 to Sam DuBose and Dicey Ann Parker DuBose. When a small child they moved to Bay City, Texas where her father died during the flu epidemic of World War I. They later moved to Stratton where her mother cared for the elderly parents.

Lee and Mary Ann met at the Stratton School when she was nine years of age. Years later they were sweethearts and were married March 29, 1930 in a Baptist Church in Yoakum, Texas and have been of that faith all their lives.

Lee and Mary Ann's daughter, Jo Ann, born Feb. 5, 1949 resides in Austin Texas. She has two children: 1) Clay Thomas, born Nov. 7, 1970 and 2) LeAnn Davis, born Feb. 16, 1976.

Mary Ann's mother, Dicy Ann Parker, married Sam DuBose in Cuero, Texas in 1904. She was left a widow with three children. Besides Mary Ann, there were Suda and Farris DuBose. Suda passed away Oct. 8, 1981 and Farris Jan. 20, 1990. Dicy Jennings, 1886-1985, lacked four months reaching the age of 100 years.

Dicy DuBose later married Almer Jennings, a Church of Christ minister. To this union a son, Edwin Parker Jennings, was born. He had a daughter, Victoria Ann and a son, Edwin Parker Jennings, Jr. who are both deceased. Edwin P. Jennings resides in Florida.

Dicy's parent, William James (Bill) Parker, was born November 7, 1849 and died in 1933. He was from Macon, Georgia. He came to Texas with his mother, Dicy Parker, a sister Sara, and his twin brother Henry. In Georgia they owned a plantation with slaves. After the Civil War they decided to leave all their possessions behind as their slaves had been freed. They came to Texas for Bill's health. He had studied medicine to become a doctor, but due to his health didn't finish. The Yankees destroyed most of their buildings and took their food. After coming to Texas, he went on the Chisholm Cattle Drive to Kansas.

Mary Clay Jeffery was born in Searcy, Arkansas on Nov. 21, 1852 and died in 1938. She was also in the Civil War zone. The enemy took over their house, made her cook for them and when they left they took their barrels of flour and molasses and cut open their feather beds and let the feathers fly. She later married Bill Parker.

Her uncle, G.A. Crossen, had come to Texas earlier for a land grant. He had written such glowing things about Texas, that he sent for his sister, Martha Jeffery and her children, Mary Clay and Marion. They boarded a boat on the Mississippi River, came to New Orleans, Louisiana and on to Old Indianola and from there to Crossenville by ox cart. Her uncle had a store and a school at Crossenville.

Bill Parker and Mary Clay Jeffery were married Nov. 1876. To this union were born six children: 1) Edward, 2) Champ, 3) Harriet, 4) Anna, 5) Dicy and 6) Mary Agnes. All are buried at the Alexander Cemetery except Mary Agnes who is buried in Houston and Anna is buried at Burns' Station Cemetery in DeWitt County. After Bill and Mary were married they settled on a homestead in the Chicolete Community. They built a log cabin which had a fireplace where they cooked. Having no bedstead, they made shuck and feather mattresses placed on saplings laced together with rope.

Suda, 1906-1981, eldest daughter of Dicy Jennings, has a daughter Alva Sue Bridge, who resides in Louisville, Kentucky. Sue married Sam Bridge and they have a son, John.

Lee and Mary Ann have celebrated their 25th, 50th and, the Lord willing, will celebrate their 60th wedding anniversary in 1990.

BENNET, MILES DUDLEY AND BEULAH BELL BLACKWELL

F48

Miles Dudley Bennet

Beulah Bell (Blackwell) Bennet

1938, Beulah (Bennet) McDougal

Dudley and Beulah Bennet lived their entire lives in DeWitt County. Their parents were Texas pioneers who had the urge and the will to gain freedom against great odds and to enjoy the blessings of individual liberty.

Dudley Bennet, born December 31, 1864, was the son of Miles Squier and Bathsheba Gipson Bennet. (See Miles and Bathsheba Bennet story.) He was born in Gonzales where his mother and siblings were residing during the Civil War, as his father was away with the Confederate forces at Galveston. Dudley was reared at Valentinook, the name of the family ranch which was granted to his grandfather, Valentine Bennet, by the Empresario Green DeWitt in 1831. Valentinook is located ten miles from Cuero up the Guadalupe River, and was inherited by Miles S. Bennet from his father. When Miles died in 1903, he left Dudley all but two hundred acres of the ranch, and later Dudley acquired the remaining acreage. Today the Bennet Ranch, Valentinook, is owned by Dudley's descendants.

Dudley was educated at the Nash Academy in Cuero, and later he started his own ranching business. He held the position of "cattle buyer with the Houston Packing Company of Houston, Texas, for thirty five years. He traveled by railroad to the important ranches in south Texas to purchase cattle. In 1912, Dudley was installed as Ruling Elder in the First Presbyterian Church in Cuero, which was the outgrowth of the Live Oak Church that his mother and father had helped organize in 1849. In 1927, he represented the local Presbytery at the meeting of the General Assembly held in El Dorado, Arkansas. This was seventy-five years after Miles Squier had attended General Assembly in 1852 at Charleston, South Carolina. So it came to pass, that father and son for four score and six years served the Presbyterian Church and Presbytery most efficiently and devotedly as Ruling Elders.

On February 8, 1911, Dudley Bennet married Beulah Bell Blackwell. His brother, Valentine, had married Zorah Blackwell earlier. Thus, two Bennet brothers married two Blackwell sisters, which was not unusual at this time. Beulah Blackwell, born February 8, 1876, was the youngest child of John Harland and Sarah Allison Baker Blackwell. (See John Harland Blackwell and James McCulloch Baker stories.) Prior to her marriage, Beulah lived with her father at their family home near Hochheim. She attended Concrete College and later Cornell Institute in San Marcos.

Beulah and Dudley's courtship lasted fifteen years before they were married at her family home near Hochheim in 1911. They moved to Cuero in 1912, where they participated in church and civic activities. He had the honor of being selected the "Grand Marshall" of the first Turkey Trot parade in 1912. In 1924, Dudley built a two story, brick home for Beulah, and today it is listed in the National Register of Historic Places. The Bennets were married thirty-one years before their deaths in Cuero. Dudley died May 3, 1942, and Beulah died November 13, 1950. Both funeral services were held from the home that they loved.

The Dudley Bennets had two daughters, Sarah Claire and Beulah Margaret.

Sarah Claire was born in Cuero July 21, 1914. She attended Gulf Park College in Gulfport, Mississippi and the University of Texas in Austin. She married Arlton George Hermann, Jr. in 1935, and they lived in Yoakum. They had one son, Arthur George Hermann, III, who was born October 22, 1943. Claire developed a serious heart condition, and died in Yoakum February 19, 1954, at the age of thirty-nine. She was buried in Cuero Hillside Cemetery.

Arthur George Hermann, III graduated from St. Edwards University in Austin. He married Janis Rohan, daughter of A.J. and Fay Rohan in Yoakum. She graduated from Southwest Texas State University, and taught in elementary school a few years before she married. Today she serves as Treasurer of St. Joseph Catholic School P.L.C., and is a counselor for the Juniorettes. Arthur is a Director and Chairman of the Board of the First State Bank of Yoakum. He is a member of the Economic Development Board and the Finance Committee of St. Joseph Church. He is a board member of Yoakum Community Hospital. The Hermanns have two children: Claire Christine, born March 8, 1978, and Clay Bennet, born May 12, 1983.

Beulah Margaret Bennet was born in Cuero, May 31, 1918. She graduated from Gulf Park College in Gulfport, Mississippi in 1937 and the University of Texas in 1939, where she was a member of Delta, Delta, Delta sorority. In 1938, Beulah was selected to be Sultana Oreuc of the Cuero Turkey Trot. Dr. James E. Pridgen was selected to be the Sultan Yekrut. She is an Elder in the Presbyterian Church as were her father and grandfather. Beulah is a member of the DeWitt County Historical Commission, the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the Daughters of the Republic of Texas. In 1940, Beulah married Fain McDougal, and two sons, Fain, Jr. and Dudley Bennet were born to this union. (See Fain McDougal story.)

BENNET, MILES SQUIER

F49

Miles Squier Bennet

Bathsheba (Gipson) Bennet

Miles Squier Bennet came to Texas with his father Major Valentine Bennet in 1838, when he was twenty years old. Upon their arrival in Galveston, they were greeted by the famous Captain Moseley Baker with these words, "Well, Major, I see that you have brought another rifle for Texas." This was a time in Texas when rifles really counted. In the coming years, Miles was to fight Indians, take part in the Battle of Cibolo, the Woll campaign, Battle of Salado, and in the Somerville campaign. These campaigns took place in 1842, when Texas was a republic. Later he served as a Confederate soldier fighting against his own Yankee "kith and kin."

Miles was born December 14, 1818, in Buffalo, New York. He came of the same racial strain as the Austins, who were well known to his parents, all being New Englanders. His parents were Valentine and Mary Kibbe Bennet. In 1820, Miles and his twin sisters, Sarah Jane and Mary Jane, migrated with their parents, Valentine and Mary, and their grandfather, Gaius Kibbe, to Attakapas, Louisiana. A large number of Gaius Kibbe's sons, daughters, and grandchildren went with him to this new country. Miles' mother and little sister, Mary Jane, died October 14, 1821, soon after the Kibbes reached Louisiana. Valentine took young Miles and Sarah Jane to Cincinnati, Ohio, where they spent most of their childhood with relatives. Valentine migrated to Texas to seek a home in the new land of his old friend, Stephen F. Austin. He had been in Texas a short time when the Texas Revolution began. Miles joined his father after the Texas Revolution was over and served with him in many of the campaigns that followed in 1842.

In that same year, Valentine and Miles went to Cincinnati, Ohio. They brought Miles' sister, Sarah Jane, to Gonzales, Texas. Here she met and married Thomas J. Pilgrim, who historians say established the first Sunday School in Texas.

Miles married Bathsheba Gipson February 20, 1845, in Montgomery County in the home of her parents, James and Sarah Gipson. The Gipsons came to Texas from Kentucky in 1839, and made many contributions to the early days in Texas. Soon after their marriage, Miles brought Bathsheba to the log cabin he had built at Valentinook on the Guadalupe River. Valentinook is the name of the land that Valentine acquired from Green DeWitt when he joined his colony in 1831. Miles and Bathsheba lived at Valentinook their entire married life of fifty-eight years. To this union, the following eight children were born: Sarah Kibbe, Mary Gipson, Samuel Davis, Anna, Valentine, Arabella, Robert Mills, and Miles

It was not long after Texas won her independence and became a Republic and later a state, that a group of pioneer Christians gathered under a live oak tree on the plantation of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Peebles. The Peebles plantation on the west bank of the Guadalupe River was very near the home of Miles and Bathsheba. On July 8, 1849, the Live Oak Church was organized, and Miles and Bathsheba were charter members. James Norman Smith and Miles Souier Bennet were elected the first elders of this church, which was later to become the Cuero Presbyterian Church. Samuel Davis Bennet, the three month old baby son of Miles and Bathsheba, was the first child baptized in the Live Oak Church. In 1851, the Presbytery was organized at Victoria, and Miles was present as a charter member. He served the Presbyterian Church in DeWitt County faithfully for fifty-four years. He and his only surviving son, Miles Dudley Bennet, served the church and Presbytery devotedly as ruling elders.

Miles kept a "journal" which has valuable historic information on the pioneer days of Texas, beginning in 1838. He also wrote his memoirs of important people and events of DeWitt County for the following newspapers, The Cuero Star and The Gonzales Inquirer. The journal is a most respected and prized possession of his granddaughter, Beulah Bennet McDougal.

Bathsheba died at the home of her daughter, Mary, in Houston, June 3, 1901. Miles died at his beloved Valentinook May 3, 1903. Both are buried at Hillside Cemetery in Cuero. The inscription on his tombstone reads:

Wolls Campaign, Battle at Salado, Battle of Galveston

50 years Ruling Elder in Presbyterian Church

DeWitt County Soldier, Patriot, Christian He served his country and his God faithfully.

BENNET, SAMUEL D. AND JOSEPHINE (McRAE)

F50

Samuel Davis Bennet (1849-1913), partner in Bennet Brothers, Cattle Buyers, DeWitt County. Went up Chisholm Trail twice with own herd.

Samuel Davis Bennet (called Sam) was born on 17 March 1849, the eldest son of Miles S. and Bathsheba (Gipson) Bennet of Valentinook, DeWitt County. He was the first baby to be baptized at the Live Oak Presbyterian Church when it was organized at the Peebles Ranch in 1849, and he also was one of the first students to attend Concrete College when it was founded in 1865. He graduated in 1869 and became engaged in the freight business, hauling merchants' goods in an ox-drawn wagon from the port at Indianola to San Antonio. On the way back, he would stop at his father's farm-ranch on the Guadalupe to load barrels of honey, beeswax and butter for market at Indianola. During the spring rains, it would require weeks to make the round trip, the muddy roads slowing the oxen used to draw the heavy wagons.

After the first year, Sam gave up merchandising and entered the cattle business, buying, selling and dealing in cattle over South Texas. He also filed his own cattle mark in the DeWitt County Brand Book. In 1879, Sam and his brothers, Robert and Valentine II (called Vol) formed Bennet Brothers Cattle Buyers with offices in the new village of Cuero which was growing up beside the recently arrived railroad track being built from the coast to San Antonio. On one of his cattle buying trips, Sam met Josephine Alice McRae of Lamar. They were married on 4 April 1883.

Josephine A. McRae (called Josie) was born on 2 October 1862, the eldest of nine daughters of Murdoch W. and Mary Ellen (Heard) McRae of Lamar, Aransas County, Texas. Her grandfather, Archibald McRae (1792-1851) brought his family to Texas from Florida in 1838 and was the second settler at Lamar on Arkansas Bay. He was the son of Colin McRae, who had emigrated from Kintail, Ross-shire, Scotland to North Carolina in 1774. Archibald McRae owned the three-masted schooner, the Belle of Lamar, and engaged in the coastal trade. This ship was sunk by Yankee shells when Lamar was raided by Union forces in February, 1862.

Archibald's son, Murdoch McRae (1832-1889), Josie's father, enlisted in May, 1862 in Maj. Alfred Hobby's Regiment (later part of the 8th Texas Infantry), but because of his sailing knowledge, he was detached to become the captain of a Confederate supply ship plying between Bolivar's Point and Galveston. After the war, Murdoch established a ship yard on the McRae homestead premises at Lamar, hired employees, and under contract with the U.S. Government built sailing vessels to be used by customs officials. There was no Protestant church at Lamar, and it was in the McRae home in 1869 that the Lamar Presbyterian Church was organized. Murdoch was elected the first Elder and Superintendent of the Sunday School.

Josie and Sam were married in the McRae home, after which he took his bride to Valentinook to live. When the rolls of Live Oak and Concrete churches were merged to form the First Presbyterian Church of Cuero on 5 May 1883, Sam, as a member of the Concrete church, became a charter member. Josie later transferred her membership from the Lamar church.

In April, 1884, Bennet Brothers Cattle Buyers gathered a herd for themselves and Sam and Vol took it up the Chisholm Trail to Dodge City on the drive headed by John Wofford. Arthur Burns was the Trail Boss. When they returned, Sam kept two mementos which are still in the family: an iron bean pot from the chuck wagon and a set of cowbells worn by his cattle. Sam made a second trip up the trail the next year, and his participation in the drives makes his descendants eligible for membership in the Old Chisholm Trail Drivers Association.

Sam and Josie moved to the Phillips Ranch at Nursery in 1884 to manage it for his widowed sister, Mrs. Mary (Bennet) Phillips of Victoria (later Mrs. Max Urwitz of Houston). A neighbor, Gilbert Onderdon, owner of the celebrated Mission Valley Nurseries and pioneer botanist, furnished Josie with trees and shrubs to plant around her new home, and Sam developed the place into a model farm-ranch. It was called a show place by Carey Pilgrim, Editor of the Gonzales Inquirer.

The Bennets lived at Nursery until 1877 when Sam became ill and they returned to Valentinook until he recovered. He then went back into the cattle business. An item in the Cuero Record in 1895 stated, "A big cattle deal was consummated in Cuero yesterday wherein Bennet Brothers closed out their stock of steers of some five thousand at a good price. The buyers were Kennerly and Pumphrey of Fort Worth and Green and Flato of Shiner."

Three generations L-R Mrs. Murdoch McRae (Mary Ann Heard), Mary (McRae) Bennet, Nelle Bennet and Mrs. Sam Bennett (Josephine McRae), ca. 1900.

In 1897, Sam bought a ranch on the Guadalupe River in the old Hunt league which adjoined Valentinook. He built a home Josie named Oak Hill, and they resided there until 1904 when they moved into Cuero so that their daughters could attend Nash's Academy. Sam died in Cuero in 1913, and Josie died there in 1950. Both are buried in Hillside Cemetery.

Mrs. Josephine (McRae) Bennet was a member of Colonial Dames of the XVII Century, Daughters of the American Revolution, U.S. Daughters of 1812, Daughters of the Republic of Texas, and Daughters of the Confederacy. She was active in the Cuero Presbyterian Church for over fifty years. She and Sam were the parents of five children, but three died in infancy. The survivors were Mary McRae (called Rae) Bennet (1880-1970) and Nelle B. Bennet (1892-1986) who married in 1917 Ernest Barnaba Meynard (1890-1978) of Charenton, La. Mr. Meynard was agent in Cuero for the Southern Pacific Railroad for 48 years, from 1911 until his retirement in 1955. Their story is given separately.

BENNET, VALENTINE F51

It is indeed a cherished privilege to write the historical life story and accomplishments of my great grandfather, Valentine Bennet. He came to Texas in 1825 and became a colonizer with the Empresario Green DeWitt in 1831 when Texas was still a province of Mexico. As a soldier and patriot, he fought for Texas independence and was dedicated to the preservation of freedom and individual liberty which is truly our Texas heritage.

Valentine, born in Massachusetts in 1780, was a Puritan by birth and education. As a youth, he became a soldier in the War of 1812. He fought in the battle of Lundy's Lane in 1814, and was promoted on the battlefield for gallantry. He married Mary Kibbe October 7, 1817, in Buffalo, New York. Mary Kibbe was the daughter of Gaius and Mary (Polly) Pease of Enfield, Connecticut.

To Valentine and Mary were born twin daughters, Sarah Jane and Mary Jane, and one son, Miles Squier. Gaius Kibbe, Mary's father, secured a grant of land in Attakapos, Louisiana in 1820, and induced his large family of sons, daughters, and grandchildren to accompany him to that new country in St. Mary Parish. Their journey to Louisiana was very difficult, and acclimating fever attacked them and many died. Mary Kibbe Bennet and one of the twin daughters, Mary Jane, died October 4, 1821. The Kibbes, the Dudleys, and the Bennet families came from the survivors of this expedition.

Valentine moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he left Miles and Sarah Jane with relatives and went to the new land of Texas, where he settled at Velasco in 1825. He joined the Empresario Green DeWitt's colony in Gonzales in 1831. when he was granted land that still is owned by his descendants. In 1832, he took a leading part in the battle of Velasco and was severely wounded in the face and hip. On October 2, 1835, Valentine was one of the eighteen men who fought to defend the cannon at Gonzales in the "Come and Take It" battle, known as the Lexington of Texas.

When the Gonzales militia was organized, Bennet was elected lieutenant and from that time on was in the thick of the Texas Revolution. He participated in the battle of Concepcion and the siege of Bexar in December, 1835. He held the rank of assistant quartermaster and received honorable mention from General Edward Burleson for efficiency in keeping the army well supplied. Later, as quartermaster of the Texas Army, he was kept busy supplying beef for Sam Houston's increasing forces as he retreated from Gonzales to the battlegrounds of San Jacinto. After the battle of San Jacinto, Bennet remained with the Texas Army and early in 1838, after a three-month furlough, brought his son, Miles S. Bennet, back to Texas with him. On December 25, 1838, he brought his daughter, Sarah, to live in his home in Gonzales.

In 1841, Bennet was commissioned a major in the quartermaster's department of the Texas Army and was sent on the Texas Santa Fe Expedition. Among the other Santa Fe prisoners he suffered many indignities and cruelties at the hands of his Mexican guards. In August, 1842, the prisoners were released, and Bennet returned to Texas. He reentered the Texas Army when General Adrian Woll invaded Texas and subsequently engaged in the Somervell

A short time before his death he was called before a group of officials who were arguing about what was the official uniform of the Texas Revolution. The question was asked, "Major Bennet, you have probably seen more different commands of the Texas Army and have known them under more different circumstances than any other man in Texas, what was the official uniform of the soldiers of the Texas Revolution?" Bennet's reply was, "Rags, sir, just rags; nine out of every ten soldiers who fought in the Texas Revolution wore this same uniform, and sir, it was a fighting uniform.'

Valentine died at his home in Gonzales July 23, 1843, and his son, Miles Squier, erected a beautiful monument to mark his grave in the cemetery at Gonzales.

Major Bennet is duly honored and well remembered for his military service for Texas Independence as found in Texas State Archives, University of Texas, Austin.

BIALEK, ADOLPH D. AND ALBINA FAMILY

Adolph D. Bialek was born in Edna, Texas, on June 10, 1869, the son of Frank (b. September 4, 1825, d. September 7, 1893) and Mary M. Bialek (b. July, 1833, d. December 7, 1908). In June, 1907, he married Albina Shulak (b. April 10, 1879), the daughter of Joe (b. January 19, 1838, d. October 1, 1910) and Rosie Shulak (b. 1843, d. August 12, 1927), of Shiner, Texas. The Bialeks were Jackson County farmers, having originally owned the tract of land where the City of Edna now stands. The Shulaks were large cotton farmers in Lavaca County, at one time farming as much as 1500 acres. Their grandchildren remember that they kept two white horses used only for pulling their buggy to Sunday Mass in Shiner.

Adolph and Albina purchased land and settled at Stratton. In 1918 they sold this property and bought part of the present ranch on the Victoria Prairie. Adolph died April 28, 1926, leaving his widow with a houseful of young children. In 1935 his widow bought adjoining property from Mr. Otto F. Hartman.

In their nineteen years of marriage the Bialeks had eight children: Twins Ida Pesek and Eva Najvar, Maggie Huehlefeld, Frank J. Bialek, Joe E. Bialek, Rosemary Berger, Carrie Bialek, and Adolph Bialek. The older children first attended school at Stratton and then at Fordtran. They drove to the Fordtran school in a buggy with a two-horse team. Later the younger children attended school in Thomaston. Ida and Maggie moved to Cuero where they took an apartment in Mr. Graham's house across from St. Michael's Catholic Church and went to work in Czerny's clothing factory upstairs over Flick's at Esplanade and Church. In 1929 the widow Bialek bought a house next to Burns Hospital in Cuero and the younger children completed school at St. Michael's School.

Both Frank and Joe saw service in the U.S. Army during the Second World War, Frank as a TEC 4 in the 429th Field Artillery and Joe as an Army Sergeant. Mrs. Bialek died in 1948 and thereafter Ida Pesek, by then a widow, Joe Bialek, and Carrie Bialek acquired the ranch and made their home there. During Joe's lifetime they raised registered Brahman cattle, having acquired their original stock some fifty years ago from the Hudgeons Ranch. In 1977 the three of them received the Resident Ranchers Conservation award from the DeWitt County S.W.C. District. Through the years the Bialek ranch home has served as a gathering place and family headquarters for the large family as well as for numerous friends who have enjoyed the hospitality of the Bialek Ranch. Frank J. Bialek died September 6, 1952, and Joe E. Bialek died August 1, 1983. Since Joe's death Miss Ida and Miss Carrie have carried on the ranch alone. By the late 1820's Lodowick had left the Nash County area with the Henry Williams family. The marriage record of Lodowick Bissett and Mourning Williams, daughter of Henry and Mary Williams, was found in Greene County, Alabama, dated December 15, 1829.

BITTERLY, CHARLES AND JULIA BRADEN

Julia (Braden) and Charles Bitterly 1945

Charles Berthold Bitterly was born August 27, 1894 to William Bitterly and Leone Golly, near Meyersville, DeWitt County, Texas. Julia Margaret Braden was born January 5, 1895 to George Braden and Cecilia Weigelt near Hochheim, DeWitt County, Texas. The two had childhoods much alike, being second generation Texans; he born to Alsatian parents and she to German parents. Both families were Catholic, reared the children on a farm and taught them early in their life the benefits of frugality, perseverance, hard work and faith.

Charles Bitterly and Julia Braden were married November 23, 1920 at St. Ann's Catholic Church near Hochheim. They bought land from William Bitterly near Arneckeville, built an house and bought cattle. This venture was unprofitable because of drought, little or no crop and poor cattle prices. Charlie's father took the land back, bought the remaining cattle and Charlie and Julia moved to Hochheim to live on land owned by Julia's father, George Braden. Here they spent the rest of their life.

The first two children, Charles (1922) and John (1924) were born while Charlie and Julia lived near Arneckeville. The next two children, Lucille (1926) and Donald (1928) were born at Hochheim.

Julia was a great cook, having learned this art she said, by cooking for her four brothers. Whatever Charlie raised in the garden, Julia canned, pickled or preserved. She made bread, sometimes twice a week, until shortly before she died. Charlie's smoke house would be filled with specially cured hams, bacon and sausage. His decendants are still trying to match the quality and taste of his sausage. Like most families living during the Depression of the 30s Charlie and Julia did not have much money to spend but they enjoyed good health, plenty to eat and a home. They were very busy with the various agricultural activities, especially gathering pecans in the fall, but there was time for a little hunting, trapping and fishing. As was the custom in the days before television, Charlie and Julia did a lot of visiting with their relatives, and enjoyed especially the large family gatherings for Sunday dinners at various homes.

Aside from church, an important function for Julia was the Hochheim Ladies Club, of which she was a charter member. In the early years of the club, meetings were held in members' homes. Julia spent much time and effort preparing for this event when the meeting was held in her home. Refreshments there were more like meals, with salads, sweets of all sorts and her sought-after bread.

Charlie was an avid church choir member from boyhood. While in France during and after World War I, he sang with his Army Unit Choir. Once he had the honor of singing a solo during Mass at the Cathedral in Lyon, France. He became a member of the choir at St. Ann's Catholic Church and sang with that group for many years. He loved to sing old army songs and other songs made popular during the twenties. For many years he served as a trustee for the Hochheim School and as an Election Judge or Clerk during various county, state and general Elections. Charlie spent many Saturday afternoons at Braden's Store at Hochheim, playing dominos with his friends.

Charles Bitterly died January 31, 1979 and Julia Braden Bitterly died in June, 1989. They are buried at St. Ann's Catholic Church Cemetery, near Hochheim.

The Bitterly children are: Charles (1922) who married Florence Sowa; they have four children; Charlotte, Ronald, Cynthia Ann and Lawrence; John (1924) who remains single; Lucille (1926) who married James Clarke; they have six children; Michael, Patrick, John, Marie, Terese and Timothy; Donald (1928) who married Jeane Gorden; they have four children; Joseph, Catherine Ann, Gerald and Charles.

On April 28, 1691, a man from Wissen, Canton Lucerne, Switzerland, by name of Jean Jacob Pitterle, the son of Jean Pitterle and Anne Nicht, married Eleonore Welceker, daughter of Jean Jacob Weleeker and Barbara Seufferlin in the little village of Mollau, Upper Alsace France. There is evidence of the Pitterle name, soon evolving to Peterli, Biterli, Bitterli and finally Bitterly, earlier than 1691, but for all practical purposes, the Bitterly Saga begins here in the Thur Valley, Upper Alsace France in 1691. Jean Jacob Pitterle was probably one of many who went to Alsace, France after the Thirty Years War to help the people of the Thur River Valley overcome the adversities of the recent battles of war, which had reduced the population of that part of Alsace to a few struggling survivors, plagued with disease, poverty and famine. From this one Bitterly beginning, the family soon expanded and by 1792, the name Bitterly was prevalent in Urbes, Mollau, Fellering and other towns in the Thur River Valley. Like most of the inhabitants of the area, the Bitterly men worked as day laborers, weavers, carpenters, wheel makers and barrel makers. The women, for the most part, had no profession but by the late 1700s gave occupations as weavers and day laborers.

Joseph Bitterly, a fifth generation descendant of the Jean Jacob Pitterle from Switzerland, was born into the absolute Catholic Community of Urbes, Frances to Joseph Bitterly and Catherine Sanner on the 16th of July, 1822. He was followed by Catherine (1825), Christine (1827), #2 Catherine (1830), Caspar (1833), Julie (1835), Louise (1837), Bernard (1840) and Marie Anne (1842). Joseph lived with his parents and siblings in a little house which is still standing, and in use, near the Catholic Church in Urbes, Frances. The family soon moved to the neighboring town of Fellering where Joseph and the other children received a short period of education. Like his father, Joseph became a day laborer at about the age of 12. His sisters were trained as weavers and they operated looms at home, making yarn and also weaving cloth.

In 1842, Joseph Bitterly was inducted into the Army and after training a short time, began his term in the Army on December 24, 1843. He was assigned to the 42nd Infantry Regiment in the Signal Corps and spent the next six years in that unit. On June 30, 1849 Joseph Bitterly was discharged from the Army and went back to his home in Fellering.

Not long after his return home, Joseph met Anne Marie Furter, born 26 Sept. 1822, the daughter of Jean Furter (sometimes Hassenfurter) and Marie Anne Hoffman. On April 6, 1850 Joseph Bitterly and Anne Marie Furter were married. On December 1 of that same year their first child was born and she was named Anne Marie. The next year on December 23, 1851, Rosalie Bitterly was born, followed by Marie Anne on October 1, 1853.

During this time there was much discontent in the Thur Valley. The textile mills, which had provided most of the jobs, were becoming more mechanized so the days allowed for each employee to work was cut to about four days a week. Generally, times were hard and men worried about the always impending threats of war, providing for their families and knowing full well that they would never be able to own enough land to earn a decent living.

Word came back through letters from friends and relatives who had immigrated to Texas 10 years earlier. They told of the difficulties encountered in Texas, but said at least there was always plenty to eat, the Indian problem was not nearly as bad now as it had been, and land was still plentiful. They said that if a man would work at all he could surely do well for himself. The temptation was too great for Joseph Biterly and in September 1854, he packed bag and baggage, his wife Anne Marie, their three little girls, Anne Marie, Rosalie and Marie Anne (called Nanette) along with Jean Furter, his widowed father-inlaw, who was 64 years old, and his unmarried sister-in-law, Marie Anne Furter. They sailed from LeHavre, France on the ship Ferriere, bound for New Orleans in September 1854. Ship records show that all seven of this group did arrive at New Orleans in mid-November 1854. It must have been some time after the arrival in New Orleans and the 1860 U.S. Census, that the little girl Marie Anne (Nanette) died. No record of her death has been found and no mention is made of her in any personal papers found in the Bitterly family possessions. Joseph Bitterly and his family left New Orleans for a closer port in Texas, most probably, Indianola, and from there traveled on to a site near Meyersville Community where many of their former neighbors from Alsace were living. It seems most likely the Bitterly family had made arrangements to live with one of these families, either that of Peter Bluntzer, who had been instrumental in getting his old friends from Alsace to immigrate to Texas, or the Antoine Golly Sr. family.

On October 1, 1855, not even a year after arriving in Texas, a daughter, Emilie, was born, followed by Caroline on Feb. 10, 1857, then William in June, 1858 and last John, born December 6, 1862.

Joseph Bitterly is shown paying taxes on a horse, cattle and hogs in Goliad County in 1858. Deed records of DeWitt County show that Joseph Bitterly and wife Anne Marie, purchased 100 acres of land in the T. Bell Survey, which locates this property near the Five Mile Coleto. They continued to purchase land until a sizeable amount had been accumulated.

In 1869, the first child, Anne Marie (now called Mary), married Michael Jacob, the nephew of Theresa Jacob Bluntzer and Genevieve Jacob Winckler Golly, all former residents of Oderen, France. Mary and Michael Jacob had five children. Mary died in 1934 at 84 years of age. Rosalie and Caroline Bitterly never married. They continued to live on the "home place" and began purchasing land of their own. They spent their lives caring for their grandfather, Jean Furter, their mother, Anne Marie Bitterly, and their aunt, Marie Anne Furter, whom family tradition says was called, "The Boss." Rosalie died in 1934 and Caroline died in 1925. Both are buried in the Catholic Church Cemetery at Meyersville. Emilie Bitterly married Herman Conrad Schlein in 1885. They lived in the Meyersville area all their lives. Emilie and Conrad Schlein had nine children. William Bitterly married Leone Golly in 1883 and John Bitterly married her sister, Eugenie Golly in 1890. These girls were the children of Antoine Golly Jr. and Rosalie Haller. William and Leone Golly Bitterly had 16 children and John Bitterly and wife Eugenie, had at least 4 children. William Bitterly died in 1930 and John Bitterly died in 1920. Both are buried in the Meyersville Catholic Cemetery beside their wives, their parents, grandfather, aunt and other relatives.

Joseph Bitterly was a short fellow about 5 feet 4 inches, with light hair, blue eyes and a "reddish" beard, who came to Texas a rather poor man, but achieved what he had set out to do, which was to own his own land, make a better life for his family and raise his children in the Catholic Faith. He wanted to live in peace without the constant threat of war, as that had been the threat he had lived with all his young life.

In 1861, the call to arms came once again to Joseph Bitterly at the beginning of the Civil War in the United States. He enlisted in the DeWitt Co. Home Guard, along with many of his neighbors, and was recorded as being the musician for his group. Perhaps this is where some of the Bitterlys got their powerful singing voices!

On July 25, 1869 at the age of 47, Joseph Bitterly died. He is buried in St. Peter and Paul Catholic Cemetery at Meyersville. Anne Marie Furter Bitterly died Feb. 28, 1899 and her father, John Furter died December 20, 1875. Marie Anne Furter, "the Boss," who remained single, died March 3, 1882.

When Joseph Bitterly left his home in Alsace, France to immigrate to Texas, his parents were still living but died shortly thereafter. Joseph's brothers, Caspar and Bernard had died, as well as both his sisters, named Catherine. His sister, Christine, married Joseph Walch. Julie Biterly married Joseph Lutringer and Louise married Ambroise Koehl. Records found recently show that Julie Bitterly, Christine Bitterly, their husbands and the single sister, Marie Anne, had made application to emigrate from Alsace to Montevideo, Uruguay. This was in 1862 when no immigration was taking place in the United States due to the Civil War raging at the time. Possibly these girls and their families immigrated to the United States at a later date.

It is interesting to note that Joseph Bitterly did have one relative already living in Galveston, Texas when he and his family arrived there in 1854. She was Marie Anne Bitterly, Joseph's aunt, who had emigrated with her cousin, Jean Stephan and his fiancee Agathe Arnold. Stephan and Arnold were married in Galveston, Texas in 1844 and Peter Bluntzer, who had made the voyage on the same ship to Texas, was the witness to the wedding. This aunt, Marie Anne Bitterly married an Andreas Hotz in Galveston in 1845 and was living in the area until 1857. She and Andreas Hotz had four children: Carl Franz, Joseph, Marie, and Thaddeus. To date, descendants of this family have not been found.

BITTERLY, WILLIAM AND LEONE GOLLY

William Bitterly was born in Texas on June 18, 1858 to Joseph Bitterly and Anne Marie Furter, who had emigrated from Fellering, Alsace, France to Texas in 1854. Two daughters were born in France and two more daughters were born in Texas. The birth of this first Bitterly son to be born in Texas was indeed a joyous occasion for Joseph and Marie Bitterly. The hope of having a son to perpetuate the family name was a reality and the hope was inforced with the birth of another son, John Bitterly, in 1862. The latest survey of Bitterly decendants in Texas would probably startle Joseph Bitterly, but it is evident that his name will not be extinct any time soon.

William Bitterly grew up on the land that his parents purchased in the Meyersville area of DeWitt County several years after their arrival in Texas. The family did some farming, raised hogs and chickens, but tax records of DeWitt County show that the Bitterly agricultural activities centered around raising cattle. Cattle brands registered in Bitterly names in DeWitt County more than a hundred years ago are still being used today.

In 1869 Joseph Bitterly died. William was only 11 years old and his brother John was 7. Marie Bitterly, their mother, continued to buy large amounts of land and as soon as her children were old enough, they did the same. William and his brother were very close. They bought land together, did much of their work together and even married sisters. The two families have continued to be close friends, as well as relatives, for over a century.

In 1883, William Bitterly married Leone Golly, daughter of Antone Golly, Jr. and Rosalie Haller. John Bitterly married Eugenie Golly, a sister to Leone. William and Leone Bitterly had a large family — 16 children in all—with most of them reaching adulthood, most of them marrying and all of them remaining in the Catholic Faith to which they were born. The William Bitterly family lived on a large tract of land on the Fifteen Mile Coleto on the DeWitt-Goliad County line. William and his wife prospered and were respected by their friends and neighbors.

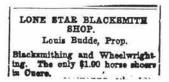

Like many other Alsatian and Germany families in the community, the Bitterlys retained many of the customs that their parents had brought with them to Texas, especially the art of fine cooking. The smokehouse was filled with cured meats and sausage, made using recipes that were typically Alsatian. They made many varieties of fine cheese, along with breads and pastries that were slightly different than such edibles found in other European emigrant homes of Texas. The wine that was produced was made from methods used in Alsace, but adapted for use with the highly acid Mustang grape that grows profusely over most of South Texas. Many of the customs used by Bitterly decendants today clearly had their origin in Alsace, in particular the afternoon lunch. This custom proved very adaptable to todays living, however, coffee or tea has replaced the usual wine as the drink. Most decendants of William and Leone Bitterly still make sausage of some variety. What was once practiced as a necessity is now done more for enjoyment, but the family gatherings, centered around the butchering and sausage making, still result in a day of good fellowship.

Elenora (1884-1943), was the first child born to William and Leona Bitterly. She married Benjamin Dreyer and had three children; Berniece (Heyer), Margaret (Hutcherson) and Aileen (Hahn). John, born in 1885, died 1890. William Jr. (1886-1974) married Rose Arnold and had four children; Alice (Rath), Olivia (Rath), Doris (Single) and James (M.Meissner). Alfred, born 1888 was killed in 1901 by a fall from a horse. Mayme, (1889-1991), and Lillie, (1891-1975) remained single. Josephine, (1892-1972) married Hugo Kenne and had one son, Dennis (W. Fromme). Ludwig, (1893-1974) married Helen Lau and had four children; Lillian (Mayer), Ruby (Schrade), Louis (V.Bruns) and Warren (M.Bethke). Ludwina was the twin of Ludwig and died at birth. Charles Berthold Bitterly, (1894-1979) married Julia Braden and had four children. Charles (F.Sowa), John (single), Lucille (Clarke) and Donald (J.Gorden). Alma, (1895-1973) remained single. Edwin (1896-1972) married Clara Hans and had four children; Merle (Rangnow), Genevieve (Dreier), Lawrence (single) and Judy (Heil). Richard (1898-1898) died. Leona Bitterly (1901-1973) married Raymond Hans and had seven children; William (M Batson), Lawrence (W Grant), Arlene (Lewis), Joseph (K Casey), Rosemary (Richard), John (E.Honda), and Joyce (Wetuski). Luella Bitterly (1902-1982) married Martin Helfrich and had three children; Milton (b Schultz), Leona (single) and Delores (Kreitz). Lorene, (1907-1989) married Eric Mauerer. They had no children.

All the Bitterly children lived and died in DeWitt County except Luella, who lived in Waller County, and Leona, who lived most of her married life in Harris County.

William Bitterly suffered a stroke and was bedridden for a time before he died Feb. 13, 1930. Leona Golly Bitterly died the following year, September 10, 1931. Both are buried in the Catholic Church Cemetery at Meyersville, Texas.

Claude North Blackwell and Finley Dunn Blackwell were born September 23, 1914 in Hochheim, Texas, the twin sons of Dr. Finley Dunn Blackwell (1874-1934) and Mary Henrietta "Ettie" Coppedge Blackwell (1873-1968). On June 23, 1941 Claude North married Dorothy Evelyn Frels in Ennis, Texas.

Dorothy, the daughter of John Ernest Frels and Ella Louise Hillmann Frels of Yoakum, was born on July 26, 1917. He died at home in Yoakum on June 28, 1956, and is buried at Oak Grove Cemetery there. Mrs. Frels was born on January 20, 1886 in Fayette County, Texas, the daughter of Charles Henry Hillmann (December 9, 1853 -June 24, 1898) and Emma Sauer Hillmann (December 28, 1860 - May 17, 1894). Mr. Hillmann's parents, Charles and Dorothea (Meyer) Hillmann, were from Bremen, Germany before coming to Fayette County. Mrs. Frels died on September 30, 1963 in Cuero and was buried beside her husband in Yoakum.

On August 24, 1904 Mr. and Mrs. Frels were married in Yoakum, and they celebrated their fiftieth anniversary there in 1954. Mr. Frels had moved to Yoakum when 17 and had begun to work as a machinist apprentice with the old San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railway. He was promoted to machinist, roundhouse foreman, general foreman, and in 1922 to master mechanic. In 1936 he was transferred to the Austin-Dallas Division with shop operations at Ennis, Texas. He retired after fifty years of service to the S.A.&A.P. and Southern Pacific Railway and moved back to Yoakum, where he had come with his parents in 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Frels were members of Holy Cross Lutheran Church in Yoakum.

John Ernest and Ella Frels and seven children: Ethel Frieda "Dotta" (Mrs. Wilson G. Gustwick, 1905-1984), Edith Louise (February

In 1951 Claude moved with his family to Cameron, Texas where he and his brother, Finley, owned a farm. In 1953 they built the Cameron Livestock Auction, which burned down almost exactly a year after its completion. They sold the farm and auction and moved to Hallettsville, Texas where they owned the livestock auction there. The family moved in 1958 to Cuero because Claude and Finley had bought the Cuero Livestock Market and the Victoria Livestock Market. The Blackwells have been in the livestock auction business since they began the Cameron auction. In 1983 Buddy and John Richard bought Claude's and Finley's shares in the Cuero and Victoria Livestock Markets, and they continue in the livestock auction business today. Claude and Dorothy are members of the First Baptist Church in Cuero, and he is a member of the Masonic Lodge #182, at Hochheim.

1975 as a Texas Family Land Heritage farm. The citation reads in part, "To the dedication and perseverance of the founders and heirs of these lands, we owe the basic wealth of Texas." The continuous ownership and operation of the farm dates back four generations to 1847 when the land was purchased from one of DeWitt's original settlers, Joseph Stevens of Mississippi.

BLACKWELL, DR. FINLEY DUNN

F65

Mr. Finley Dunn Blackwell

Mary Henrietta "Ettie" (Coppedge) Blackwell with twin sons, Claude North and Finley Dunn.

Dr. Finley Dunn Blackwell was born on July 30, 1874 in Hochheim, Texas. He was one of seven children born to his parents, John Harland Blackwell and Sarah Allison Baker Blackwell. After attending school at Hochheim and Concrete, Dr. Blackwell traveled to New Orleans where he attended Tulane University, and received his medical diploma.

On November 13, 1896, Dr. Blackwell married Mary Henrietta "Ettie" Coppedge in Yoakum. They were married by Rev. T.W. White. Mrs. Blackwell was born on November 30, 1873 in Concrete, Texas, the daughter of Oliver DeWitt Coppedge, M.D. and Mary Stevens Coppedge, who were prominent DeWitt County residents. As a new bride, Mrs. Blackwell traveled with her husband to New Orleans while he was attending the university there.

After graduation, they returned to Hochheim, in DeWitt County, where Dr. Blackwell began his practice of medicine and they began their family. Merle was born in Hochheim on October 21, 1899; Joel "Chum" Coppedge was born in Hochheim on December 18, 1904, but died on February 21, 1906; Finley Dunn and Claude North (twins) arrived on September 23, 1914 in Hochheim. The Blackwells also had a son born in 1898 who only lived two days, and a baby girl who was born in 1902 and lived only two months.

The medical career of Dr. Blackwell spanned two eras. When he began his practice his calls were made in a buggy. He always kept several buggy horses in his stable, and often he would come home during the day to change horses if he had long distances to travel. Later he purchased one of the first fifty automobiles in DeWitt County, and used it to call on his patients.

Dr. Blackwell was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Hochheim where he gave a stained glass window in memory of his parents John Harland and Sarah Allison Blackwell. He was also a lifetime member of the Masonic Lodge #182, at Hochheim.

While opening a fence gap when on his way to deliver a baby, Dr. Blackwell cut his right hand on the barbed wire. He got blood poisoning from this cut, and died on May 28, 1934 in the Burns Hospital in Cuero, Texas. Dr. Blackwell was buried in the Hochheim Cemetery.

After his death, Mrs. Blackwell continued to live at her home in Hochheim with her children and two grandsons, John and Earl Davis. In 1949 or 1950 she and Merle moved to Yoakum. BLACKWELL, JOHN H. AND SARAH A. (BAKER)

F66

John Harland Blackwell

Sarah Allison Baker Blackwell

John Harland Blackwell (1842-1918) was born in Lauderdale County, Alabama on February 15, 1842, the son of David Finley Blackwell, born in Virginia in 1812, and Margaret Dunn Blackwell. David Finley and Margaret Dunn married in Alabama and John Harland was the only child of this union. John Harland's grandfather, Josiah Blackwell, married Isabella Abercrombie, who was born in South Carolina in 1776. Her father, James Abercrombie, born near Stirling, Scotland about 1707/1709, married a Miss Gordon and they came with their family to Pennsylvania and then moved to South Carolina.

The mother of John Harland, Margaret Dunn, was the daughter of John and Susie (Rochelle) Dunn of Sussex County, Virginia. They had the following children: William, John, Eliza, Jack and Margaret. John Dunn was the son of Hardyman Dunn. Margaret died during an epidemic in Lauderdale County, Alabama and David Finley moved with his young son, John Harland, to Shelby County, Tennessee where the 1850 Census lists him as David F., age 38 with son, John Harland, age 8. David died while they were living in Tennessee and John Harland was sent to the home of his aunt in Chico County, Alabama. At the age of 9 years, December 1851, he came with his aunt, Mrs. Rebecca Blackwell Hampton and located in Lockhart Bend in Gonzales County, Texas.

John Harland received his education in Gonzales County. At the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861, he spent three months in the command of Major Fly of Gonzales, largely around Galveston. Later he joined Col. Norris's Regiment, where he remained in the frontier service, later joining Steele's Battalion of Waul's Legion and continued within the state until 1865. On August 19, 1863, John Harland Blackwell married Sarah Allison Baker (1844-1880), youngest daughter of Judge James McCulloch Baker and Martha Smith Baker in DeWitt County. At the close of the Civil War, John Harland Blackwell bought a ranch on Brushy Creek near Yoakum, Texas and spent eight years there as a rancher and farmer. They then moved to Concrete to place their children in school under Professor Covey at Concrete College and Academy. John Harland and Sarah bought land from James M. Baker on the Guadalupe River between Hochheim and Concrete which was to be their home for the rest of their lives. Sarah Allison died at age 36 and John Harland never remarried. The eight children were between the ages of 15 and 4. Apparently the older children helped and cared for the younger ones.

John Harland listed his occupation as a farmer. Grandchildren remember that he raised and loved horses; sometimes having as many as 50 or 60 brood mares. He was very proud of a stallion, Colonel Mac, who was a noted pacer and trotter and produced fine buggy horses. John Harland was an active member of the Presbyterian Church at Concrete and later at Hochheim and a member of the Masonic Order.

The children of John Harland and Sarah Allison Baker Blackwell were:

1. Inez W. married Otto Eckhardt of Goliad County. Children – John, Lena, Robert, Sarah and Zora.

2. Zora married Valentine Bennett. Children – Lucille, Jolly, and Joel.

3. David married Annie Leisner. To this union was born one child, Allison. After his wife's death, David married Josephine. Children – David, Beulah, Sarah, Josephine, and Ihomas.

4. Claude North married Mitchie Coppedge. Children – Mary Will, John L., Claude N., Jr., Ettie C., Finley Dunn (Dick), and Raleigh White.

5. John Hampton never married. He moved o Sherman County, ranched and served as sheriff of that county.

6. Joel C. died in 1893 at the age of 21.

7. Finley Dunn married Mary Henrietta Coppedge. Children – Merle, Finley Dunn, and Claude North.

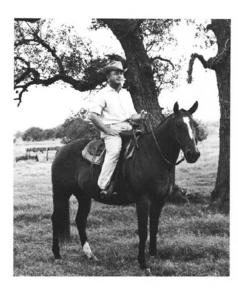

8. Beulah married M.D. Bennett. Children – Sarah Claire and Beulah Margaret.

The confusing overlapping of names can be attributed to the fact that two Blackwell sisters married brothers (Bennetts) and two Blackwell brothers married sisters (Coppedges).

BLACKWELL, R. F. AND DOROTHY (BREEDEN)

R.F. Blackwell

Clayton Blackwell was born May 20, 1820 in Princeton, New Jersey, Essex County, the son of Martha Lanning and Elijah Blackwell, one of the founders of Princeton University. As a young man, he and his brother, Montgomery Blackwell came to Texas settling in Clinton, DeWitt County where he practiced medicine. He bought land in the Peter Teal Survey and John York Surveys and raised long-horn steers and horses. He met and married a young widow, Mrs. Marian G. York Bell, who was the daughter of Captain John York the founder of Yorktown, Texas. Dr. Blackwell lived only a few short years leaving Marian a widow again at the age of 34 and one son William Albert Blackwell who was born December 17, 1852 and was lovingly reared by his mother and half-sisters.

Their son young William Albert visited his grandparents in New Jersey and received an inheritance from his grandfather. He returned to Texas and inherited property from his mother. He raised long-horn steers and drove his cattle to market on the historic Chisholm Trail. He married Jeannette Forbes, July 18, 1877. They had two sons, William Albert Blackwell, Jr. born February 29, 1880 and Edwin Blackwell born 1883. They moved from their ranch home into Cuero when the boys reached school age. Mr. and Mrs. Blackwell also helped to rebuild the First Baptist Church in Cuero.

BLACKWELL, RALEIGH FAMILY

F68

The Raleigh Blackwell family's story began with his birth at Concrete January 28, 1905. His father, Claude North Blackwell, died in September of the same year, leaving Mitchie (Coppedge) Blackwell to raise children, John, Mary Will, Ettie, Claude, Dick, and Raleigh, alone. By the time she was 35, Mitchie had lost (by death) two small children (Oliver and Sally), her husband, and both parents.

Sheriff Raleigh Blackwell 1972

Raleigh says he grew up between the house where brother Dick lives now, his grandfather Coppedge's house located then where the Daniel Frels home is, and the location on Clinton Street which would become the lifelong home of Mary Will and Arthur Fischer. Raleigh's uncle, John Blackwell, had gone to the Texas Panhandle about 1900, locating in Stratford where his cousin Dick Pinchem had settled. As Mitchie's family grew up, they were drawn to that area by Uncle John's presence there.

So it was natural that about 1924, when there was little hope of a decent crop, Dick and Raleigh went to Stratford to help with the maize and wheat harvest. In these next years there were trips back and forth when illness or death of a family member occurred, and at some point both Dick and Raleigh returned to South Texas. But Raleigh returned to Stratford, where he remained until John Blackwell died suddenly at his home a mile south of Stratford.

About 1926 or '27 Raleigh had met Velma Celeste Norvell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John Norvell. Velma had completed a year of college at Hardin Simmons when they married in August, 1927. In the spring of 1928, Mitchie, Claude (whom everyone called "June" or Junior), Raleigh, and Velma returned to Cuero for a surgical procedure Raleigh needed. The return trip to Stratford in a Model A was complicated by an unexpected late snowstorm in early April. It was a difficult and dangerous time for Velma, who was expecting their first child in May. Bobby Jane Blackwell was born prematurely April 14, 1928, surviving by Dr. Norvell's experience and God's mercy.

Raleigh and Velma enjoyed several good crop years at the "Standard Farm", whose 640 acres were located ten miles southeast of Stratford. Ann was born at the farm in 1930, and Claude joined the family in 1931. The years that followed were characterized by the terrible blowing dirt of Panhandle history. Velma told later of shoveling dirt out of what was, for the times, "a pretty good house" after a storm had blown itself out. She also recounted having gone from child to child as her three children napped, blowing dirt away from their noses and mouths.

In 1934 the Blackwells decided to move "home". Raleigh and his "brood" occupied a small house northwest of Dick's house. During the next several years, John was born in 1935 and Sally in 1938. About 1936 Raleigh and Velma purchased the Applewhite place at Edgar and moved their family there. Close ties remained between the Blackwell brothers and sisters, just as family closeness had survived the Panhandle separations. Raleigh Jr. was born while the family lived at Edgar — in 1941. He was the first of Raleigh's children to be born in a hospital.

The family grew and flourished at Edgar. During this period of time Raleigh began to supplement farming income with work at Cuero Livestock Commission Company's Friday sale. As this job became primary rather than secondary, another move seemed wise. The Edgar place was sold, and the family lived for several years across the highway and just south of Dick's house. Dr. Norvell's death in this period was a severe blow, and, shortly after that occurrence, Mrs. Norvell and their other daughter, Dr. Leta Boswell, and her son Mac moved from Stratford to Canyon where Dr. Boswell still resides.

In the years that followed Raleigh's acquaintance with the Cuero livestock auctions played a vital role in his family's lives. The sales at Halletsville, Three Rivers, Pleasanton, and Edna were the means by which he supported his large family. Later, Raleigh became associated with the Sheriff's Department of DeWitt County, serving for some time as a deputy.

Raleigh and Velma began construction of the present family home in 1946, with Velma supervising and planning every part of the construction. The completion of the house was a high point in the family's life. Other big events were in store, as Ann graduated and began college at Canyon's West Texas State College (now a university) and Raleigh and Velma began to plan for "one more baby". Willis was born March 8, 1948. Velma died the next day.

The next months were difficult ones for the family. Mary Will Fischer took charge of the baby, and the situation began dramatic improvement only when Raleigh and Audrey Barfield were married in November 1948.

Audrey said — and meant — that she never planned to "replace Velma", but to make a place for herself. She did this - in the home and in the hearts of Velma's children and her home — a unique place — for 36 years. Marsha Kleinecke and Robert Kleinecke joined the family with Audrey; Sue arrived in 1949 and Merilyn in 1954. One child is deceased at this time; Bobby Jane died in 1954, Mitchie's death in 1951 and Audrey's death in 1985 were other severe blows - but fond and humorous memories have kept them and Velma very much alive in the hearts of their family. Raleigh lives alone at Concrete, surrounded by children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren - 64 in all. He is rich — not in dollars and cents, but in the love and respect of those who know him Baptist churches have played such an important part in the family's life that this must be included. The little church at Concrete (located for many years north of where Dick and Raleigh live), the small church at Stratford where the Norvells were active, the smaller-still church at Edgar, and finally First Baptist at Cuero have been spiritual "home" at different periods in Raleigh's 84 years. They have witnessed and participated in the joys and sorrows of family living, and will continue to do this. A scripture from Ephesians summarizes the story better than I could do otherwise: "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honor your father and mother—which is the first commandment with a promise—that it may go well with you and that you may enjoy long life on the earth."

BLAIR, GEORGE

F70

George Blair was born 1789 in Berkeley County, Virginia, fifth child of the six sons and one daughter of John and Susannah Ewing Blair. John BLAIR, Revolutionary soldier from Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, married Susannah Ewing and lived in Berkeley County, Virginia, where his first son was born in 1778. He first moved his family to Bourbon County, Kentucky 1790, and then migrated to Franklin County, Ohio by 1800, where he died in the newly formed county of Madison County, Ohio, July of 1810. By 1817 his sons and daughter were in Orange County, Indiana, and all except George were in Vigo County, Indiana in 1820, and later in Fountain and Parke Counties, and some went to Pike County, Illinois in 1828.

George Blair left Indiana and went to Madison County, Illinois where he married Mrs. Sarah Lockhart Fulton December of 1818 (see Lockhart sketch). George Blair arrived in DeWitt's Colony 10 Feb. 1829 with a wife and five children, James Fulton born 1816, Susannah Blair born 1819, Sarah Blair born 1820, Margaret Blair born 1824, William Blair born 1826, George Blair 17 Feb. 1831 and Travis Blair born 23 Dec. 1836. The last two were born in Texas, I presume, in the Cuero Creek Community. George Blair made application for land located on Plum Creek (still in Gonzales County) 26 Nov. 1831, which was granted, but he lived and died on land he bought from Kimber W. Barton and the McNutt league near the Guadaloupe River in the Cuero Creek Community. George Blair died there in the Fall of 1840, his obituary is in the Austin City Gazette. Much was learned from the "Memoirs" of James Norman Smith, a school teacher from Tennessee, whom George Blair had met on the coast in the Spring of 1840, and had offered a school in the Cuero Creek community. He had sent a wogan and moved him there and settled him into a house in his own yard. Mr. Smith describes the Blair home as a center for activities in the area. Sarah Lockhart Blair continued to live at Cuero Creek until after 1850. Susannah Blair had married Berry Doolittle about 1838 and had three children, Amanda, George W. and Mary Jane. Berry Doolittle died about 1846, and Susannah Doolittle remarried to Robert E. Ross 1 November 1850 (my great grandfather). Sarah Blair married Wiley C. Cummings in 1842 and died in 1843, leaving a child, Sarah Cummings, which Sarah Lockhart Blair reared. Robert E and Susannah Ross moved onto her part of the George Blair land on Plum Creek in Gonzales County, which Robert E. Ross had bought from her before they married. Sarah Lockhart Blair also moved onto the land on Plum Creek in Gonzales County, which Robert E. Ross had bought from her before they married. Sarah Lockhart Blair also moved onto the land on Plum Creek in Gonzales County, with her sons, George W. and Travis Blair, and her granddaughter, Sarah Cummings. Saran Ann Lockhart Blair died in Gonzales County before 1870, and is buried near Blair land, in Stonewall cemetery, with a fieldstone marker inscribed with S.A. Blair, no dates.

Robert E. Ross and Susannah Blair's four children, Thomas Hulen, John Travis, Sarah Ann, and Elizabeth, (my grandmother), were all possibly born in Gonzales County. Susannah Ross died soon after the birth of Elizabeth, 28 May 1856. Robert E. Ross took his four children and moved to Williamson County by 1860, and Sarah Lockhart Blair kept the Doolittle children.

George W. Blair married Mrs. Margaret Hodges Darst 19 March 1860 in Gonzales County. He served in Waul's Texas Legion, which fell at Vicksburg, but he died in Coleman County, Texas 24 Feb. 1865, still in service. By 1870 Margaret Darst Blair was back in DeWitt County, as were the Doolittle children, living in the Terryville-Hebron cemetery area. Amanda Doolittle married Samuel Stevens, George W. Doolittle married 1st to Mary E. Hume, 2nd to Susan Darst, stepdaughter of his Uncle George W. Blair, and Mary Jane Doolittle married Albert W. Darst, stepson of Mrs. Margaret Darst-Blair. Many from these families are buried in Hebrun cemetery.

George W. and Margaret E. Blair had two daughters, Sarah F. married James Hester, and Georgia E. married Alfred C. Dowlearn. Travis Blair married Josephine Barnes in DeWitt County, listed on 1870 census there, was listed on 1880 Brown County census, sold out in 1890s, no further record found.

BLAKE FAMILY

F71

Warrenetta (Blake) Peebles and Robert Blake Peebles

The Blakes, who came to DeWitt Co. in the latter part of the 1880's, were descended from a Robert Blake who arrived in Virginia from England in 1650, received a grant of land in Isle of Wight Co., Va., and in 1652 pledged an Oath of Fidelity to the Commonwealth of England. He was a nephew and Godson of Admiral Robert Blake, commander of the British Fleet during the rule of Oliver Cromwell and Parliament.

In about 1805 Joshua Blake and his wife Charlotte Vaughn Blake moved from South Hampton Co., Va., to Chester Co., S.C., and settled near Bascomville. Their son Joshua was married first to Martha Eckles in 1837.

Martha Blake died in 1849, and in 1852

Joshua married Frances (Fanny) Jemima Bigelow. She was born in 1827 in Chester, Vt. to Daniel and Jemima Johnson Bigelow. Orphaned at an early age, she was reared by an aunt and attended Troy Female Seminary in Troy, N.Y. She went to South Carolina to teach at Fishing Creek Seminary, taught there for three years, and later served as principal of Bascomville Seminary. She and Joshua had eight children.

The years of the War Between the States brought great hardships to the Blake family even though Joshua was too old to go to war. Although Sherman and his Union Army passed through a few miles away, the Blakes still had to contend with stragglers, who raided their livestock and burned the warehouse in which was stored all the cotton raised during the war years. For a time, Joshua even had to hide in the woods and Fanny had to slip out during the night to take food to him, as none of the servants could be trusted with knowledge of his whereabouts.

During the 1870's two of the Blake sons attended The Citadel in Charleston, S.C., and graduated from the School of Medicine. The eldest, Dr. Daniel Bigelow Blake, received his degree in 1877 and came to Texas, where he stayed at first in Gonzales with his half-sister, Katherine Blake Knox, and her husband, Robert Knox. In 1880 he married Mary Clair Weldon (Mollie) of Yorktown, Tx, and they settled in Cuero, where he practiced medicine. Eleven children were born to Dr. Dan and Mollie, eight of whom survived to maturity. In later years this family moved to Nashville, Tenn., where Dr. Blake continued medical practice and the sons all attended Vanderbilt University. In 1906 three of them were members of the first string of the varsity football

Other members of the South Carolina Blakes also came to Texas. In the early 1800's one of the daughters had fallen in love with a cousin, and her family were strongly opposed to the match not only because of the close blood relationship but also because the young man was considered "fast". Therefore it was decided to send Marion to Texas to visit her brother Dan in Cuero. The young lovers planned for him to take her off the train at the next stop, after which they would elope. Fate intervened, however, for fire destroyed a station down the line so the train was re-routed. Marion came on to Texas and never saw her beloved cousin again.

In 1885, Marion met and married young John Peebles instead, and letters which she wrote her mother seem to verify that she was happy with her new life. Let us hope she was, for she had not long to live. In October of 1886 she gave birth to a son and died soon after. She was twenty-four years old.

Fanny Bigelow Blake, now a widow, soon came to DeWitt Co. to help care for Marion's baby. With her came Warrenetta Elizabeth, her youngest child, who John Peebles married in 1888. (See Peebles Family).

Fanny Blake lived until 1914, making her home with her daughter "Warnie" on the Peebles Ranch. She was greatly loved by all her family and had many friends.

BLAKESLEE, BERNARD AND ISAURE (SNAER)

F72

Isaure (Snaer) and Bernard Blakeslee

Bernard Francis Blakeslee was born June 22, 1857 in St. Louis, Missouri. He was the oldest of three sons born to Abraham Blakeslee and Mary Virginia Lovett. His younger brother, William Edward, was born August 20, 1859 and his youngest brother, John Eugene, was born April 30, 1862. Abraham and Mary were born in Baltimore, Maryland in 1830 and 1837 respectively. They were married in Baltimore on September 9, 1856. They moved to St. Louis, Mo. after marriage and established a flag-making business. Then, they moved to Houston, Texas in 1877 and on to Gonzales in 1878 and again to Hallettsville in 1886. "Grandma" Blakeslee, as everyone called her, had an exciting war experience. While in St. Louis, her husband was caught in the act of making flags for the Confederacy and was arrested and put in a civil prison in Alton, Illinois. After a long confinement, he was exchanged for a war prisoner and was brought to prison in Mobile, Alabama. When she found out he was in Mobile, she started out on foot with her three sons to make the long journey. She followed in the footsteps of Grant's Army, between the lines of the Confederate and Federal troops unattended by a protector. She had a legacy of 500 dollars in 20 dollar gold pieces which she had to carry hidden to protect it from being stolen. She thought of sewing the gold pieces in cloth as buttons for her dresses as a means of concealment. She arrived safely in Mobile and was able to rescue her husband and they returned home safely together. While in Gonzales their devotion to the Catholic Church prompted them to build the first Catholic Church there. Abraham died in Hallettsville on January 20, 1911. Mary died in Hallettsville on May 28, 1915.

Bernard Francis Blakeslee met and married Isaure Rose Snaer in Gonzales, Texas at St. Joseph's Catholic Church on October 16, 1888. Isaure was the oldest child of Dr. Peter Snaer, who was born in New Orleans, La. in August 1844 and Mary (Casine) Snaer, born October 6, 1847 in New Orleans, La. Dr. Snaer was the grandson of General Bullach of France. The family came by boat to Galveston, Texas, in 1880 and moved on to Gonzales where Dr. Snaer practiced his profession of dentistry.

They had six children - Isaure, Alice, Randolph, William, Lydia, and Elnora. Bernard Blakeslee and Isaure Blakeslee also had six children. Angklus was born and died September 14, 1889; Leo Anthony Blakeslee was born October 17, 1890 in Hallettsville; Vincent Blakeslee born January 1, 1892 in Hallettsville; Francis Blakeslee born July 17, 1893 in Cuero; Mary Virginia born September 21, 1894 in Cuero and Pauline Veronica born July 7, 1896 in Cuero. Bernard Blakeslee owned and operated "Blakeslee's Confectionery" in Cuero for five years. He then moved his family back to Hallettsville in 1897 to help run his family's business there. He died a few months later on July 29, 1897. He is buried in Hallettsville. Isaure brought her family back to Cuero. They attended St. Michael's Catholic Church and School. She was very active in all church organizations and a charter member of all of them. She died at age 92 on April 23, 1959.

Francis Blakeslee worked at Koehler's from his youth until it closed – well over forty years. He married Lillie Boehl, who also worked at Koehlers for many years, on April 27, 1941. She died in 1969. Francis died December 29, 1979. Francis was very active in the Boy Scouts of America from 1925 until his death. He received The St. George Award on November 22, 1966. He wa a charter member of the Knights of Columbus and a fourth Degree Knight of Columbus. Then, on November 9, 1976 he received the Pope Paul VI Por Esslesia et Pontifice Award at Our Lady of Victory Church.

Vincent Blakeslee was killed in World War I on November 4, 1918. Leo Blakeslee was in both World Wars and was injured in both of them. He was in the same engineers unit in both wars. He died in Cuero, Texas on May 22, 1947. Vera Blakeslee graduated from St. Michael's Academy in 1915. She was very active in St. Michael's Church affairs and was a charter member of all their organizations. She worked at many local offices throughout the years as a stenographer and bookkeeper. She died January 27, 1978. Mary Virginia Blakeslee after graduation from St. Michael's Academy in 1912 went to Teachers College and taught school in several towns. While teaching in Ottine, Texas, she met and married Richard Thomas Ryan in Cuero, Texas (See Ryan) on September 20, 1920 at St. Michael's Church. Richard Ryan Sr. was born December 4, 1882 in Belmont, Texas to Patrick and Mary (Doran) Ryan from Ireland. He is credited with the foundation of the Warm Springs in Ottine. He was the driller of a well there and, when they hit hot water instead of oil, the owners wanted to close the well. He talked them into leaving it flowing. As young children in Ottine, we were almost daily visitors to the hot wells to bathe and wash our hair. Soon the people of Ottine had built a bathhouse around the well with ladies' and men's sides. Richard Ryan, Sr. died in Cuero, Texas on November 3, 1948. Virginia Blakeslee and her son Richard Ryan Jr. purchased Haak's Flower Shop after his death (See Ryan's Flower Shop). She loved her worked and was very active in all phases of the shop until a few years before her death. She was always very active in St. Michael's Catholic Church and School functions. BLANTON, HARTMAN AUGUST AND MURIEL MORRISON BYRAM

August Blanton Hartman, son of William and Emma Ardelia Woods Hartman, was born 7 March 1897, in Yorktown, Dewitt County, Texas. August was baptized on 1 July, 1900, by Rev. W. Matysiak in Holy Cross Catholic Church, Yorktown, Texas. His sponsors were Frank and Brigid Wasser.

Near Christmas, 1899, William Hartman sold his property in Yorktown and bought land and a house in Mound Creek from John House and moved his family there soon afterwards. August attended school in Mound Creek.

On 5 June 1918, August enlisted as a private in the U.S. Army and was stationed at Austin, Texas for most of WW I. On leave from the military, August courted the beautiful Muriel Morrison Byram, only child of Presley Randolph and Lena Zenobia Morrison Byram. After an honorable discharge, August Blanton Hartman married Muriel Morrison Byram on 21 November 1923, at the Byram Ranch, Davy, Texas. The first of four children born to this union was Vernon Blanton "Bob", born 29 November 1924, at Davy. Jacquelyn "Jackie" Woods was also born at Davy on 25 July 1926, followed by Lavelle, born in Yorktown on 28 March 1928, and finally, Alton Randolph, born on his father's birthday, 7 March 1934, in Yorktown, Texas. All four of the Hartman children graduated from Karnes City High School.

During WW II, August served as a member of the Selective Service Advisory Board for Karnes County, Texas. His son, Vernon Blanton "Bob", joined the U.S. Navy and served in the war efforts in the Pacific. August's future son-in-law, Ray Slater Hall, also served in the war efforts in the Pacific, with the U.S. Marine Corps. Both were fortunate to return home and were honorably discharged from military service.

Jacquelyn "Jackie" was the first to marry, on 4 May 1946, to Sidney Ross Rhodes. Lavelle married Ray Slater Hall on 23 June 1946, and Vernon "Bob" married Mary Fuller on 19 November 1946. (This was Bob's second marriage, his first, to Edna, having ended in divorce.) Unfortunately, Bob and Mary's marriage was painfully short as she died of typhoid fever on 7 January 1947. Mary was buried on 10 January 1947, in the August Hartman family plot in Karnes City cemetery. The first Hartman grandchild, Marianne Elizabeth Hall, was born in Houston, Harris County, Texas on 20 August 1948, (daughter of Ray Slater and LaVelle Hartman Hall) and was named for Mary Fuller Hartman and her paternal grandmother, Anne Elizabeth Slater Hall. The next Hartman grandchild was Laurinda Rae "Lori" Hall, born 18 February 1951, Karnes City, Texas.

Vernon Blanton "Bob" Hartman married third Mickey Lorraine Blake on 16 November 1952. They had a musical act called "Bob Hartman and Buttercup" and they performed all over south Texas, with Buttercup playing the tub and Bob playing the piano or fiddle and often Peewee played guitar. They were well known, especially in Port Aransas, where they lived for many years. Mickey was also a registered nurse and cared for many patients who always recalled her kindness to them while they were seriously ill.

The next two grandchildren were Suzanne Rhodes, daughter of Sidney Ross and Jacquelyn Woods Hartman Rhodes, born in Karnes City on 28 June 1956, and Jann Rhodes, born in Karnes City on 30 November 1959. William Allen "Bill" Hall, son of Ray Slater and LaVelle Hartman Hall, was born in El Paso, Texas on 27 February 1960.

August Blanton Hartman served as Deputy Sheriff for Karnes County, Texas and as a bailiff in the courts at Karnes County. He also worked for Smolik's Meat Market at different times. August was a Master Mason in Smiley Lodge and a member of Eastern Star, Helena chapter, Karnes City, Texas. In 1962, August and Muriel Hartman sold their ranch at Davy to Bobby Muschalek and moved to a lovely brick home in Karnes City, where August could be closer to a hospital due to his severe heart condition.

After graduating from High School in Davy, Muriel Byram Hartman taught school at New Bramen, Arneckeville and Meyersville. Muriel graduated with honors from Southwest Texas State College with a Bachelor of Science degree in Education on 20 August 1953. She taught school at Ecleto, Gillett and then in Karnes City Elementary School until she retired in 1977. Muriel Hartman is a member of Eastern Star, Helena chapter, at Karnes City, Texas.

Marianne Elizabeth Hall was the only Hartman grandchild to be married in the home of August and Muriel Hartman in Karnes City, Texas, on 25 July 1966, to Ronald Mauldin. B.A. "Pete" Hartman performed the wedding ceremony and August Hartman gave the bride away as her father, Ray Slater Hall, was in Panama. Later on 10 March, 1979, Marianne married Robert Forsyth Little IV in Houston, Texas

Alton Randolph Hartman married second on 15 May 1966, to Evelyn Henke. They had three children in Karnes City: Presley Randolph born 14 October 1967, Perry Blake born 17 November 1969, and Sandra Kay born 27 January 1972.

The first Hartman great grandchild, Michelle Marie Mauldin, daughter of Ron and Marianne Hall Mauldin, was born in Brawley, California on 13 August 1967. BLANTON, JIM

Jim Blanton and Agnes (Zuch) 1905

Jim Blanton and the Nordheim

James Walton Blanton was born September 2, 1873, in Glenfawn, Rusk County, Texas. His parents were Walton Wilkins Blanton and Elizabeth Frances (Wood) Blanton. In 1887 the Blanton family moved to Manor, in Travis County; then, in 1878, to Floresville, where Jim and his two brothers grew to manhood. Part of Jim's schooling took place at the Floresville Academy, where he received several "Certificates of Distinction". After working at several jobs in Floresville, the young man migrated to Yorktown, where he either founded the Yorktown News in 1895 or bought it shortly thereafter. In 1902 he sold it to William Hausmann, who in turn sold it to G.R. "Cap" Beckham in 1912.

It was in the summer of 1902 that Jim Blanton moved to Nordheim and established The Nordheim View, with offices in what was known as the Gohmert building. Ownership of the newspaper was at first shared by the building's owner, Chas. W. Gohmert, but in 1903 Mr. Blanton bought him out for $200. and, a few years, later, acquired the premises as well in exchange for a field located within the city limits of Nordheim.

On December 24, 1905, Jim Blanton was united in marriage to Agnes Zuch, daughter of Robert and Emma (Stark) Zuch, members of Yorktown pioneer families. To this union were born Helen Agnes (1906) and James Wilkins (1916). Mrs. Blanton went to her eternal rest June 10, 1923. Her mother, Mrs. Robert Zuch, then took over the responsibility for managing the household and rearing the children to adulthood.

Mr. Blanton published The Nordheim View from 1902 to 1938. For two or three of those years, however, he leased it to Claude M. Forehand (probably 1911 or 1912), during which time he acquired and edited the Center Point News in Center Point, Texas, the family having moved there for the sake of Mrs. Blanton's health. They returned to Nordheim about 1913. Jim retained ownership of the Center Point paper for several years, but leased it to others until he finally sold it. He sold the View to Mrs. Bruno Morisse in 1938 and retired to the Hermann's Sons Altenheim, in Comfort, Texas, where he died on February 13, 1941.

Mrs. Morisse continued to publish the View for a few years in Nordheim; then she and her brother, Paul Schmidt, moved it to Yorktown and changed the name to DeWitt County View. They later sold it to John and Mary Janacek, who continue to publish it as of this writing (August, 1989).

During most of the Blanton years the View was very nearly a one-man operation, from editor to janitor. Not quite though as the two inner pages were hand-set by Mr. B. while the two outer pages were machine-set in Yorktown by the News staff. (Yes, it was a four-page weekly). On Wednesdays - printing day - he had the help of a succession of local lads whose duty it was to ink the type with a rather heavy muscle-propelled roller, while "ye editor cranked the manually-operated flatbed press. Folding and addressing were also done by hand. Many subscribers would drop by the office on Wednesdays and pick up their Views ("hot off the press", as they delighted in saying). When Jim addressed the papers for mailing the next day, he managed to recall who had fetched their View and to refrain from mailing them one! It was his custom to give a year's free subscription to newlyweds as a wedding present; no doubt many present-day subscribers, or their parents, were the beneficiaries of this delightful custom. It should also be recorded that, through the years, there were any number of unsung volunteer, or nominally paid, "reporters", whose help was essential, and duly appreciated by the editor.

Research for this history unveiled a rather interesting sidelight. Among the documents examined was a subpoena ordering J.W. Blanton to appear in the Karnes County courthouse on September 22, 1902, as a witness for the defense in the case of the State of Texas vs. Gregorio Cortez, "a criminal action." Cortez was charged in the killing of two peace officers. One was Karnes sheriff, "Brack" Morris, (father of the late Harper Morris, long a sheriff of Karnes County) and one was Henry Schnabel (father of the late Q.P. Schnabel of "Beautity San Antonio" fame). A book, a movie, and a ballad were based on this infamous shootout. The subpoena also required Mr. B. to bring copies of "each edition of The Nordheim View from June 12, 1901, until July 15, 1901." One wonders how Jim coped with this demand, in as much as the View was not in existence until the year 1902!

BLOCK, ARTHUR AND SUSIE (BRANTLEY)

Arthur and Susie (Brantley) Block

Arthur Dietrict Block, the third son and fifth child of Edward and Alwina Dittman Block was born at Nopal, Gonzales County, Texas on September 2, 1891. He moved with his parents to the Garfield Community in DeWitt County in 1900 and attended school there.

Susan Eliza Brantley was the oldest child of Arnold and Rena Scott Brantley and she was born in DeWitt County on January 26, 1893. Susan was named for her grandmother, Susan Woods Brantley, but changed her name to Susie and her family members always called her Sis or Aunt Sis.

Susie and Arthur married at the bride's home on October 6, 1915. A conflict arose before the wedding due to the fact that the groom's parents wanted to furnish the bride's dress and the bride's family were offended, thinking they were looked on as cheap. However, the custom in those days was for the groom's family to help pay the expenses. These were the differences in German and American customs.

Susie and Arthur lived their entire married life on their farm at Garfield. Here they raised their family of two children. Rose Elizabeth was born August 1, 1916 and Arthur Lloyd was born October 22, 1925. Rose lived with her grandparents and attended school in Yorktown and Arthur Lloyd attended school at Garfield.

Arthur farmed the entire 43 years on the farm at Garfield until his death in 1958. Arthur was school trustee of Garfield and was a member of the Garfield Shooting Club Hall, where he served as Club President twice. Both Arthur and Susie worked closely with the Red Cross for many years and during World War II were active in many war efforts due to their son being in the Navy during the War. Arthur was an active member of the First Presbyterian Church in Yorktown and served for many years as an Elder in the Church.

Susie was also an active member of the First Presbyterian Church in Yorktown and sang in the choir for many years. She served as President and held other offices of the Women of the Church. Susie was a member of the Home Demonstration Club and held local offices as well as District and State Offices.

Susie was the Garfield correspondent for the local newspapers for many years, and after she moved into the nursing home, she became the nursing home reporter. Susie spent many of her mornings at the nursing home going around to patients rooms and reading the Bible to them. Until the end she lived a true Christian life.

Arthur died suddenly on June 15, 1958 and Susie died January 4, 1979. They are both buried in the Westside Cemetery in Yorktown, Texas.

BLOCK, EDWARD

Alwina (Dittman) and Edward Block

Edward Block, the youngest of ten children and the eighth son of Philip and Margaret Block, was born September 1, 1852 in Tespe, Province Hanover, Germany. He served in the military under the Kaiser while there. Dissatisfied with conditions in Germany, the main one being that he was unable to get the consent of his parents to marry his sweetheart who was a milkmaid on his uncle's dairy farm, Edward left his mother county and sailed for the United States on September 17, 1882 on the ship, Cimbria. He arrived in the New York Harbor on October 8, 1882. Edward came to Lavaca County, Texas and worked on ranches where he dug post holes and built fences to earn enough money to send for his sweetheart.

Alwina Dittman Block was the eldest child and daughter of Ludwig and Wilhelmine Steoresandt Dittman and was born July 13, 1863 in Dahlenburg, Province Hanover, Germany. After Alwina arrived in America, she and Edward were married the same day. Edward and Alwina were to make their first home in a log cabin in Lavaca County, Texas, near Breslaw which is located near Hallettsville.

In 1890, they bought their first farm in DeWitt County at Nopal, about fifteen miles north of Yorktown. They built their home using plans that were used in Germany where the residence, hay barn and stock stables were all under one roof. This was their home for ten years. At this time they joined St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Yorktown where they remained members for the rest of their lives. They attended services as often as possible, heating bricks and placing them in the wagon to keep them warm during the 15 mile drive across the prairie from Nopal to Yorktown.

In 1900 the Blocks bought a farm in the Garfield Community, eleven miles north west of Yorktown. The farm consisted of more than 200 acres and here they grew cotton, corn and hay. Their home was a large, roomy structure where they raised eight of their ten children to adulthood. The farm also had many barns, a smokehouse, a cistern house and a buggy shed. There was always a large garden to supply food for the large family, as well as a fruit orchard. Raised were cows, chickens and hogs.

Edward and Alwina were both very active in community affairs, including getting a Lutheran pastor to hold services in the Garfield school house. Edward was a school trustee for the Garfield school. He also took an active part in the Garfield Snooting Hall Club or "Schutzen Verein" as it was known at that time. Alwina was a practical nurse and midwife and she assisted at the birth of many future Garfield citizens.

In 1905, Edward and Alwina returned to Germany for a visit to their families. In their trunk they packed a cotton stalk to show their family in Germany because the family could not understand how cotton grew. The word for cotton translated in German was "tree wool" and they thought the cotton grew like a tree. When Edward and Alwina returned from their trip, they became American citizens in January of 1906.

In 1926, Edward and Alwina Block retired from farm life and sold their farm to one of their sons. They bought themselves a home on West Main Street in Yorktown where they continued to live until Edwards death on October 15, 1928. Their daughter, Emma Block Meischen and her daughters came to live with Alwina until her death on September 21, 1939. Edward and Alwina are both buried in the family burial plot in the Westside Cemetery in Yorktown, Texas.

To this union were born ten children, five sons and five daughters. Their son, Otto, the third child, was born while they lived near Breslaw. He was eight months old at the time of his death. Their daughter, Betty, was almost two years old when she was scalded by falling into a pot of hot water and died in July of 1902. She was the ninth child and fourth daughter and is buried in the family burial plot in Yorktown.

Also in the early years he owned and ran a dance hall and saloon in Upper Meyersville. Louis was noted as an excellent maker of wine, using wild mustang grapes. The children had to pick the grapes for him. The wine was used for giving to people as a treat.

At the time of Louis and Mary's death there were almost eleven hundred acres of land stocked with cattle, which was divided amongst the seven living sons and daughters. All of the land including the old home is still owned by his children or their heirs.

BLUNTZER, PETER

In July of 1842 agents of Count Henri Castro were in the Thur Valley of the Alsace region of France. They were looking for people to colonize a land grant that Castro had gotten in return for help he had given J. Pickney Henderson in his quest to get King Louie Phillipe of France to recognize Texas as a Republic. They had heard the residents of the Thur Valley were industrious, hard working people. Peter Bluntzer was among the 180 people recruited to go to what is now Castorville, Texas. His brother-in-law Jacques Winkler was also in Alsace, France. The first Bluntzer had come across the mountains from the Swiss canton of Zug in 1648, after the Thirty Years War. On October 17, 1826 he married Theresa Jacob family had been in the Valley for 6 generations. Her sister Geneieve was married to Jacques master of rather small size, for Galveston, Texas. From Galveston they went to Indianola where they loaded their goods on a 2 wheeled cart headed for Castorville. Theresa was riding on the cart and she fell off when they were a few miles from Victoria. Her hip was broken and the Bluntzers had to stay in Victoria. Peter began to explore the countryside. When he found the Coleto Creek and its surroundings he thought this was paradise and acquired some land in the Meyersville area.

By 1852 a number of relatives and friends in Alsace were ready to come to America. Peter Bluntzer returned to France. Families coming to Texas between 1852 and 1857 were the Bitterlys, Dreyers, Lutenbacher, Fuchs, Arnold, Haller, Luder, DeDear, Hans, Zengerle, Golly and many others. Over 300 people had left the villages of Kruth Oderen and Fellering by 1856. They were bound for Meyersville,

All of these families were Catholic and they wanted a church. They began to have Mass in the Bluntzer home. A priest from Victoria would come. (Story elsewhere in this book). The young girls in the area would go to the Bluntzer home the day before church and bake pies all day and arrange the furniture for Mass.

The Bluntzers had their share of sorrow. Their youngest daughter, Madeline, died sometime after they began their voyage. Their oldest son Leo, joined the army of "Old Zac Taylor" and was killed in the Battle of Buena Vista in Mexico in 1846.

The Bluntzers who survived the trip and the early years all married in DeWitt County. Geneveva Bluntzer, born March 20, 1829, married Michael Rehm. She moved to D'Hanis, Texas, where she is buried. Urban born in 1931, married Amelia Gerhardt in 1857. He is buried in St. Peter & Paul Cemetery in Meyersville. Nicholas was born in 1831 and married Justina Peters in 1858. He moved to San Patrico, Texas in the 1860's. Theresa was born in 1837. She married Frederick Harsdorff. After his death she married Joseph Hubersberger. She died in 1892. Fannie (Vanaranda) was born November 14, 1838. She married John Arnold in 1858. She died in 1904 and is buried at Meyersville. Sixtus Bluntzer was born August 6, 1841. He married Catherine Walter. She was Franz Zengerle's step-daughter. Sixtus died in 1895. He is buried in Meyersville.

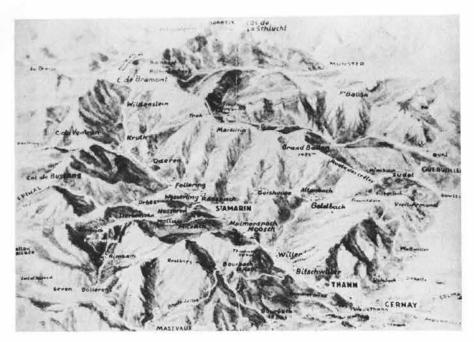

Theresa Bluntzer (Peter's wife) died shortly after the church at Meyersville was built. She was one of the first to be buried in the cemetery. Peter Bluntzer and his son Sixtus moved their cattle to San Patrico during a dry spell. While they were there Peter died. They buried him in a little country cemetery close to San Patrico.

During the Texas Bi-Centennial the Bluntzer family had a reunion in Meyersville, Texas. Five hundred and forty-nine descendants attended from five states and two foreign countries. A special guest was Claud Gewiss of Waterloo, Belgium who had helped research the family history and put us in touch with our families left in the Thur Valley.

Sixtus and Catherina Bluntzer

Sixtus Bluntzer, son of Peter Bluntzer and Theresa Jacob Bluntzer, was born August 6, 1841 (one source says 1838), in Oderen, Alsace Lorraine, France. He came to America with his mother and father in 1844 landing at Indianola. On September 29, 1869, he married Catherina Walters. They had three sons: Michael H., Peter Bernard, and Louis.

Sixtus Bluntzer was a Confederate soldier serving under Captain Robert Kleberg's company of Caleta Guards, 24th Brigade, Texas Militia. He was a farmer and rancher.

BLUNTZER, U.S. AND CARRIE OLENICK

U.S. (Bonnie) Bluntzer was born January 15, 1896 in DeWitt County near Upper Meyersville. More people knew him, and referred to him, by his nickname "Bonnie". He was the eldest son of Louis C. and Mary Bluntzer, whose story is given separately. He served in the Army during World War One in Europe. After the war ended he returned to DeWitt County and on May 1, 1923 he married Carrie Olenick in Sts. Peter and Paul Catholic Church in Upper Meyersville. Carrie Olenick, one of seven children of Peter and Anne (Neslony) Olenick, was born near Upper Meyersville on March 28, 1899. After marriage they lived on a rented farm between Weser and Ander in Goliad County, Texas. On June 17, 1924 Marvin C. Bluntzer was born and on July 19, 1927 Calvin James Bluntzer was born. Birth certificate lists Ander, Texas as birthplace of Marvin. Later the family moved to another rented farm between Ander and Schroeder, Texas. Marvin C. started school from this farm at a country school (Hoff School) about a mile across the pasture.

In the early 1930s the family moved back to DeWitt County on property owned by Louis C. Bluntzer. Louis C. came to own this property by paying off a debt to the Federal Land Bank for the people who had previously owned the property. These were years of the Great Depression and money was in short supply. U.S. moved the farm machinery, mules, cattle, feed, and many of the household items by wagon and mules to this new home in DeWitt County. A new frame two bedroom home had been built on the acreage. Many neighbors, friends, and kinfolks helped move on the final day which was in December. I remember dad (U.S.) stopping along the road where a man was riding a cultivator behind two mules in a field. As the man came to the turning row at the road dad got out of the car and went across the road to talk to him. After talking a few minutes dad came back to the car but we did not leave. The man turned the mules around and proceeded to the other end of the field which was adjoining a brushy pasture. After a while the man returned to where we were stopped and again dad went across the road to talk to him. While talking dad reached in his pocket and gave the man some money. The man reached under his coat and gave dad something wrapped in a newspaper. After everyone was unloaded at the new location dad brought out the newspaper wrapped package and opened it for a treat for all who helped move. The comments from everyone - "Some of the best moonshine I have ever tasted".

Susie Olenick, a partially crippled sister of mothers, lived with us at the time and did most of the cooking. Mother worked in the field with the men folks as did most of the women in those days. Cotton, corn, and feed for the livestock were grown along with a big garden. Dad loved his cattle and as long as I can remember he had a fine herd of cattle along with good horses and mules. He raised all of his mules and most of his saddle horses. Chickens, turkeys, and hogs were raised for meat. Home canning was done from the garden. At one time we were members of a butcher club. Taking turns, one member gave a beef each week which was butchered by a local country butcher and he would deliver fresh meat each Friday for the weekend. There was no electricity in the country as yet, so no refrigerators. Few families had radios to listen to and they were battery operated so weren't turned on too often.

Calvin and Marvin attended Meyersdale School, a two room country school, two miles away. We either walked or rode horseback. This was a ninth grade school and after completing her I rode the bus to Cuero for two years graduating in 1941. Calvin only finished the ninth grade at Meyersdale. Calvin remained at home on the farm until his untimely death on June 4, 1957. He died just short of his 30th. birthday of a cerebral hemorrhage. He had never married. Along with the farming and ranching he did much work in the local oil fields as a roust-a-bout, road work, bar tender in Yorktown, and as a truck driver, or wherever he was needed or could be used. In the summer of 1948 the house burned to the ground on a Sunday morning while everyone was away at church. Within the same month the neighbors house burned under the same circumstances. Arson was suspected. Marvin's mother, Carrie, died December 20, 1966 and his father, U.S., died in Cuero while living with Marvin and Rita on April 15, 1973, All of Marvin's family are buried in Sts. Peter and Paul Cemetery at Upper Meyersville. Marvin C. Bluntzer family story given separately.

Elmo William Boehl was a man of superior intellect, a man constantly in search of new experiences and further learning, a man of high moral fiber, and a man greatly respected and loved by those who knew him. Devoted to his Lord, his family, and his church, the life of Elmo Boehl served as an example which all mankind might wisely emulate.

Elmo William Boehl was born in Arneckeville, DeWitt County, Texas, on 21 January 1908. He was baptized at Zion Lutheran Church in Arneckeville on 12 April 1908 and received the baptismal name Elmo Emil Wilhelm. His baptismal sponsors were Willy Poehler, Anna Rath, and Emil Boehl. He was the son of William Frederick Boehl (b. 12 April 1869 Viesecke bei Kletzke, Potsdam Administrative District, Westprignitz District, now Perleberg District, Province of Brandenburg. Prussian-German Federal States, Germany; d. 4 March 1933 Cuero, DeWitt County; bur. Zion Lutheran Cemetery, Arneckeville; m. 19 November 1891 Arneckeville) and Johanna Boehl, nee Rath (b. 24 January 1871 Meyersville, DeWitt County; d. 24 March 1955 Arneckeville; bur. Zion Lutheran Cemetery, Arneckeville.) Elmo William Boehl died in Dallas, Dallas County, Texas, on 11 July 1959 and was buried at Restland in Dallas.

On 11 November 1932 in Arneckeville, Elmo William Boehl married Flora Friedericke Koehler, triplet daughters of Frederick Christian Koehler (b. 19 March 1879 Arneckeville; d. 21 May 1955 DeWitt County; bur. Zion Lutheran Cemetery, Arneckeville; m. #1: 29 June 1904 in DeWitt County; m. 2: 4 November 1915 Arneckeville to Friedericke Sager, sister of the deceased Caroline Koehler and Caroline Koehler, nee Sager (b. 29 September 1875 Arneckeville; d. 16 October 1912 Arneckeville; bur. Zion Lutheran Cemetery, Arneckeville). Flora Friedericke Boehl was born on 11 September 1909 in DeWitt County. She was baptized at Zion Lutheran Church in Arneckeville on 17 October 1909. Her sponsors were Friedericke Sager and Carl Schorlemmer. She was confirmed in the Lutheran faith at Zion on Palm Sunday 1924.

Two children were born to the marriage of Elmo William Boehl and Flora Friedericke Boehl, nee Koehler. John Elmo Boehl, Ph.D. was born 1 February 1941 in Corpus Christi, Nueces County, Texas; he died on 26 December 1977 in Garland, Dallas County, and was buried at Restland Cemetery in Dallas. Glenn Edward Boehl was born on 8 February 1943 in Corpus Christi; he married Beverly Jean Whaley (b. 20 November 1946 San Angelo, Tom Green County, Texas) on 9 July 1966 in Odessa, Ector County, Texas. John Elmo Boehl never married, and one child was born to the marriage of Glenn Boehl and Beverly Jean Boehl, nee Whaley: Charles William "Bill" Boehl (b. 4 June 1972 Dallas).

Elmo Boehl, this son of an immigrant farmer, was one of the most intelligent, industrious, and successful stars ever to rise above the horizon of DeWitt County. After having completed courses in English, Spanish, history, civics, general science, physical geography, chemistry, typing, algebra, plane geometry, solid geometry, and trigonometry, he was valedictorian of his class at Cuero High School, from which he graduated with highest honors in 1927. Elmo Boehl was offered scholarships to many colleges, including Trinity University, Howard Payne College, Abilene Christian College, John Tarleton Agricultural College, State Teachers Colleges of Texas, Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, St. Edward's University, and Brantley-Draughon College. However, his father forbade him entrance into any institution of higher learning because none of the other children had attended.

Elmo Boehl left the farm in 1929 and commenced his career, first working in Cuero for an abstractor and surveyor, W.R. Garrett, from whom he learned the fundamentals of land surveying, field notes preparation, property map preparation, and land title abstracting. In 1931 Elmo Boehl accepted a position in Cuero as draftsman and office assistant with the Texas State Highway Department, where his duties first consisted of assisting in the preparation of plans and estimates; however, after a few months, he served as assistant plant inspector on a concrete paving job. His salary at that time was $3.50 per day. In February of 1932 Elmo Boehl was transferred to Beeville, Texas, where his duties consisted of preparing plans and estimates for all types of highway construction. He prepared all right-of-way maps and deeds and occasionally performed inspection work on construction. His salary was then $100.00 per month.

Elmo William Boehl continued his work with the Texas State Highway Department until December of 1934, at which time he accepted a position as assistant county engineer of Bee County for $175.00 per month. He was then responsible for the survey and preparation of right-of-way deeds and of complete plans for a twenty-two mile W.P.A. highway project from Beeville to the Bee-Refugio County line. This project consisted of grading and drainage structures, caliche base course and asphaltic concrete pavement. He supervised the construction of grading and drainage structures but left before the job was completed to accept the position of assistant county engineer in Nueces County in March of 1936.

Elmo Boehl served as assistant county engineer of Nueces County from March 1936 until December of 1940 at a salary of $225.00 per month. During this period he was responsible for the making of surveys and for the preparation of plans on approximately two hundred miles of various types of roads. In addition, he prepared plans for over one hundred miles of roads in Bee and Jim Wells Counties. It was during his term with Nueces County that he received his professional engineer's license from the State of Texas in 1938.

From January of 1941 until July of that year, Elmo Boehl was engaged in private engineering work in and around Corpus Christi. This work consisted mainly of making land surveys, preparing subdivision plans, and laying out utility lines for various new subdivisions. In July of 1941 he was employed as field engineer by James Stewart and Company, contractors on the construction of an electrolytic zinc plant for the American Smelting and Refining Company at Corpus Christi. His duties consisted of staking, laying out of buildings, footings, foundations, grading, utilities, checking structural steel, etc. His salary was $50.00 per week at the beginning of the job and $70.00 per week at the completion of the job in October of 1942.

From November of 1942 until the latter part of February of 1943, Elmo Boehl was employed for $70.00 per week by E.B. Badger and Sons, contractors on the construction of the Sinclair Refinery in Corpus Christi. His duties were very similar to those at the zinc plant. Lack of materials and considerable changes in plans necessitated a drastic reduction in personnel. He was given the opportunity of going to another Badger job in Baytown, Texas; however, he elected to accept a position with Robert and Company, Inc., engineers and architects on the U.S. Naval Air Training Station at Corpus Christi, where he was employed from 1943 to 1944 as an engineer in the municipal department at a salary of $1.70 an hour. His duties consisted of drawing layout plans of roads, walks, and buildings for Chase Field, Beeville, and numerous extensions of other fields, such as taxiways, warm-up platforms, storm sewer extensions, etc.

From 1944 until 1946, Elmo Boehl was employed as a structural engineer by Gasoline Plant Construction Corporation in Corpus Christi. A relocation to Dallas in 1946 brought employment as a structural engineer at Process Engineers, Inc. From 1951 until his death in 1959, he was employed by Tears Engineers in Dallas as vice-president, mechanical design. He was a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

Elmo William Boehl was always an active, conscientious, and giving member of his church. He was confirmed at Zion Lutheran in Arneckeville on Palm Sunday, 19 April 1922, and was accepted as a member there on 8 January 1933. When he moved his family to Corpus Christi in 1936, Elmo and Flora Boehl transferred their church memberships from Zion to the First Lutheran Church of Corpus Christi, and they transferred their memberships to Christ Lutheran Church in Dallas when the family moved there in 1946. Elmo Boehl served his church as member of the council for four years, as Sunday School Superintendent for five years, and as President of the Men's Club for two years. He also sang in various church choirs for thirty years and was active on several building committees, on stewardship emphasis, and on evangelism and loyalty assignments. He was also scoutmaster for Christ Lutheran's B.S.A. Troop #570 for six Christ Lutheran Church of Dallas issued the following memorial resolution on 13 July 1959, just two days after Elmo Boehl's untimely death at the age of 51: "The just shall live by faith' — a God-inspired tenant of Lutheran faith was wonderfully made alive in the life of Elmo Boehl . . . For his life and the privilege of serving with Elmo, we praise a gracious God."

In DeWitt County, where the family had settled, on 15 September 1890,

William Frederick Boehl

Johanna (Rath) Boehl

in his Declaration of Intent to become a naturalized citizen of the United States, William Frederick Boehl stated that he arrived at the port of Galveston, Texas, on or about 15 November 1873. Having stated that he "doth absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign Prince, Potentate, State or Sovereignty whatever, and particularly to the Emperor of Germany," William Frederick Boehl was granted citizenship on 8 April 1899 in DeWitt County. He died of cancer on 4 March 1933 in Cuero, DeWitt County, and was buried in Zion Lutheran Cemetery in Arneckeville.

On 19 November 1891 in Arneckeville, William Frederick Boehl married Johanna Rath, daughter of Johann Peter Rath (b. 18 January 1847 Dettingen/Erms, Black Forest District,

When she was about two years old, reportedly in 1873, her family moved to Arneckeville. She was confirmed on Palm Sunday, 29 March 1885, in the Zion Lutheran Church in Arneckeville. Johanna Boehl died on 24 March 1955 in Cuero of cerebral vascular hemorrhage resulting from hypertensive cardiovascular disease and was buried in Zion Lutheran Cemetery in Arnecke-

The marriage of William Frederick Boehl and Johanna Boehl produced six children, all of whom were born in Arneckeville: John Frederick Walter Boehl (b. 19 August 1892; d. September 1966 Cuero; bur. Cuero; m. Frieda Gohlke); Edward Albert Boehl (b. 10 September 1893; d. 6 June 1913 Cuero; bur. William Frederick Boehl was an active member of Zion Lutheran Church in Arneckeville. He was confirmed there on 18 March 1883 and was accepted as a member when he signed the constitution on 24 April 1892. He was elected trustee at congregational meetings on 23 December 1894, on 27 December 1903, and in January of 1916. He was appointed secretary on 26 July 1896 and was elected to that position on 27 December 1908. He was recommended as treasurer at the congregational meeting of 4 January 1922 and was elected treasurer at the meeting of 3 January 1926. On 18 January 1928 he was elected as alternate delegate to the Synod meeting, and he was elected delegate on 27 December 1931. In addition to his church work, he was also a member of the Arneckeville Community Council of Defense during World War I, as well as a member of the Woodmen of the World.

Johanna Boehl left the following most detailed and interesting account of the last days of her beloved husband, William Frederick Boehl:

Dear Children, or whoever reads this,

Papa . . . died on March the 4th, 1933 just 11 months after his operation. He recuperated nicely all summer, was able to walk some. He plowed a few acres, moved some feed and raked it. In Nov. he seemed to be getting weaker; on Thanksgiving day, he and I went to church together for the last time. He took the flu and never did get over it entirely. He grew weaker and weaker. On the 18th of Jan. 1933 he took to bed and was not able to be up any more. He had no pain, just wasted away, would sleep mostly day and night. We rallied Dr. Booth on Jan 21st and again March 2nd. He advised us to bring him to the Hospital. We took him there in the morning March the 3rd. He was in a coma, did not seem to know what was going on, and could not speak. On the 4th of March he went quickly to sleep, at ten minutes after nine o'clock in the morning. He had a very large funeral but just as we were leaving the house, a terrible weather came up from the north. We had to hurry to lay him in his last resting place. People had to rush to their cars. Then it began to rain. It rained so hard the creeks were up. It was such a pity. People came from far and near. The pall bearers were: Henry Sager, Rudolph Hartman, Otto Wolf, R. Waldeck, Adolph Hagens, Albert Wolf. Rev. E. Meier officiated at the last rights.

Gertrude still lives on the Boehm "home place."

BOEHM, JOSEPH "JOE" AND EMELIA (JUENGER)

F88

Joe Boehm was the son of Franz and Theresia (Boenish) Boehm. Franz Boehm was born in Austria, November 11, 1830 and died April 11, 1906 in Indianapolis, Indiana. Theresia (Boenish) Boehm was born October 5, 1832 in the little village of Bortchendorf, Austria and died January 6, 1905 at Indianapolis, Indiana. Nine children were born to Franz and Theresia in Bielau, a little village called Wagstat, near Vienna, Austria. The children were: 1) Mary (Boehm) Feilhauer; 2) Augusta (Boehm) Weisenberger; 3) Anna (Boehm) Fissel; 4) Frank II who married Caroline Schneck; 5) Joseph Joe who married Emelia Juenger; 6) Raymond who married Josephine Lehman; 7) Ludwika (Boehm) Kistner; 8) a son who drowned in a river in Austria; and the ninth child is not known.

Mary the oldest child did not come to America. She married and her family did not want to come. Some of the older children came to America before the parents, Then they encouraged their folks to come to America, also.

In 1885 the folks and the rest of the family decided to come to America. Joe was nineteen years old which was the age all the boys had to join the Military Service in the old country. His folks had to plead with the military to let their son come along to America. Finally they came over by boat and landed at Galveston, Texas. They journeyed overland and settled in Schulenburg. The home that they built there was a large two storied house and was still standing in 1974. Some of the children moved to Indianapolis, Indiana to a cooler climate which they were used to in the old country. Later the parents joined their children in Indianapolis.

Joe stayed in Schulenburg and married Emelia Juenger. She was the daughter of Anton Juenger who was born February 2, 1829 in a small village called Klein Peterdorf, Austria. Anton never came to America. Emelia's mother was Rosina (Schindler) Juenger who was born November 21, 1828 in Heinzendorf, Austria. She came to America and died January 27, 1909 and is buried in the Lindenau Cemetery.

Joseph "Joe" Boehm was born April 18, 1866 and died September 18, 1948. On October 26, 1892, Joe and Emelia Juenger were married. Emelia was born October 16, 1872 and died June 27, 1941. Soon after their marriage the couple moved to Shiner, Texas where they lived for a year. In 1893 they moved to Lindenau, Texas. They lived on a farm in a house with two rooms and a porch. The house was owned by Elenora and Frank Brockhaus. Later the Boehms bought the farm and lived there until their deaths. They had nine children: 1)

Selma Boehm was born June 13, 1893 and married Joe Till (1888-1981); 2) Erwin Boehm was born July 20, 1894 and married Ida Duevel (1897-1984); 3) Edna Boehm was born February 20, 1896 and died October 30, 1977. She married Walter Ummelman (1896-1982); 4) Hilda Boehm was born June 23, 1897 and died in 1984. She married Ed Sharke (1895-1982); 5) Sophie Boehm was born April 10, 1899 and married Leo Hoffman (1901-); 6) Hertha Boehm was born August 1, 1901 and married E.F.H. "Ed" Morganroth (1898-); 7) Irma Boehm was born April 23, 1907 and died in 1987. She married Edgar Natho (1911-); 8) Edmund "Eddie" Boehm was born February 20, 1910 and died November 11, 1980. He married Gertrude Natho (1916-); 9) Agnes "Aggie" Boehm was born May 2, 1915 and married Werner Afflerbach (1910-1975).

The Boehms moved to Lindenau in a wagon pulled by two horses. They did not have very much, just what they needed and could move on a wagon. Some things that they brought were: a wood stove, few pots and pans, eating utensils, table, few chairs, trunks, bed and little bedding, wash tub, wash kettle, washboard, few chickens, few geese, hogs, a cow or two, hand plow, wood barrels, stone crocks and a cross cut saw.

In Lindenau the land was cultivated, a little more each year, the children grew, and the Boehms prospered.

BOHMAN FAMILY

F8

A.J. Bohman, M.D.

The Bohman family of Cuero are relative newcomers to DeWitt County having lived in the area a mere fifty years. They have, however, been active in civic affairs during those years and have had some impact on the life of the community of Cuero.

Alfred John Bohman was born on February 16, 1911 in the town of Shiner, Texas in Lavaca County. He was the second son of Johanna Othold and John Frederic Bohmann. He attended the Shiner public schools and graduated from Shiner High School in 1928. Upon graduation he was sent to Schreiner Institute in Kerrville, Texas. In later years, he consistently referred to it as "reform" school, perhaps because it was a military school and he spent many an hour on guard duty walking off demerits.

Bernice D. Bohman

In 1931, having graduated from "reform" school with an Associate of Arts degree, he enrolled at the University of Texas at Austin. He completed his premedical studies there, and went on to Texas University School of Medicine in Galveston. Treatment for a childhood injury sustained while playing with holiday fireworks had so impressed him with the practice of medicine that he had decided to be a doctor. He received his M.D. degree in 1935 and subsequently interned at Hillcrest Hospital in Tulsa, Oklahoma. At the age of twentyfive he established his first practice in the little town of Nordheim, Texas, in DeWitt County. He practiced there from 1936 to 1939 when he moved to Cuero.

It was in Nordheim that A.J. Bohman (he was generally referred to by his initials) met his future wife. A native of San Antonio, Bernice Marie Dullnig came to Nordheim in 1937 as a first year teacher. Educated in the Catholic schools of St. Joseph's Academy and Our Lady of the Lake College in San Antonio, she had received her Bachelor of Arts degree and teaching certificate the previous spring. Miss Dullnig was a member of a pioneer San Antonio family, the oldest of the three children of Veronica Teich and Allen Jesse Truax-Dullnig. Dr. Bohman and Miss Dullnig were married in March of 1941 and established their home in Cuero at the end of the school year.

That year saw the atrocity of Pearl Harbor and the U.S. military involvement in World War II. Dr. Bohman volunteered and was commissioned a Lieutenant, Junior Grade, in the U.S. Navy. He was rejected for active service because of a medical problem. He spent the war years building up his medical practice and, in the process, acquiring ownership of a Cuero hospital, originally Reuss Memorial Hospital. (see hospital section)

A.J. Bohman was always a believer in progress, in keeping up with the times. In 1949, he built the first medical clinic in Cuero on property adjacent to the hospital. Dr. F.A. Prather of Runge who had recently returned from service in the U.S. Army joined him. Dr. Bohman owned and operated the hospital until 1957 when he converted it to a Foundation. The Cuero Hospital Foundation was dissolved in 1970 when the new Cuero Community Hospital was opened. Dr. Bohman was one of the chief promoters of the Community Hospital. All assets of the Cuero Hospital Foundation, some two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, were given to the new facility in the names of the Bohman Clinic doctors and the trustees of the Foundation. At that time the members of the medical staff were: Dr. F.A. Prather, Dr. O.E. Hall Jr., Dr. Raymond Reese, and Dr. A.J. Bohman. The Foundation directors were: Mr. E.T. Summers Jr., Mr. Fain McDougal, Mr. W.L. Ferguson, Mr. Jimmie Reiffert, and Mr. Nathan Post. Dr. Bohman subsequently demolished the old hospital building and used the property for much needed parking space for the clinic. He continued to practice until shortly before his death in February of 1983.

Dr. Bohman was a member of the American Medical Association, the Texas Medical Association, the Southwest Surgical Congress, and the Post Graduate Medical Assembly of South Texas. He was a Life Fellow of the American Society of Abdominal Surgeons.

The Bohmans enjoyed a rich and satisfying life in Cuero. They were the parents of four daughters: Veronica Frances, Joan Marie, Sonja Bernice, and Barbara Helen. Though Dr. Bohman might have welcomed a son he was never heard to say so. On the birth of his fourth girl he was quoted in the Cuero Record as saying that four queens were hard to beat. Dr. Bohman did play poker, as well as golf.

Bernice Bohman, though a city-bred girl, relished the small-town friendliness of Cuero. She was, and is, active in the DeWitt County Historical Commission and the DeWitt County Historical Museum. During the famous Turkey Trots, which Cuero held at odd intervals, she served on various committees. All of the Bohman girls participated in one or the other of the celebrations and their beautiful costumes are still exhibited on occasion.

In 1946 when Mrs. Bohman's father died, Mrs. Vera Dullnig, mother of Mrs. Bohman, moved to Cuero. She made her home with the family for thirteen years. She died in 1959 and is buried in San Antonio.

The Bohman children were educated in St. Michael's Catholic School and Cuero Public High School. All are honor graduates of Cuero High. Barbara was valedictorian of her graduating class, 1970. Upon graduation they chose to attend the University of Texas at Austin from which they all hold degrees. Veronica (Ronnie) and Joan like their father were interested in scientific studies. Joan was elected to Phi Beta Kappa her senior year. Sonja (Sunny) and Barbara were more inclined to literature. They chose to major in journalism and have pursued careers in that field.

All the Bohman daughters are married and have presented Dr. and Mrs. Bohman with twelve grandchildren. Veronica (Mrs. Richard Rushing) has five children, three girls and two boys. Tragically, her second child, John Bohman Rushing, died of leukemia at age seven. The Rushings live in Houston, Texas. Joan (Mrs. Theodore A. Leslie) who returned to Cuero to live shortly after the death of her father, is the mother of two girls and one boy. Sonja (Mrs. Steve McKinnon) and Barbara (Mrs. Darrell Barger) each have two girls. Sonja lives in Houston; Barbara, in Corpus Christi.

The Bohman grandchildren are: Veronica Joan, Catherine Maureen, Kristen Bernice, and Richard Raymond Rushing; Sonya Elizabeth, Robert Bohman and Annemarie Frances Leslie; Lanie Marie and Barbara Louise McKinnon; Johanna Bernice and Vera Elizabeth Barger.

Mrs. Bohman maintains the family home in ${\it Cuero}$.

(My daughters will remonstrate with me for having written as much as I have about them. I shall tell them this is not written for them but for my grandchildrens' grandchildren.)

BOLDT, CHRISTIAN FRIEDRICH (FRITZ), SR.

F90

Friedrich Boldt was born in December 1820 in Alt Haferwiese Prussia. He spent his early years in Prussia where education and military service were compulsory. He married Christine Wilhelmine Ernestine Kannewiesher who was born in 1822.

Due to the revolution in the Germanic regions in 1848, many people sought peace in America. Societies were formed by families who would immigrate together on the same ship and form settlements in their new home. In 1855 Friederich and his older brother Christian joined one of these societies and traveled by way of Berlin to Bremen. They boarded the ship "Sophie" and sailed to Indianola, Texas. They traveled by wagon train from Indianola to a German settlement which was already established at Yorktown in DeWitt County.

Fritz was 34 years old, his wife was 33, and their children were Albertine aged 9, Christian 7, and Wilhelm 5 years old. Fritz reportedly purchased one thousand acres at fifty cents an acre. Two more children were born after they had built a homestead in Yorktown. When the children married, Fritz gave each of them a home and 200 acres of land.

Fritz received his naturalization paper on July 29, 1867. He was a skilled farmer, a blacksmith, and served as the local veternarian. Wilhelmine died in 1874 and was buried in the Callahan burial ground near Cuero. Fritz did not remarry and when he lost his sight, he went to live with his daughter Albertine and her husband, George Wendel.

The children of Fritz and Wilhelmine were Albertine (1845-1914) m. George Wendel (1842-1924); Christian Frederick, Jr. (1848-1929) m. BRADEN, GEORGE AND CECILIA WEIGELT

George Braden and Cecilia (Weigelt) 1899

George Joseph Braden, a tall, thin man with piercing blue eyes, was born September 10, 1865 in Colorado County, Texas to John Baptiste Braden and Julia Pieper. He was the fourth of six children, the other being John Jr., 1858; Elisabeth, 1860; George, 1865; Adolph, 1867; and Frances, 1869.

George's father immigrated to Texas from the town of Bingen, Germany, which is situated on the South side of the Rhine River, not far West from Mainz, Germany. Most think of the Braden name, especially in Texas, as being German, but in fact it is known that the Bradens from Bingen, Germany had actually emigrated from England to Germany during the 1600s' the name being Braddon or Bradon.

George's mother, Julia Pieper, was born in the Republic of Texas in 1840 to Peter Pieper and Elisabeth Koetter, both from the Munster, Westphalia area in Germany. Peter Pieper had immigrated to Texas in 1833 and received a league of land from the Mexican Government; his land being situated on Cummings Creek in Colorado County.

George Braden lived with his parents and his brothers and sisters on their farm in Colorado County, attending the Catholic Church at Mentz, and school at Bernardo. When George was 7 years old his mother, Julia Pieper Braden died, leaving her husband with 6 children to raise; three of them being not more than babies. George's father was married again, to a woman from home town of Bingen in Germany. Her name was Theresa Schmitt, the widow of Samuel McBride, a shipbuilder at Indianola. Theresa was living in Indianola with several of her children, who soon became part of the Braden household in Colorado Co.

When George was quite young he worked for the Stafford Brothers, cattle barons of the Colorado Co. area, as a wrangler. Later in life George regaled his grandchildren with stories about his "wrangling days". George soon had enough cowboying and at age 16 went to San Antonio to work for his cousin, Edward Braden. Edward was a great deal older than George and was already well established in San Antonio, Texas, operating a hotel, called the "Braden House", a livery stable and a growing construction company. The Braden Construction Company built many commercial buildings of note in San Antonio. George, knowing much about horses and their antics, was put in charge of the livery stable and the draft horses used in the construction business.

On October 27, 1891, George Braden married Cecilia Weigelt at Our Lady of Lourdes Catholic Church in Victoria, Texas. Cecilia was the daughter of John Weigelt and Margaret Wendel. Cecilia was born of German immigrant parents on Christmas Eve, 1870, in Colorado County, Texas. In 1875 the Weigelt family, that is Cecilia, her parents and her sister, Magdalena, moved to Victoria County, Texas. Cecilia and her sister attended Nazareth Academy in Victoria and Cecilia's two brothers, Phillip and Frank, born after the Weigelts moved to Victoria County, attended another parochial school.

Soon after George and Cecilia were married, her father, John Weigelt, decided it would be advantageous to move from the Victoria prairie to a location with more trees for wood and better farm land. John Weigelt purchased 600 acres of land in 1892 in the Daniel Davis League on the West side of the Guadalupe River at Hochheim. The first few months were spent building a house for Cecilia's parents. George Braden and Cecilia Weigelt would spend the next fifteen years in a small house already on the place.

The first child, Magdalena, was born to George and Cecilia in July, 1892. Julia was born Jan. 5, 1895, followed by Phillip in 1896. Anne was born May 15, 1898, then John in 1900 and Joseph in 1902. The last child was George Sylvester, born in 1905.

The Braden family, like most families living in the lowlands along the river, was plagued by mosquitos. If not mosquitos, it was floods or droughts. After the death of their first child of typhoid fever and Julia's contracting Malaria. George and Cecilia decided enough was enough. George Braden bought land on the high side of the Guadalupe River at Hochheim and moved his family there, into an old house built many years earlier. The house was not so fine, but it was high and dry and the threat of mosquito-borne disease was lessened somewhat. The Braden family lived in this old house several years until Cecilia declared that they needed a larger house. The last residence of the George Braden family is still standing in Hochheim where the road to Dreyer intersects Hwy. 111. The old house the Bradens first lived in at Hochheim was home to several more Braden decendants, the last being Donald and Jeane Bitterly. The old house was finally torn down to make way for a new one in 1966.

George Braden continued to purchase land in and around Hochheim, accumulating enough so that each of his children would have a sizeable plot. The Bradens engaged in farming and the development of several large pecan orchards in the bottomlands of the Guadalupe River

George and Cecilia were faithful members of St. Ann Catholic Church on the Hochheim prairie. They had been instrumental in organizing it and both are buried there in the cemetery beside the Church.

Julia Braden married Charles Bitterly and had four children; Charles Braden, John William, Lucille Marie and Donald George. Phillip Braden married Maggie Mae Calliham and they had five children; Patricia, Frances, Cecilia and twins, James and Jerome. Anne Braden married Curtis Johnson and had one son who died in infancy. John Braden married Mary Onhaizer and they had one son, John Braden, Jr. Joseph Braden never married. George Sylvester Braden married Willie Mae Schwab and had four children; Ann, Faye, Margaret and a son who died in infancy. All the Braden children continued to live at Hochheim on land purchased by their father except Joseph, who has lived most of his adult life in Austin, Texas. George Braden, who was bothered many years by asthma, died Jan. 31, 1953 and Cecilia Weigelt Braden died five years later on January 27, 1958.

(Emilie's father and other members of her family also lived in this area) They resided there until 1890 when they purchased a parcel of land, located on the Gonzales-DeWitt County line (acreage in both counties) in the Cheapside Community, for $4150. They were residing in DeWitt County when their daughter Ella was born. By 12 June 1892 when son Emil was born, they were living in Gonzales

County where their home was built and where they spent the rest of their lives (this farm was later purchased by their son Edmund). When they moved out of the big home Reinhold built a smaller house for them which after Emilie's death was sold, and moved to Westhoff. It still stands there on the highway and they sell eggs on the front porch!

Reinhold was a farmer, carpenter, sold books and windmills, and at one time also owned some land in Runnels County. He was one of several men who paid for the land for the Ruppert School which his children and grandchildren attended along with others from DeWitt and Gonzales Counties. The last few years of his life he was blind, and his wife would sew along the lines of a tablet, and by feeling the lines, he could write letters and corresponded with his brother Herman's family in Needville.

Reinhold and Emilie had 9 children; an infant daughter, Herman, and Richard, Selma born 30 January 1880, married on 26 December 1898 Carl Schroeder of Dryer born 18 March 1874 in Hanover, Blecfide, Germany.

Edmund Carl Reinhold, born 16 December 1894, married on 1 December 1915 Charlotte Hermine Friederike Gerhardine Norma Fehner, born 3 October 1897 in Gonzales County.

Mathilda, Ella, Emil, and Edmund bought acreage from their parents. The Schrades sold their farm to the Bressels and moved their family to Orange Grove. Emil sold his farm to the Boysens and moved his family to Gonzales Co. for a while and then to Victoria. The Schroeders lived at Dryer for a few years and then settled at Westhoff.

Reinhold and Emilie are buried in the Ruppert Cemetery in Gonzales Co.

BRAMLETTE, J.D. JR.

James DeWitt Bramlette, Jr. (1916-1979), the only son and second child of J.D. Bramlette, Sr. (1880-1967) and Selma Georgia Mitchell Bramlette (1893-1979), was born in Teague, Texas. His father's people had come to central Texas from Georgia. His grandfather, Virgil Mitchell, (1869-1934) came from Arkansas. His grandmother, Sarah Louetta Adams, was born in Gonzales County. She lived for a time at Terryville which was in Gonzales County at the time.

J.D. Bramlette, the father, was a school man so J.D., Jr., and his two sisters, Sarah Jo Buenning (1914-) and Jane Bramlette Hughart (1920-) attended schools at Stephenville, McAllen, Kingsville, and Comanche. J.D. Bramlette, Jr. was graduated from Henrietta M. King High School in Kingsville in 1933. He entered Baylor University that same year and stayed only a short time and transferred to A&I University at Kingsville. He finished college at Howard Payne at Brownwood in three years by attending summer and winter sessions.

After his graduation, he returned to his home in Stephenville. After a brief stint at teaching in a little community of Walnut Springs, he got a job with Higgenbotham General Merchandise in Stephenville. While there he began to help out in the undertaking part of the store. After a time the undertaker there persuaded him to go to mortuary school in Dallas to get his license, and lent him the money to do it on. While he was in Dallas, the terrible New London School explosion occurred and J.D. was sent there to help.

After getting his embalming and funeral director licenses, he went back to Higgenbothams at Stephenville for a time. In 1937, at the age of 21, he came to Cuero and applied for a job with Freund Funeral Home, which was owned then by Mrs. Josie Freund and managed by Bob Heyer.

In 1940 he was married to Merle Rose Fischer (1916-), the daughter of Arthur Charles Fischer (1887-1956) and Mary Will Blackwell Fischer (1891-1977).

In 1941 he purchased two lots in the middle of the third block of E. French Street from Mrs. Joseph Sheppard. He built two small houses on them. He rented one to Captain Gerald Fitzgerald, the commanding officer of Brayton Field, and sold the other to O.A. and Cleo Zimmerman.

J.D. and Merle had moved from their first home (the old Milligan house on Sarah St.) to her mother and father's home at 608 Clinton Street. Merle was teaching at the time in Concrete. She had taught two years at John C. French (monthly salary $90.00) but had to resign when she married because of a depression ruling against married women teachers. After the second World War started, the ruling was rescinded or forgotten and later she taught in the Cuero school system again.

In 1942 J.D. volunteered for the army and was inducted at Ft. Sam Houston. He had his basic training at Camp Roberts in California. Then he went to Officers Training School at Ft. Benning, Georgia and became a Second Lieutenant. Next he was assigned to Camp Ritchie, Maryland, which was the Army's G-2 or intelligence training camp. From there he went briefly to Fort Hamilton in New York and then in May 1944 was sent to the south of England for more schooling and the rigorous training that preceded the invasion of the continent. He was in the 29th Division.

On June 6, 1944 when the invasion began, he went in on Omaha Beach in Normandy. He was able to get off the beach but on June 13th he was shot through the shoulder by a sniper. He was found and taken to the beach where a Colonel Shep recognized him and got him on a boat to England and a hospital there. After some months there, he was flown back to the U.S.A. in July 1944, and to McKlosky General Hospital in Temple, Texas. Shortly he was allowed to come home to finish his recuperation. He had a complete recovery and finish his military career at a desk in Ft. Sam Houston. He received his discharge in July of 1945. His decorations and citations were: The Purple Heart, EAME Campaign Medal with one Bronze Star, Distinguished Unit Citation, and the Bronze Star Medal.

After his discharge, J.D. came back to Cuero and Freund Funeral Home. Bob Heyer had died while J.D. was overseas. J.D. became the manager. Then in 1946 Mrs. Freund sold the business to him.

J.D. had other business interests. For a time he sold air conditioners. Cuero at that time had very few air conditioners. By the time J.D. quit the business, virtually all the business section was air-conditioned. He also bought the O.K. Courts from Julius Gohmert, his wife's grand-uncle. Later he sold that to the Coppedge twins, Coot and Dick.

In 1948 J.D. and his wife adopted a daughter, Lou Mitchell Bramlette (1948-) who later married Richard Egg (1948-) of Meyersville, Texas. They have two daughters, Mary Elizabeth (1972) and Laura Mitchell (1974).

In 1951 they adopted a son, James DeWitt Bramlette, III (Jay) who in 1972 married Avis Ann Cochran. They have three daughters: Avis Lynn (1974), Amanda Rose (1978) and Alexis Ann (1982). Jay is now married to Cheryl Roth Blaine (1948-).

In 1950 J.D. had bought 20 acres of land on the old road to San Antonio by Schleicher Bridge. He and his wife remodeled the old farm house there, intending it for recreation. They were soon spending summer and winter there. When the daughter reached school age, they enlarged and remodeled the house at 304 E. French and moved back in it for the school months.

As a landowner, J.D. had one farming venture. He and Fletcher Houston decided to grow watermelons. That taught him all he cared to know about farming and marketing. After that he tried cattle and leased more land to raise cattle. Later, when he bought the Lewis Kaye place on the road to Concrete, he ran cattle there.

In the mid fifties, J.D. was approached by Texas Eastern Gas Pipeline Company and asked to build a warehouse they could lease. He bought the land and built the warehouse on the Victoria Highway.

By 1974, J.D. was thinking of retirement. He wanted to continue in the funeral business just long enough for his son, Jay to learn it. Jay, in the meantime had gotten his license and was working at Freund Funeral Home. In March of 1975, while J.D. was conducting the funeral service of Barney Finch in Nixon, he suffered a heart attack. This was followed by a stroke which left him partially paralyzed. Jay had to take over the business completely. J.D. sold the Kaye place.

J.D. was active in Cuero's community life. He was a member and past president of the Chamber of Commerce. In 1971 he was chosen Citizen of the year, by the Chamber. He was a charter member and past president of the Cuero Lions Club. He served as president of the United Fund and as a director of the Cuero Hospital Foundation. He was a member of the American Legion, V.F.W., Cuero Masonic Lodge and Knights of Pythias. He was chairman of the Turkey Trot in 1947. He was chosen Sultan of the Turkey Trot in 1956. He was a member of the First Baptist Church.

BRANTLEY, ARNOLD FAMILY

Arnold Henry Brantley, the son of John David (Tobe) Brantley and Susan Woods Brantley, was born November 30, 1864, in Shiloh, near the Woods community, between Yorktown and Cuero, Texas. Arnold was the greatgrandson of Zadock and Minerva Cottle Woods, who were among Austin's Old Three Hundred. Zadock Woods was killed at the Salado Creek Battle during the Texas Revolution. Arnold is the grandson of Norman and Jane Boyd Wells Woods. Norman was captured at the Salado Creek Battle and force marched to Perote Prison in Mexico where he later died.

Rena Rebecca Scott was born on June 15, 1868 the daughter of Warren B. Scott and Eliza Russell Scott. Rena's parents eloped during the Civil War and kept moving so that Warren's induction papers wouldn't find him. Warren's parents were for the North and Eliza's parents for the South. Warren, however, did journey to New Orleans where he joined with the Union forces and he served for several years. He was wounded and later received a pension from the government. Warren's father and brother were among those captured and hung outside of Comfort, Texas by the Confederate soldiers because they were loyal to the North.

Arnold Brantley and Rena Scott married at Shiloh, Texas on April 29, 1891. Rena had come to DeWitt County as a teacher at Shiloh, and they married on the last day of school. The young couple farmed around Cuero and Yorktown and in 1912 they bought a farm outside of Davy where they built a large two story bungalow-type house. Here they farmed for several years until moving to San Marcos and Yorktown where they operated meat markets.

To this union were born eight children. They are Susan Eliza Brantley Block, Royal Lester (Roy) Brantley, Ada Belle Brantley Block, Raymond Henry Brantley, Margaret Ruth (Mag) Brantley Block, Arthur Howard (Otto) Brantley, Clara Reed Brantley Parr, and Harold Clayton Brantley. Three of the Brantley sisters married three Block brothers.

BRANTLEY, GEORGE DAVID

F98

George David Brantley (Dave) was born April 4, 1895 near Yorktown, Texas. He was the son of Thomas Jefferson Brantley and Jessie Jay Canion. His father was the son of John David and Susan Mary Woods Brantley. Dave grew up on a farm and since he was the oldest of twelve children, he learned responsibility at an early age. He was a serious student for the eight years he was able to attend school.

He was called into the army in 1918 and was trained in automobile mechanics at Camp Mabry in Austin, Texas. He was proud of his time in service and was a life member of the American Legion. In December of 1918, he returned home and worked at an ice plant in Yoakum until August of 1919 when he was appointed as a rural mail carrier on Route 3. His starting salary was $1620 a year and his car maintenance was his responsibility. On his first route there were 75 mail boxes and 90 families. When he retired in 1965, he was the carrier on Route 4 and servicing 340 boxes and 1200 patrons. He enjoyed his work, cared about the people and their families, and was always willing to help any way he could. During his 45 years as a rural mail carrier, he used 23 different automobiles and travelled over a million miles without an accident.

In 1922 he bought two lots at the corner of Morgan Ave. and Villa St. in Cuero and had Roscoe Smith built a cottage. On January 10, 1923, he married Mary Louise Thigpen, daughter of Samuel Edward and Edna Wilborne Thigpen. After a wedding trip to Austin, they moved into their new home. By April of 1925, both of Mary Louise's parents had died, and her younger sisters, Bernice, Gladys and Irene Thigpen came to live with them. Dave and Louise had one child, Marilyn Jean, who was born Feb. 8, 1927. In 1929 Dave's mother died and in 1930 his father died, leaving Rollie who was 13, and Olena who was only 10 years, old. Dave assumed some of the responsibility for them.

Dave's life was centered around his work, his family, and his friends, He was a member of the First Methodist Church, IOOF. and the Retired Rural Carriers Association. He was interested in history, Dewitt County and Cuero and was never comfortable when he found himself too far from home. David died November 25, 1972 at the age of 77. He was survived by his wife of almost 50 years, one daughter Mrs. Andrew J. Tidwell and three grandchildren: Terran J. Tidwell, Tara Lynn Tidwell, and Teresa Louise Tidwell.

BRANTLEY, JOHN DAVID

John David Brantley

John David (Tobe) Brantley was born in Mississippi the 24th of April in 1839. He was the son of Nancy Jane McFarland and Thomas R. Brantley. We assume that he was born in Kemper County because of the document that his mother carried with her to Texas when she came here in 1842. This document asks for appraisal of the property of Thomas Brantley who is presumed to be deceased. It was never filed with the county court and acted upon. It is dated December 5, 1838, prior to John David's birth.

To date (1989), I and other Brantley researchers have found only one Thomas Brantley in Kemper County, Mississippi. This Thomas was born in North Carolina in 1809. He was the son of Jesse who was the son of Thomas of Northampton County, North Carolina. The Brantleys are descended from Edward b. 1615 and d. 1688 in Isle of Wight County, Virginia who came to the American Colonies in 1638.

John David came to Montgomery County, Texas, in 1842 with his mother and his grand-parents, James and Margaret Dial McFarland. In 1848 they moved to the Shiloh Community in DeWitt County. His mother, Nancy Jane, had married Wyett Anderson in Harris County, Texas on January 7, 1847. They lived nearby. Wyett Anderson was born in Louisiana and his father had been in Texas by 1817. Nancy Jane was born in Newberry County, South Carolina, in 1808.

John David enlisted in the Shiloh Home Guard when it was formed in July of 1861. In 1862, he was commissioned a Lieutenant in Company K of the 24th Regiment of the Texas Cavalry in the Confederate Army. He was taken prisoner at Fort Hindman, Arkansas in January of 1863 and released in an exchange of prisoners from City Point, Virginia two and a half months after his capture. The remainder of the war, he appears to have been free to change his command. His record shows that he served two months with Co. K and two and a half months as a prisoner. After resigning his commission in September of 1863, there is no evidence that he enlisted in the ranks.

After the war, his letters and bills of sale indicated that he was gone from home much of the time. He travelled through the South trading in livestock. Susan died in the fall of 1870 at the age of 29. She is buried in the Woods Cemetery near Yorktown. Susan and John David had five children: 1) Margaret Jane b. 1860, married Sam Garrett, 2) Thomas Jefferson b. 1863, married Jessie Jay Canion, 3) Arnold Henry b. 1864, married Rena Rebecca Scott, 4) Warren b. 1867, married Laura Ernest, 5) Mary Caroline b. 1869, married Andrew Fayette Schilling.

By 1880, John David is in Gonzales County, Texas with his children. Sam Garrett and Margaret Jane are living in the next dwelling. John David moved to Babyhead in Llano County, Texas in the spring of 1882. Relatives who lived in DeWitt County moved away in the 1870's and 1880's due to the adversity caused by the Sutton-Taylor Feud. Since John David was a witness at Buck Taylor's wedding, it can be assumed that he had an interest in that action. Anda Brown, Thomas Glimp, A.J. Frazier and Robert Insall who had all married Woods women left the county and moved to Burnet County, Texas.

John David died October 13, 1907 and is buried in Brown School Cemetery near Fredonia, Texas in McCulloch County.

BRANTLEY, ROLLIE B.

Rollie B. Brantley was born July 13, 1917 near Cheapside, Texas. He was the son of Thomas J. Brantley and Jessie Jay Canion. His mother died when he was twelve years old and his father died a year later. He lived with his older brothers and sisters and graduated from Cuero High School.

After graduating he went to work for his brother making hamburgers and selling drinks in the Spanish Garden which was a 10'x10 building located under an oak tree at the back of the lot where the Doll House is today. In 1936, Raymond Cook built a small building which was a down-scaled house and Rollie moved his business into this building. It had the appearance of a doll house and Polly Howerton won the contest for a name for the restaurant. It has retained this name, The Doll House, since then.

In 1939 Rollie married Claire Duckworth, daughter of George W. and Della Hallet Duckworth. Rollie and Claire have two daughters, Barbara Lee b. 1946 and Margaret Helen b. 1953. Margaret has two sons, Ryan and Marshall Quigley.

Through the years, Rollie has had many interests other than his business. He served two years in the Army Air Force during World War II. He was active in the Cuero Aviation Club and the Lions Club. His hobbies have included flying, photography, car restoration, sailing, and music. At present he still plays for private dances with Tommy Vanek's orchestra.

BRAUNE, ED FAMILY

Seated: Sophie (Schlosser) and Egon Braune. Standing: Allen Braune, Kathleen (Braune) Birchfield, and Clifford Braune.

Edward Braune was born in Germany in 1865 and immigrated to Texas with his brother Christian and wife in 1883. He settled in the Rogers Ranch Community of Caldwell County, located close to Lockhart. Here he married Marie Holter who died several years later and left him with a small child, Hedwig. In 1891, Ed married Agnes Schulz in Hortontown, Texas, near New Braunfels and they moved to Maxwell where Egon was born in 1892. They lived in other small towns in that area and in New Braunfels for about twelve years. During this time, all of their children were born, Hedwig (Newmann), Raymond, Egon, Irma (Sager), Norma (Karrer), and Berthold.

They moved to Rivera in about 1904 when the railroad was being completed to the valley. Ten acre lots were for sale to lure northerners to settle in South Texas and Ed planned to sell nursery stock to these folks to help establish their new places. The developers went broke, as did Ed's dreams, so he went further south to Sarita, where the family bought and operated a small hotel and plant nursery. This operation was not very successful because all of the surrounding land was owned by the King Ranch and their workers bought their goods from the ranch owned Commissary. The main customers they had were railroad workers and travelers. In 1907, the oldest daughter, Hedwig, married one of these railroaders, Charles Newmann, and they lived in Mercedes the rest of their lives.

In 1910, Ed and Agnes decided to leave Sarita and moved to Nordheim. Just as the Braunes were to move, their youngest son Berthold died. Ed was due to take possession of their farm in De Witt County, but he and the family escorted the body for burial in Lockhart. Ed sent his seventeen year old son, Egon, to Nordheim on another train. Egon stepped off of the train in a strange town and was directed to the seller of the farm, John Wolf, who took him out three miles where Egon stayed in a small shack until the rest of the family arrived. Egon lived on this place for the rest of his life.

The Braunes probably moved to Nordheim for several reasons: the lack of German speaking people in Sarita, the poor business in the area and possibly because of the warlike activity of Pancho Villa on the not too distant Mexican border.

Edward and Agnes bought the 192 acre farm four miles south of Nordheim which had been a small part of the Taylor Ranch in west De Witt County, located on the Manahuilla Creek. The farm home was not completed until 1911. During this time the family lived in a one room

In 1917, Egon married Sophie Schlosser and they had three children, Allen, Kathleen (Birchfield) and Clifford and they lived on this farm. During the Great Depression in 1932 part of the farm was lost because it was impossible to come up with one hundred forty four dollars per year for the mortgage payment. Egon lived on part of this farm until the time of his death in 1970. Sophie lived there until her death in 1971.

Descendants of the Braunes still own part of the original farm and at this writing Clifford and Dorothy (Feuerbacher) Braune and Cliff Ed and Licia (Linscomb) Braune still enjoy the weekends in that old farm home.

BREEDEN, CHARLES GOODWIN

F103

1860-1925

Charles Goodwin Breeden, a native son of Texas, was born in Victoria on January 27, 1860. He was the second son of Paul Hamilton Breeden (1830-1874), a captain in the Army of the Confederacy, and Mary Kibbe Breeden (1833-1901). He was named for a noted physician in early Victoria, Dr. Sherman Goodwin. The time and ambience of his childhood days. the threshold of the War Between the States and the environment of early frontier days in

Charles Goodwin Breeden

South Texas, undoubtedly exercised a material influence in shaping his strong character and

In the spring of 1875, on his fifteenth birthday, he came to the new town of Cuero to accept work in the printing office of The Cuero Weekly Star, then published by J.H. Tucker. Before leaving Victoria, he had acquired a proficiency in the printing trade in the office of The Victoria Advocate, published by Thomas A. Sterne.

In the year 1876 Mr. Breeden gave up his position with The Star and his association with newspaper work in order to accept employment with one of the most highly regarded men of the area, Mr. Otto Buchel, a merchant and banker. Breeden continued in Buchel's employ for twelve years, in a relationship of cordial good will which continued for a lifetime. In the year 1888 he accepted employment with the business firm of P.J. Willis and Brother.

In the following year, 1889, with his eldest brother, Walter Kibbe Breeden (1857-1931) and his brother-in-law, Robert Henry Wofford, he established the firm of Breeden Brothers, dealing in cotton, wool, pecans, sugar futures, agricultural implements, and groceries, at both wholesale and retail. This firm occupied a leading position in the economic life of South Texas for the next half-century.

So successful was the firm of Breeden Brothers that in 1911, in conjunction with his brother, Robert Perry Breeden (1869-1926) and the H. Runge Company, C.G. Breeden assumed leadership in the organization of the Breeden-Runge Wholesale Company, Charles Goodwin Breeden was the first president of this prestigious company, a position he held until his death on December 30, 1925. Breeden-Runge achieved a flourishing growth and became one of the first chain wholesale houses in South Texas. Branch houses were established in Kenedy, Alice, Yorktown and, for a time, in San Antonio. The counties covered by the company included Lavaca, Gonzales, DeWitt, Karnes, Wilson, Victoria, Jackson, Calhoun, Bee, Nueces, San Patricio, Jim Wells, Kleberg, Duval, Brooks, Jim Hogg, Live Oak, and Goliad.

Charles Breeden served as a director and vice-president of The First State Bank and Trust Company of Cuero. His judgment and advice were often sought and appreciated by his associates. He was interested in the Cuero Packing Company and other enterprises. Service to his community is exemplified by the fact that he served twice as a director of the Cuero Chamber of Commerce and was re-elected to serve again in that post. He was a charter member of the Cuero Rotary Club and served as a loyal member of the Jewel Lodge of the Knights of Pythias. He was an ardent member of the first firefighting company established in Cuero, the old "Stonewall Fire Brigade." He was a member of the Council of Defense during World War I, discharging those duties with kindness and consideration, yet with patriotic fidelity to his country.

Charles Goodwin Breeden was married to Mabel Claire Hall (1895-1974) on December 15, 1915. Two daughters were born to the union, Mabel Claire Breeden Bell (1916-1983) and Rosemary Kibbe Breeden Kokernot (b. 1919). In 1924 he purchased a home for his wife and family at 310 Terrell Street in Cuero, but died before the remodeling was completed and the house was occupied. Mr. Breeden was an Episcopalian and an admirer of Bishop Alexander Gregg, who reciprocated by jokingly calling Breeden "the little Bishop."

Charles Goodwin Breeden's contributions to the city of Cuero and to South Texas were those of a civic leader and businessman over a fiftyyear period. He helped the city to grow from a railroad stop on the Gulf, West Texas, and Pacific Railroad Company to a prosperous and thriving community. He never held a public office but was known for his devotion to Cuero, the State, and the Nation. The Cuero Record summarized his successful life as follows:

He was a friend to everyone with whom he came in contact. It is but natural to think of him in terms of bigness. Large in stature, noble in impulse, broad in judgment, and lofty in ideals, his was a life most worthy of emulation. He combined a modern business judgment with an old-fashioned ideal of chivalry. He possessed in rare form that courtesy and politeness of manner that signified gentility and gave him rating as a pronounced type of Southern Gentleman of the old school. His memory remains . . .

BRESSEL, GOTTLOB AND MATHILDE (VEITH)

F108

At Neustein near Birnbaum in the Province Posen, Germany, Gottlob Bressel was born on 25 August 1844, the eldest son of Gottfried and Beathe Bressel. On 11 August 1867 he sailed for Texas aboard the sail ship Fortuna landing at Galveston on 7 November, settling in Fayette County where he lived for 10 years.

Emma Mathilde Theresia Veith, the daughter of Friedrich and Friederike (Siebert) Vieth, was born 3 May 1851 at Trebitscherfeld near Driesen in Province Brandenburg, Germany. In October of 1868 she together with her parents, brother Hermann, and sisters (Emilie, Auguste, Wilhelmine, Bertha, and Anna) sailed aboard the Fortuna landing at Galveston in December. The family settled near Shelby in Austin County.

On 17 December 1871, Gottlob and Mathilde, both having been baptized and confirmed in the Lutheran faith in Germany, were married by Rev. R. Jaeggli, a Lutheran minister at Round Top, Texas. They resided in Fayette County until 1877 when they moved to Lavaca County around Hallettsville for 4 years and then to Antioch for a year. They bought their first farm in 1882 in the Bovine Pilot Grove Community about 4 miles east of the site where Yoakum was later founded. On 13 November 1901 they moved to their home place on the Guadalupe River in the Hochheim Community of DeWitt County where they spent their remaining years. They were the parents of eight children:

Herman Friedrich William, the eldest son was born 22 January 1877 near Shelby, died 22 March 1897, and was buried on a bluff beside his grandfather Gottfried on the family farm at Pilot Grove.

Carl Emil was born 30 October 1879 near Hallettsville and married Anna Helene Gloor on 14 December 1909 at the home of her parents, Rudolph and Elise (Mueller) Gloor, Jr. They lived in a house on the family farm until 1932 when they moved to Hochheim.

Bertha Hulda and Hulda Bertha were born on 3 January 1882 at Antioch, Lavaca County. Bertha married Herman Boysen in a double ceremony with Ernest Boysen (Herman's brother) and Amalia Braeuer on 16 December 1903 in Holy Cross Lutheran Church. The brides wore identical wedding dresses. Hulda married Rudolf J. Nieman son of August Nieman of Dryer on 8 December 1910 at the home of her parents.

Emma Anna was born at Pilot Grove on 13 April 1884. In the Westhoff Lutheran Church, she and Wilhelm Gloor (brother of Anna Gloor), of Lindenau were married on 1 June 1931.

Willy Oscar was born 20 June 1886 at Pilot Grove and on 6 December 1911 he married Flora Herm. They also lived in a house on the family farm in DeWitt County, later moving to the Dryer Community and, in about 1948, moving to 618 Nelson Street in Yoakum.

Otto Carl, born at Pilot Grove on 21 December 1888, married Anna Louise Eleonora "Ella" Braeuer on 23 December 1912.

Lydia Martha was born 24 April 1892 at Pilot Grove.

Gottlob and Mathilde applied for their citizenship prior to WW I, but being German immigrants and the United States at odds with Germany, they weren't naturalized until 20 January 1922 in DeWitt County.

Mathilde died on 18 December 1928 and her husband Gottlob on 18 July 1930. Both are buried in the Ruppert Cemetery, Gonzales County beside their daughter, Lydia, who passed away on 2 December 1926.

BRESSEL, OTTO AND "ELLA" (BRAEUER) F109

Otto Carl Bressel and Anna Louise Eleonora "Ella" Braeuer were married at the home of the bride's parents on 23 December 1912 by Rev. W.C. Wolfsdorf, minister of Holy Cross Lutheran Church of Yoakum. (All of her brothers and sisters also married in the winter months because her father didn't want to waste time during the year when there was work to do.) They resided in the Cheapside Community at the Gonzales-DeWitt County line on a farm bought from Ella's parents, Reinhold W. and Emilie (Goebel) Braeuer, and on the adjacent farm purchased in 1922 from her sister and husband, Emil and Mathilda Schrade, who were moving to Orange Grove, Texas.

Otto and "Ella" (Braeuer) Bressel

Ella was born in DeWitt County on 16 October 1890, one of nine children: Infant Girl, Herman, Richard, Selma (married Carl Schroeder from Dryer), Amalia (married Ernest Boysen from Gonzales Co.), Mathilda (married Emil Schrade of DeWitt Co.), Ella, Emil (married Hulda Meyer of DeWitt Co.), and Edmund (married Norma Fehner from Gonzales Co.). The Braeuer family moved to the Cheapside Community in the fall of 1890 from Witting in Lavaca County to their recently purchased farm, part located in Gonzales County and part located in DeWitt County. When she was 14 years old, Ella's father sent her to Cuero to reside with a family there and work for them to pay for her room and board. This enabled her to attend school and get another year of education.

Otto was born 21 December 1888 in the Pilot Grove Community east of Yoakum in Lavaca County. In 1901 he moved with his parents, Gottlob and Mathilda (Veith) Bressel, to the Hochheim Community. Otto and his sister Emma took photographs, developed the film, and printed the pictures. Many of the early Bressel pictures are their work. He was a happy person, with a chuckle, who played the guitar in a three-piece "House Dance" band. His daughter said one day he came home from town a very proud man. He had taken his part of the money he received from the sale of his parents farm, after their death, and bought a new Ford touring car!

Anita Emilie Mathilde, their only child, born 22 December 1913, attended Ruppert School in Gonzales County, traveling the four miles on her horse Dan, who sometimes bucked her off (he did stand and wait for her to remount!). Along the way she was joined by her cousins Edgar, Viola, and Rudolph Braeuer. On 30 June 1934 she was married in Holy Cross Lutheran Church to Robert Ludwig "Pete" Thiele.

Recalling that they had no electricity until

REA came to the area, Anita said they would wrap ice in a cotton sack and bury it in the cotton seed to keep it from melting. She said, "Ice cream was a big deal!" Another important day on the farm was the first cold norther. That's the day they butchered a hog. This took a full day, from the scalding and scraping of the animal, to stuffing the sausage and curing the bacon to get it all into the smoke house by night. The fat was rendered in a black kettle over an open fire for lard. The next day they cooked the trimmings and made liver sausage. Dry sausage, bacon, and ham were preserved by pouring lard over them to seal out the air.

On 19 February 1947, Otto passed away and the farm was sold. Ella moved to Yoakum to live in 1948 in a home on the Edna highway. Around 1950 she moved to 317 Poth and lived there until she entered the nursing home where she died on 30 June 1986. They are both buried in Oak Grove Cemetery in Yoakum.

In the area of Sublime, Texas in Lavaca County, James R. Brooks (April 19, 1864-June 19, 1957) married Epsie Harris (November 26, 1866-March 3, 1953). Both of them had grown up in Sublime and remained there all of their lives. During their marriage, they had 13, or more, children. Some of them died at birth, or at a very young age, but three are still living.

On May 8, 1896, Clara Brooks was born in Sublime. It is uncertain, but she is believed to have been their seventh child. Clara grew up in Sublime and met and married John Henry Guinn, Jr. (born November 14, 1894) on December 16, 1916 in Sublime. John was an only child, and was believed to have been raised by some of his cousins. During their first years of marriage John was a farmer.

On June 16, 1917 their first and only son, Victor, was born. When he was nearly 5 years old he came down with whooping cough and passed away on May 24, 1922. He is buried in the Geiger Cemetery in Sublime.

On February 16, 1923, their first daughter, Eunice, was born in the area of Oakland in Lavaca County. Sometime within the next couple of years, John, Clara, and Eunice moved to Sugarland, Texas, where he began working at the Sugar Refinery. While living there, their second daughter, Dorothy Jean (nicknamed Dot), was born on November 9, 1925.

After staying in Sugarland for a few years, the family returned to live in Sublime where John took up farming again. Both of the girls attended grade school in Sublime and went to Hallettsville High School.

Eunice graduated from high school in 1939 and met and married Victor A. Brier on January 17, 1942 at Sacred Heart Catholic parsonage in Hallettsville.

Sometime in 1942 John and Clara left Sublime and moved to Cuero, where they both began working at the Guadalupe Valley Cotton

At this time, Dot was a junior at Hallettsville High School and she stayed with her sister and brother-in-law, Eunice and Victor Brier, until Vic was drafted into the service. In the latter part of 1942 or the beginning of 1943, after Vic had been drafted, Eunice and Dot followed their parents to Cuero. Dot went on to graduate from Cuero High School in 1944. She later met and married John Davis Bauer, Sr. on July 31, 1948 (see their story). Both daughters are still living in Cuero.

John and Clara Guinn remained the rest of their lives in Cuero. John preceded Clara in death on November 1, 1960 at the age of 65. Clara lived another 28 years without her husband. She passed away on August 3, 1988, at the age of 92. Both of them are buried beside their young son at the Geiger Cemetery in Sublime. Texas.

BROOKS, GEORGE WASHINGTON

by Marsha Bauer

George Washington Brooks was born on May 21, 1808, probably in Chesterfield County, Virginia. He married Eliza Clayton (from Louisiana) on April 19, 1831, in Jefferson County, Mississippi. Their names appear on Stephen Austin's Colonist Application Book in May, 1831 (from the genealogical records of Myrtis Brooks). It was in Montgomery County that they settled on a league of land deeded to G.W. Brooks (as he was most often known) by the Mexican government. The land was on the Neches River, and final settlement was made with the government of Mexico on August 22, 1835, at Nacogdoches. He was legally guaranteed as an approved colonist by Lorenzo de Zavala.

G.W. Brooks served Texas from the time of his arrival. He was a member of Captain John Austin's company and was involved in the Battle of Velasco in 1832. In 1836 he belonged to Captain Bird's company under Colonel Burleson. "He was detailed by Captain Bird under General Sam Houston's orders to go ahead of the Army of the Republic and assist in removing the families in Texas out of the reach of the invading Mexicans in the neighborhood of Richmond. He remained in discharge of these duties until after the Battle of San Jacinto on the 21st of April, 1836." His company was then disbanded and "he joined Captain Hendershot's company under Colonel Thurston and this Command followed after the retreating Mexican Army by order of General Houston.' He was discharged in May, 1836.

A razor belonging to G.W. Brooks, which was given to him by Colonel William B. Travis, is on display at the Alamo. The most likely time for these two men to have come into contact was at Velasco in 1831 or 1832.

For his various efforts on the part of Texas, G.W. Brooks received several headright certificates for land. One of these was for land in what is now DeWitt County on the Coleto Creek. He received a patent for land in the Gonzales District of DeWitt County by virtue of a headright certificate issued by the Board of Land Commissioners of Harrisburg County on July 17, 1854. It is believed that the family did not move to DeWitt County until about 1854.

G.W. and Eliza Brooks had twelve children: Mary Catherine (born 1833), Frances Ann (born 1836), Beverly Baker (born 1840), Andrew Jackson (born 1841), James Madison and Sarah (twins, born 1843), G.W. Jr. (born 1844), Josephus (born 1845), Antheria (born 1847), Alpha Omega (born 1850), Old Texas (born 1852), and Charlotte (born 1857). All of these children except Charlotte were born in Montgomery County. Charlotte was born in DeWitt County. The family moved to DeWitt County after selling the land received from the Mexican land grant. Antheria remembered the move which was made in a covered wagon.

Eliza Brooks died about 1860. G.W. Brooks then married Rachel Ann Roach, a woman whose husband died as a Confederate soldier. From this union there were three children: James Pinckney, Charles, and Colette Minerva. G.W. and Rachel lived in Lavaca County and in Harwood. His youngest children by his first marriage, Charlotte and Alpha Omega, lived with them.

In 1870 G.W. deeded his land in Montgomery, Tyler, and DeWitt counties to his children by Eliza Clayton. G.W. Brooks died on February 1, 1887, and is buried at Harwood, Texas.

Two of G.W. Brooks's daughters, Antheria and Charlotte, married two brothers who were sons of John Spinks, a DeWitt County resident. Charlotte and James Joseph Spinks lived in DeWitt County a short time, but Antheria (Annie) and Cyrus Spinks remained in DeWitt County for the remainder of their lives.

They had three children; 1) Lunell A., 2) Newton Jr. and 3) Mary Jeanine. All were born in Cuero. Newton moved his family to San Antonio in the summer of 1938, after his daughter Lunell graduated from Cuero High School. Beatrice died in 1973 and was buried in Hillside Cemetery. The family returned to Cuero in 1945 and at that time purchased the Brown land and home in Clinton from the rest of the heirs. Gene and some of his family still reside there. The youngest members of the family living there at the present time represent the sixth generation on this land that has been owned and lived on by some of the Brown family for over one hundred years. "Big" Gene died September 11, 1968 and was buried in Hillside Cemetery.

Cameron Charles was born June 16, 1905. He spent most of his life ranching. October 6, 1928 he married Grace Johnston and they built a home on his land. On August 21, 1932 their daughter Fay Lou came into their lives. Cameron was planning to enlist in the service of his country when he became very ill, and it was discovered he had cancer. He died April 13, 1941 and was buried in Hillside Cemetery.

Bee and Lias had three children, 1) Charles Arlen, 1929, 2) Marjorie Ann and 3) Lias Brown. Lias passed away on May 13, 1979 and is buried at Hillside Cemetery.

Bert Edwin, the fifth and last son of Bert and Lula was born May 16, 1910. At an early age, he moved to Mercedes to join his brother Eugene in business. There he met and married Mary Frances Haynes. BROWN, WILLIAM FAMILY

F114

At Cabeza 1891-1991

In 1991, the William Brown homestead at Cabeza, DeWitt County, Texas will have been in this family 100 years. The 160 acres were bought from a Mr. V. Weldon of the Indianola Railroad Co. Survey on January 2, 1891. The property is now owned by a grandson, Wilmer Duderstadt of San Antonio, Texas.

Billy (as he was known) and Jane Wofford Brown were married in DeWitt County August 11, 1881. They moved to Cabeza in 1891 and lived there until Billy's death of typhoid fever December of 1919.

They raised a family of seven children. Their two sons were Thurman and Andy. Their five daughters were Viola, Julia, Annie, Myrtle and Mary.

Billy Brown ran a sugar cane mill for making molasses and it was believed that many of the neighbors also brought their cane there to be ground. In addition to raising sugar cane, he raised cotton, corn, and watermelons. They raised turkeys for a cash crop and hogs for keeping their smokehouse filled with food. Myrtle, a daughter, was said to have been given some of the turkey money in the fall of 1913 to buy her wedding dress when she married Louis Duderstadt of Nordheim, Nov. 10, 1913, at her Cabeza home. Later, another daughter Annie used the bodice of this wedding dress to complete her wedding dress when she married Ed Storms who was a barber in Nordheim. They married Dec. 7, 1913 at Cabeza. Other marriages in the family were: Thurman Brown married Sophia Theresa Manz Sept. 6, 1905; Andy Oliver Brown married Viola Julia Burt Oct. 27, 1908; Viola Libby Brown married Paul Natho Aug. 3, 1910; Julia May Brown married William Ernest Farris Oct. 1, 1910; Mary Jane Brown married Fred Burt and after his death married Reagan E. Moore.

Billy Brown's daughter Viola recorded some of her memories of growing up at Cabeza before she died. She vividly remembered her mother Jane's parents, Daniel and Nancy Wofford who lived near Yorktown on a ranch near Clear Creek. It was said of them that they were so kind, generous and helpful to all their neighbors and that Grandma Wofford would get up any time of the night to go and help with the sick.

Viola also recalled her father's mother, Carolyn Woods Brown, who lived at Burnet, Texas. She would come to visit them at Cabeza and stay at least a month per visit. Viola remembered the many trips to Burnet in a wagon in which her father and the whole family would travel in the summertime to visit his mother

Carolyn Brown.
Two cedar trees were

Two cedar trees were brought from Burnet (probably on one of these visits) and planted in the front yard of their Cabeza home. Today, these two very old cedars still grace the front yard with their beauty and shade.

Annie Lee Brown Storms' daughter, Shirley Massey, has fond memories of living at Cabeza as a child. She remembers when her Grandfather Billy decided to redo the house in 1917. As was the custom at that time, the kitchen was detached from the house. Her grandfather could make it in one jump from the house to the kitchen. Shirley's desire was to be able to do the same, as she felt doing so would certainly mean that she was grown. Not being able to achieve this feat it was with sad heart that she saw the porch and kitchen joined.

In the back yard was a large smokehouse with wide shelves up against the walls. During the renovation of the house, the Grandparents decided to sleep in the smokehouse with Shirley and her brother Clifton. This would allow Shirley's mother (who was expecting a child) and father to have the only room in the house not being redone. What a great delight to Shirley and Clifton to get to sleep in the smokehouse with their grandparents sleeping on a bottom shelf and the children sleeping on the top shelf.

After Billy Brown's death in 1919, his wife Jane continued to live with daughter Annie and Ed Storms until they moved to Brownsville. After that Jane took turns living one month with each of her children until her death September 22, 1937 in Beeville, Texas.

BRUNKENHOEFER, FREDERICK FAMILY

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brunkenhoefer ca. 1920

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Brunkenhoefer, Sr. ca. 1924

Of Nordheim

Frederick Brunkenhoefer Jr. established his residence in the town of Nordheim in 1909, succeeding O.G. Eckhardt in the ownership of the village drug store which he maintained at an excellent standard in both equipment and service until his death in 1942. He was a skilled pharmacist and enterprising business man, a public-spirited citizen who took deep interest in furthering education, music, and other civic affairs in the thriving town. Prior to his removal to Nordheim he was a pharmacist in Bastrop for eight years, and to that city he had removed from Weimar, Colorado County, where he was reared and educated. He was a child of three years when his parents established their home in Texas, thousands of miles, and a world away from the German Empire.

Mr. Brunkenhoefer was born in the village of Zweiburg in the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg, Germany, on the 21st of July, 1876, the third son of Friedrich Brunkenhoefer Sr. (1851-1927) and Margarethe Oltmann Brunkenhoefer (1848-1914). In 1879 his parents, his older brothers, Henry and John, and he emigrated from the port of Bremen, crossed the Atlantic and landed in Hoboken, New Jersey, whence they sailed by steamer to Galveston. They arrived by train in Weimar on October 18, 1879. Here his sister, Helene, and his younger brothers, William, Emil, and Erich were born on the tract of land that his parents had developed into a productive farm. Young Frederick was in association with his father on the farm until his seventeenth year when he obtained employment in a Weimar drug store. Here he applied himself diligently to practical work and also to study that would advance him in knowledge of pharmacy. His knowledge and experience were extended and amplified after his removal to Bastrop in 1901. In 1907 he passed the state board of Pharmacy; in 1909 he and his family settled in Nordheim.

At the inception of the Spanish American War in 1898 Fred was the first man in Weimar to enlist, becoming a member of Troop II, First Texas Cavalry, and was made trumpeter of his troop. Its members were mustered out in October, 1898.

In Alleyton, Colorado County, on the 5th of December, 1899, was solemnized the marriage of Frederick and Miss Mary Peikert who was born in Alleyton on the 11th of May, 1883, the sixth of seven children of Josef Peikert (1832-1909) and Francesca Schiller Peikert (1846-1937), both having emigrated from Sudetenland in Austria in 1861 and 1867, respectively. Mr. Peikert was a veteran of the army of the Confederate States of ica.

To Fred and Mary Brunkenhoefer were born two children, Lunes Lee and Roy Franklin. In 1919 they took Alberta Peikert, motherless niece of Mrs. Brunkenhoefer, as their own child.

Lunes Brunkenhoefer was born in Weimar on the 1st of April, 1901, growing to lovely young womanhood in Nordheim where she graduated as valedictorian of her class at Nordheim High School in 1918. On the 8th of June, 1921, in St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Nordheim was celebrated her marriage to Mr. Benno R. Holchak of Shiner, Texas. He was an agent for the railroad in Runge, Nordheim, and in Shiner, where the couple made their home for the remainder of their lives. He died on the 20th of April, 1967, leaving a legion of grieving relatives and friends. Lunes survived him until the 11th of August, 1972, when she welcomed death to reunite her with her beloved Benno. No children blessed this marriage.

Alberta, born on the 1st of December, 1916, was the seventh and youngest child of Mary Brunkenhoefer's brother Joseph. Her mother having perished in November, 1918, during the far-flung influenza epidemic, Alberta was taken by the Brunkenhoefers to rear as their own daughter. This beautiful girl graduated from Nordheim High School in 1933 and had a successful business career in Houston where she married realtor Monroe Smith. An infant son, born in the summer of 1949, died shortly after his birth. Being bereft of her child was a blow from which she never fully recovered. Alberta passed away on the 30th of January, 1968, and was laid to rest in Shiner where her sister Lunes would join her four years thereaf-

Roy F. Brunkenhoefer (S.) was born in Bastrop in Bastrop County on the last day of July.

1902, grew to manhood in Nordheim, and graduated from its high school in 1920. On the 16th of December, 1922, he was wed in Cuero to Miss Ruth Elizabeth Brown of Yorktown, a teacher in the Nordheim School. This beautiful and accomplished young woman was the daughter of Horace E. Brown (1866-1934) and Mary Ellen Givens Brown (1870-1955), of pioneer Ohio and Virginia Stock. Roy was a loyal member of the Nordheim Brass Band from 1914 until it passed into history in the 1950's. As was his father, he was a Master Mason and a registered pharmacist, having passed his exams for the state board in June, 1926. He operated Roy's Drug Store in Runge from May, 1931 to June, 1942, at which time he consolidated the stock with that of the Nordheim Drug Company after his father's death on the 19th of January, 1942. His mother, Mrs. Mary Brunkenhoefer, died on the 15th of October. 1953. The Nordheim store closed forever in 1953 and until his retirement in 1965 Roy worked in drug stores in Wharton, Refugio, and Goliad. His residence was in Nordheim until he went to California in March, 1975, to remain with his only child, Roy Jr. He passed away on the 25th of June, 1979, in Sonoma, California, and was laid to rest beside his parents in Nordheim. As was his father, Roy Sr. was a student of politics and history, an amiable and personable man who was kind and generous to people all ages, conditions, and stations in life and who possessed an inimitable wit.

Roy F. Brunkenhoefer, born on the 9th of January, 1926, the only child of Roy Sr. and Ruth Brown Brunkenhoefer, attended the University of San Francisco and is a graduate of St. Mary's University. He taught in high schools of Refugio County for six years and retired in June, 1985, after having taught in Marin County, California in the same school for 25 years, thus completing 31 years in the classroom. Roy Jr. is unmarried and upon his death this branch of the Brunkenhoefer family, as a living entity, will cease to exist.

BUCHEL FAMILY

The Buchels came from Guntersblum, near Mayene or Mainz, in the province of Hesse, Germany. This part of Germany was given to Fance in 1801, after having been occupied by Sweden and France in the Thirty Years War. Carl August was born in 1805 and his brother August C. on Oct. 8, 1813. The boys parents were Carl Friedrich Buchel, avocation collector, and Christine Philippine Laun. The Buchels had a family of six, but just two of them came to Texas. Some thought another, Christian, came and went on to California, but no one ever heard from him.

While still living in Germany, Carl August married Juliane Philippine Eglinger of Guntersblum. From their marriage records we learn that both fathers were present to give their approval, but the mothers of both bride and groom did not appear because of timidity. Carl August and his wife had seven children in Germany, but only Friedrich Wilhelm, Ernst August, Emilie Rosalie, and Carl August came to Texas with them. The other children may have died or were old enough to stay in Germany. Another son, Otto, was born in Texas.

In the meantime the brother, Augustus C. was interested in the military. After passing the entrance examination at the age of 14, although he was two years underage, he was admitted to the Military Academy at Darmsstadt. At eighteen he was commissioned a Second Lieutenant of Volunteers in the First Infantry Regiment of Hess-Darmstadt. In 1835 he had his next training at L'Ecole Militaire in Paris. He served in the French Foreign Legion and later in the Carlist War in Spain. For his conduct in this war Queen Maria Christina decorated and knighted him.

After this Buchel served the Ali Pasha in Turkey for three years attaining the rank of Colonel. This was the highest rank the Christian "infidel" could obtain without becoming a member of the Moslem religion. He refused this Buchel then returned to Germany and is reputed to have killed a man in a duel. As the surviving duelist he was required by law to leave Germany as the penalty for participation. So in 1845 Augustus C. and Carl August and his family sailed for Texas from Antwerp, Belgium under the auspices of the German Emigration Co. and arrived late in that year at Carlshafen (later known as Indianola). It was here in 1849 that another son, Otto, was born to Carl August and his wife. Augustus C. made his residence here, but Carl August and his family settled on a farm in DeWitt County. While he was felling logs, he cut an artery in his leg and died. In the spring of 1860 the Buchel family joined a small colony of farmers, mostly from DeWitt County, taking passage to Tampico, Mexico and then into the interior. They settled on the Rio Calabaso with the intention of opening up a coffee plantation. Sickness and death caused the pioneers to abandon all the property. In the summer of 1866 they returned to Indianola where they began a mercantile business. Around 1873 they moved to Cuero.

At this time the family name was spelled Buchell and Buechel in the old German manner, but now it was Anglicized to Buchel.

During this time Augustus participated in the Mexican War as an Aide-de-camp to General Zachary Taylor. Taylor, as President, planned to appoint him Minister Plenipotentiary to Brazil but Taylor's untimely death prevented this act of recognition from becoming a reality. President Franklin Pierce then appointed him Collector of Customs at Port Lavaca, a position he held for many years. In addition to his government responsibility in Port Lavaca, Buchel engaged in a lumber and building material business in Corpus Christi in partnership with M.T. Huck.

In the war between the states, he was made Lieutenant Colonel of the Third Texas Infantry Regiment in 1861 and he served mainly in South Texas. Seen the threat of an invasion of Texas by Union forces caused the transfer of his regiment to Louisiana, where his cavalrymen helped stem the tide of battle in favor of the Confederacy. On April 9, 1864 at Pleasant Hill La., he dismounted his cavalrymen and attacked the enemy attempting an ambush on a strategic hill. There he received a mortal wound and died several days later at Mansfield.

It wasn't long after the death of Carl August that his wife, Juliane, also died. The young men all began businesses in Cuero. Friedrich William married Mary Davis. He, with his brothers, began and operated the Buchel Gin. They had no children, but adopted her niece's son, Floyd McGowan.

Emilie Rosalie married August Westhoff of Cuero and then they moved to Edna where he was interested in ranching, banking, and building.

Theodore Otto was a community-minded individual. He organized and operated a bank, a grocery store, and the cotton gin. He and his brother, August, built and operated the Buchel dam of the Guadalupe River. He married Olga Vahlieck, who was also a very civic minded person. To them were born five children; just three of them lived to be adults. The oldest was Erna, who married Fritz Koehler; Freda, who married Dr. Harold Kirkham; and Theodore, who married Carrie Mae Smith.

Ernst August married Julia?. He operated the Buchel Furniture Store.

Carl August married Pamela Davis (the sister of Mary, the wife of Fred). He and his brother built and operated the dam of the Guadalupe. It was begun on December 1, 1896 and completed March 3, 1898. The dam supplied electricity for Cuero and later for Central Power and Light. August also operated one of the first green gardens. He dug deep ditches to irrigate with water from the Guadalupe. They raised all vegetables. One of the crops which was tried was rice. On June 30, 1898 he accidentally fell into a turbine and was killed. He also had a large farm where he raised corn, cotton and had cattle. After his death, his wife sold her part of the dam to her brother-in-law. Otto; but, she continued to operate her own farm. She was a good business woman and held her family together and did a good job of Their children were Carl August, Wilhemina, Walter, Otto, Fred, Pamela, Rosa Mae, and Leona. Two babies were born dead.

Carl August married Mame Reynolds. He worked for his Uncle Otto in the bank and operated the farm at the dam. Their children were August, Carl, Grace, and Joseph.

Wilhemina married Harvey Swift. Their children were Frank and Harvey.

Otto married Urania Junker and their children were Kathryn and Mae. He was a successful farmer.

Rosa Mae married Duncan Sutherland of Victoria. They had one son, Duncan.

Leona married Altus Herring, who managed a textile mill in Talledega, Alabama. Their children were Virginia, Welton, Mary, Margaret, and Marjorie.

Fred William was born Sept. 2, 1891 and was educated in Cuero, receiving his high school training at Mr. Nash's Academy. Mr. Nash was a strong influence in his life. Mr. Nash always expected the best of his students, and Fred was very much the same way with his children. He then graduated from The Texas Dental School in Houston. After practicing dentistry in San Antonio, he moved his practice to Cuero and had his office above The Buchel Bank. In 1912 he and Susie Taylor of Yeakum were married. She grew up in Concrete and also went to Mr. Nash's Academy. She then attended Baylor Female College in Belton, Texas. They lived out in the country near his old homeplace. Fred practiced dentistry, but also was a farmer. At first he grew lots of cotton, corn, and grain crops. Then when King Cotton left these parts, he began to have more livestock. He also began a dairy, which grew to be a large dairy before his death. At different times he grew tomatoes, watermelons, and many other vegetable crops. They became interested in turkey production and raised many of these during the 30's.

Fred and Susie had three daughters and one son. All of them graduated from Cuero High School. All three daughters, Demeris, Doris Pamela, and Lurlyn, attended and graduated from Mary-Hardin Baylor in Belton, Texas. Demeris taught school in Port Arthur and married Leon Hanchey. Later they moved to Vidor and operated a lumber and building company. They have one son, Theodore. After their retirement they moved to Corona, California where their son is in the construction business. He and his wife, Betsy, have one daughter, Stephanie.

Doris Pamela, after graduating from Mary Hardin-Baylor, married A.C. Ater and lived in Temple, Texas. A.C. was advertising manager of the Temple Daily Telegram and later General Manager of the Sherman Democrat. After A.C. suffered a severe stroke, the family moved to Cuero. Pamela taught Homemaking in Cuero High School for 30 years. Their children were Pamela B., Jack Allen, and Fred. All three of them graduated from Cuero High School.

Pamela B. married Hugh Fritsch. She went on to graduate from Mary Hardin-Baylor and then to get her master's degree from Texas University. She now teaches special education in Wimberly, Texas. Their children are Pamela who is a coach in Lewisville, Texas; Susan, who is married to Richard Laster, teaches in Corpus Christi; and Gregory, who married Sandra Taylor, is in the construction business in Belton, Texas. Their daughter is Kaci.

Jack Ater entered the Air Force on graduation from high school and served four years in England. When he returned, he began working for Bell Helicopter in Ft. Worth. He has been a trouble shooter for Bell in many places. He was in Viet Nam twice to teach them how to work and care for the helicopters. He married Shirley Jones and they have three children; Scott, Julie, and Chris.

Fred Ater graduated from high school and Victoria Junior College. He finished college at Sam Houston State in Huntsville, Texas. He married Susan Taylor and then he served in the Air Force for four years in Ft. Worth. After serving in the Air Force, he received his master's degree from Southwestern Baptist Seminary in Ft. Worth. He then served as education director in Denton, Richmond, and Jackson, Mississippi. He and Susan next went to Brasil to serve as foreign missionaries for Southern Baptists. He teaches religious education in a seminary and she does church-home work. They have two children; Alan and Andi.

Fred Buchel graduated from Cuero High and then attended Texas A&M in College Station, Texas. During his junior year, he enlisted in the Air Force and served in India. After returning, he worked with his father in the dairy and cattle industries, and continued after his father's death. He married Carmel McDonald of El Campo. They have two sons. Bill is a drug counselor in a drug rehabilitation hospital in Austin. He has two sons; Jason and Jeremy. The other son, Bruce, is still operating the dairy. He has one son, Shane.

Lurlyn Buchel completed Cuero High School and also Mary Hardin-Baylor. She taught homemaking in Wharton High School. She married Truett Crouch of Victoria. They had one son, Truett. She died of polio in 1951.

BUCHEL, OTTO

F118

Otto Buchel.

Born in Indianola, Texas in 1849, he came with his father's household to DeWitt County when he was but two years old in 1851. His parents resided on a DeWitt county farm, and this was perhaps the first home he ever remembered.

His father died when he was quite small, and he was reared by his mother and elder brothers. In the spring of 1860, when his mother's family joined a band of colonists, mostly from DeWitt County, for a colonization project in old Mexico, young Otto Buchel accompanied them. Taking passage to Tampico and thence into the interior of Mexico. They settled upon the Rio Calabosa with the intent of opening a coffee plantation. Deprivation, sickness and death among these colonists frustrated the hopes of the survivors, who abandoned their property rights and scattered. The Buchel family resided at Maramoros from 1863 to 1866, with shorter residences at Bagdad and Clarksville at the mouth of the Rio Grande. In the summer of 1866, they returned to Indianola, where Otto Buchel accepted such work as he could find and finally as a mercantile clerk accepted a position with George Seeligson. It was back in the year 1873, when the Gulf, Western Texas and Pacific Railway extended its line from Indianola to Cuero and made this point its terminus that ground was cleared upon which to locate the railway. There was begun the laying of foundations for successful business careers and the forming of happy homes, and Cuero came to be recognized as the logical county seat of DeWitt county. Among the businessmen quick to see the opportunities growing out of combined advantages of fertile lands, wide trade territory, new railroad and county seat, and the principal distributing point between San Antonio and Indianola were George Seelingson and Otto Buchel, who had worked for him as a clerk. Recognizing in Otto Buchel, then a young man of some twenty-four years, very promising business qualifications, Seeligson arranged a branch store in December of 1873 at Cuero, and Otto Buchel was made partner and manager thereof.

So successful did the Cuero Business prove that two years later, by mutual agreement, young Otto Buchel bought out the interests of George Seeligson in the mercantile establishment of Seeligson and Buchel and continued same under the name of Otto Buchel. A frame building on the northwest corner of Main and Esplanade street occupying probably seventyfive feet on Main Street and extending back to the alley on Esplanade street was the early home of the firm. It has been said that when the farmers and cattlemen came into town to do their business and shopping for supplies, they began to ask Mr. Buchel to keep their money for them, since he had one of the few "Safes" in town. He accommodated them, and as word got around, the business grew. So, as a consequence, a space in the extreme northwest corner of the Buchel frame building was set apart and equipped for banking purposes, and thus was laid the foundation for the present modernly housed and equipped Buchel National Bank. The rapid settlement and development of the country, as many farms were carved out of the woodlands, suggested the ownership of a gin; and in 1876, after sending for his two brothers, Frederick W. Buchel and C. August Buchel, then residents of Lavaca County, Otto and his brothers bought the first gin plant established in Cuero. In 1882, William Wagner, who had been for some years bookkeeper and handyman with the Otto Buchel interests, was taken in as a partner, and the name of the firm became "Otto Buchel and Company, Bankers, Wholesale and Retail Grocers and Commission Merchants." William Wagner was known as a very competent and efficient men, and it was because of the combined time and talents of these two men that the business grew. As the business continued to expand and prosper, it gradually became apparent that it was fast outgrowing its quarters and would need a new home. In 1889, the original frame building to Seeligson and Buchel was razed, and again to show his faith and confidence in Cuero's future, a new, and at the same time modern, two story brick building was erected on the Main-Esplanade street corner. It was in the year 1891, that the Buchel interests laid out the town of Karnes City on lands belonging to them. A general business branch house of the Cuero store, gin plant and bank were for a time operated by Otto Buchel and business associates, William Wagner and George J. Schleicher. These were later sold to various parties. The three Buchel brothers in 1892 acquired large land holdings north of Cuero, extending along a considerable water frontage of the Guadalupe River, and including the present dam site. With the increasing numbers of boll weevil, the power dam was built in 1898 with a view to supplying lights and power for Cuero, and also water for a rice irrigation project the brothers were interested in. The destructive flood waters of the Guadalupe River, adversities in connection with the rice farming, difficulties in connection with the management of the light plant, the shock from the accidental death of August Buchel, caught in a cog wheel and crushed to death; and a finally disastrous fire which destroyed the power house, caused Mr. Buchel to place the dam and kindred interests on the market. It was taken over in 1908 by a company headed by Wm. M. Ratcliffe and was known as the Cuero Light and Power Co. Ratcliffe rebuilt the burned power house and reconstructed the dam. Otto Buchel died at his home in Cuero on November 4, 1909.

On February 22, 1883, Otto Buchel was married to Miss Olga Vahldieck, popular young lady and member of one of the first Cuero pioneer families. To their union, five children were born. One died in infancy, another at age eleven. The others were Mrs. Erna Koehler, wife of Fritz Koehler, President of the Cuero Chamber of Commerce and successful merchant of Cuero; Mrs. Frida Kirkham, wife of D.r H.L.D. Kirkham of Houston; and T.O. Buchel, director and active vice president of the Buchel National Bank and later Comptroller of the city of Cuero and manager of all utilities.

BUSBY, HARRIET FRANCES (FANNIE)

Harriet Frances Busby was born May 1, 1841 in Harris County, Texas. She died January 25, 1925 in San Antonio, Texas. At the time of her death she was living at her residence at 1711 W. Commerce with her married daughter Katie Adams Tice and son-in-law John Tice. Fannie was on a widow's Confederate Pension. She was the widow of G.W. Adams at the time of her death. He was a Corporal with Company D, 33 Texas Cavalry, Duff's Regiment. He served from 1863 until the end of the Civil War.

Fannie's parents were William Solomon Busby and Harriet Perdum Brown who both died in DeWitt County, Texas. They came to DeWitt County in the early 1850's from Harris County. Mr. Busby had been a carpenter early in his life but he later moved into ranching on a small scale. William Busby had purchased 100 acres from John Pettus. It was located on Five Mile Creek and the family did business in Clinton.

Fannie married James C. Bell (Jim) November 4, 1858 in Clinton, DeWitt County, Texas. Witnesses at the marriage were Preston Pevehouse (Married to Jim's sister Cyrena Bell) and Abraham Sutz. James C. Bell was the youngest child of James H. and Wincy (Bird?) Bell. He was born in Austin County in 1834. Jim had already been living with his brother, William G. Bell and wife Martha Ann in Goliad County near Middletown. He was helping William G. and beginning his own herd of cattle and horses. After his marriage to Fannie, until early 1860's, the young couple lived with her mother and father. William S. Busby was very ill and Fannie's mother needed help. Fannie's first child Mary Ellen was born in the Busby home. After the death of William S. Busby in 1859, the Bells went to Goliad to ranch as planned. They lived near what is now Wees-

It is not known how Jim and Fannie met but it must have been through mutual friends or family. It could have been through the Taylors, Days, or Kellys. William B. Bell had purchased his 177 acres in Austin County from Samuel Heady. Heady's daughter was married to a Kelly.

Jim and Fannie had six children: Mary Ellen who was born in DeWitt County in 1859 and married Columbus W. Varner in 1878; Permelia Elizabeth, born April 9, 1861 in Goliad County and married Robert Emmett Casper from Mississippi, whose parents were Henry Casper and Virginia Miller, in January of 1877. She married a second time to William W. Ross on February 20, 1910 in San Antonio, Texas. Permilia died June 18, 1929 in Nacogdoches County, Texas. Wincy Jane was born in 1863 in Goliad County and married William Lauderback on July 1, 1882 in Goliad County: Emma May who was born August 23, 1865 in Goliad County and married Daniel Lee Shipp on November 17, 1886 in DeWitt County. Witnessed by Robert Busby, Mrs. A.J. Hodge and others. Emma died October 24, 1940 in Bee County and is buried in Live Oak County in the Shipp Cemetery. Emma May lived her married life in Live Oak County on the Shipp Ranch. The Shipp family is an old family in the Dinero area and early ones were friends with J. Frank Dobie's family and are mentioned in his last book "A Part of Myself"; Robert Ed Busby was born in 1867 in Goliad County; Harriet Ella was born November 12, 1869 in Weesatche. Texas and married Benjamin Franklin Gentry on November 17, 1886 in DeWitt County, Texas. Witnesses were Arr Talk and wife and others. Ella and her sister Emma married on the same day in Clinton, Texas. Ella lived her married life in Goliad, Texas. Some of the family still live there. One of her daughters, Cornelia married Fred Tumlinson of Goliad. Benjamin F. Gentry's parents were James W. Gentry and Sarah Galaspa from Georgia.

No CSA record has been found for James C. Bell. It is thought that he was in a Texas Home Guard who organized in Clinton, Texas and that he stayed close to Goliad County to run the ranch and that of his brother William G. Bell who did serve in the CSA. Someone had to raise beef for the Confederacy and protect the home front.

The years after the Civil War were dangerous to the inhabitants of DeWitt and Goliad Counties. Fanny was expecting their sixth child, Ella and it was in June, the month of round-up and branding on the range. She was very frightened and Jim came home at night to be with his family. According to family history, Fannie and Jim had a plan. If outlaws came to the front of the house, Jim would hold them off while Fannie took the children out the back. But, they never needed that plan. One day at dusk, a group of horsemen came to the house and asked for Jim. Fannie truthfully told them he was not there. In truth, he was on his way home from a day on the range with his herd. She never saw him alive again. The group calling themselves the "Vigilance Committee", killed Jim between the house and the herd. Family story is that he was shot in the temple. Another family story is that he had just sold cattle to a cattle drive for gold and buried the gold. Maybe the men were trying to find the gold. Maybe there was a connection to the feud. It was June, 1869. The Vigilance Committee is thought to be a group of outlaws who posed as lawmen. On 1860 mortality schedules for Goliad County, Texas, nine ranchers were listed as murdered by the Vigilance Committee. The Goliad Courthouse was burned in 1871 and all the James C. Bell estate records were destroyed. The courthouse may have been torched. This was a time of great fear. James C. Bell was struggling after the Civil War, as was everyone. We do know that he had sold 100 acres shortly before his death. The 100 acres were near Weesatche. His grave has not been found.

Family history also reported that the night Jim Bell was murdered, his gun and horse were taken. In 1940 some of the family in Goliad said they had identified his gun in a Goliad Museum. I have tried to trace this story but have found no information. Everyone is dead now who could have helped me. Supposedly Jim's initials were on the gun. I hope it is in a museum somewhere.

Fannie was a very courageous lady and remarried on January 31, 1874 to George Washington Adams in Victoria, Texas. George Adams was from a Goliad family and it appears that Fannie was his first wife. He served in the CSA and was the son of Matthew Adams and Priscilla Catherine Wolf. Fannie and George had several children: Oren and Sarah C. (Katie) who married John Tice in San Antonio, Texas.

Fannie's daughter Permelia Elizabeth was my Great-Grandmother. She was tall and slender with dark hair and blue eyes. Her daughter, Wincy May was my grandmother and she had a very big influence on my life. She loved to tell old stories. I wish I had listened more and asked more questions.

BUSCHICK, EDWARD FAMILY

F133

Edward Oliver Buschick was born on June 4, 1856 in the town of Clinton, in DeWitt County. He was the first of eight children born to Hugo

Ottilia (Buschick) Wolfe, Laura Buschick, Edward Buschick, and seated: Ruth Buschick

Buschick (1828-1898) and Fredricka Toller Buschick (1832-1897). Hugo, a Prussian immigrant, came to the United States through New York City and settled in Texas. He married Fredricka on July 26, 1855 and became a citizen of the U.S. one year later. Hugo profited from the purchase and sale of numerous properties in several counties around Texas. In 1870, he purchased a parcel of land located about two miles east of Garfield, which would later be known as the old Buschick Place. He moved his family there from Cuero in 1882. This would be Hugo and Fredricka's last home. However, Edward was grown and on his own by that time.

During Edward's early manhood, he drove wagon trains from Indianola, Texas, until he bought his own property. The purchase was made from Sam Mechling in 1879. Edward's 160 acres bordered Sam's land and was located one mile west of the old Buschick Place. The two men herded sheep for a living and became life-long friends. On December 8, 1880 Edward married Laura Fredrick House. She was born on October 13, 1861 in Yorktown to Fred and Sarah Powell House. Fred was a German immigrant and Sarah was a native of Kentucky. Edward and Laura made their home in a large shed type room. They became the parents of three children: Albert E. (1881-1888), Ottilia Agnes (1884-1975), and Ruth Helen (1891-1979).

By 1902, Edward had enough money saved to build a new home for his family. The materials were purchased from Westhoff and Eckhardt Lumber Company in Yorktown. The total cost was less than $1000.00. Taxes on their property for that year was $17.35. This large, beautiful five room house became the lifetime home for Edward and Laura. Gardening and raising livestock provided food for the family, while farming now provided their income. Their children attended the one room Garfield School which was built in 1892. Ottilia was one of the first students and started at age 8. The first teacher was Sophia Riedesel. Later, Gretchen Zag'orski taught at the school, where she and Ottilia formed a friendship for life. Since dancing was the most popular form of entertainment, the school also served as a dance hall until one was built in later years. In 1911, Edward and Laura got their first phone from the Garfield Telephone Company. Their horse and buggy was replaced by a Ford touring car in the early 1920's.

Their first daughter, Ottilia married Henry Wolfe on July 20, 1914 in Cuero. They lived in a second home on the Buschick land. Henry helped his father-in-law with the farming. Ottilia and Henry had four children: Ulela Edwin (1915), Ethel who died in infancy, Thelma Maurine (1920), and Marvin Allison (1921). The three Wolfe children attended the same Garfield School as their Mother. By this time the school had grown large enough to have three teachers. The children also helped with the farming and livestock as part of their deliverage.

Despite the hard work, the Buschick home held many happy memories. In the summer, Grandpa Edward would sit on the porch and tell of the early days in Indianola and of fishing there at Powderhorn Lake. Grandma Laura would always have tea cakes for her grandchildren. Edward died in 1937 and Laura died in 1945. Their youngest daughter, Ruth had never married and remained in the family home after her parents' deaths. When she could no longer manage the property, it was finally sold. Ottilia Wolfe moved to San Antonio and Ruth moved to Granite Shoals, where they lived until their deaths. The old family home still stands today, but time, weather and a lack of care have reduced it to ruins. Nevertheless, it's memory is still bright in the minds of Edward's three grandchildren and their families.

The oldest grandchild, Ulela Wolfe married Mike Dworaczyk of Garfield in 1933. They had two daughters: Angeline Dorothy (1934) and Barbara Ann (1940). Ulela became a widow in 1949 and moved her family to San Antonio. In 1954, she married Barney Boswell. They are now retired at Granite Shoals, Tx. Her daughter, Angeline is married to Terrell Wilkinson of San Antonio since 1969. She has no children. Barbara married Scotty Roberds in 1962 and has two sons: Don Thomas (1963) and Jason McCall (1976). They also live in San Antonio.

Thelma Wolfe married Louis Pargmann of Runge in 1937 and are retired in San Antonio. They have three children. Glenn Ray (1941) married and had one son Robert John (1966) and one daughter Shana Nichola (1978). He is now married to Doreen Surakus and has three stepchildren: Danny (1975), Jennifer (1981) and Courtney (1984). They all lived in Mesa, Arizona. Daughter Sherrie Beth (1952) is married to Steven Rose since 1975. They have two sons: Justin Nicholas (1981) and Brandon Thomas (1986). Their home is in San Antonio. Daughter Deborah Lynn (1958) is not married and lives in Dallas.

Edward Buschick Family home built in 1902

Marvin Wolfe married and had one son David Leon (1945). Marvin then married Rubye Stock in 1962. They are retired and living in Kingsland, Tx. David married Carole Aiello in 1969, and has three daughters: Mary Beth (1970), Marcia Ann (1971) and Marla Alison (1975). Their home is in Austin.

This story of the Edward Buschick Family was compiled from the memories of family members, with the help of documents handed down through the generations.

BYARS, LAWRENCE W. F134

(1825-1912)

For over thirty years "Old" Terryville in DeWitt County was the home of several members of the Byars family. Although my line eventually moved on, many remain, buried in scattered cemeteries throughout the area. Following is the story of one of these pioneers.

Lawrence W. Byars was born 3 January 1825, the first child of William Henry and Elizabeth Jane (Goode) Byars, in Jefferson County, Alabama. His young parents hailed from North Carolina by way of Kentucky, and like most everyone in the area were relative newcomers, the county having only recently been formed by the Territorial Legislature in 1819.

Lawrence spent his early boyhood years growing up on his family's frontier farm, and in time was joined by several brothers and sisters; James in 1826, John in 1828 (who died a year later), Adeline in 1829, Sarah in 1832, Margaret in 1834 (who also died as an infant), and Joseph in 1836.

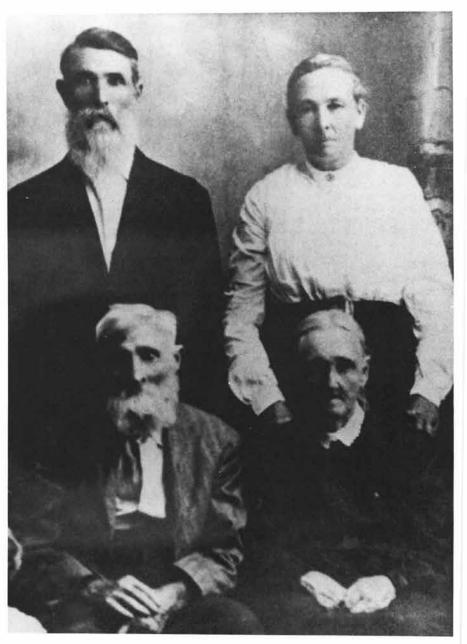

That same year (1836) saw great excitement in the county as a result of hostile actions by Seminole and Creek Indians to the south. After numerous murders and outrages, war was declared and a company of volunteers formed locally under the command of James McAdory to help quell the insurrection.

This was also a time of mourning for young Lawrence and his family as his grandfather, Stripling Byars, after a long and eventful life, had passed away in the spring.

Sometime around 1838 Lawrence's father gathered the family and their belongings to set out for new farmland in Mississippi, and in company with Abram Byars (Lawrence's uncle) and others, made the trek to their new home in Chickasaw County. It was here that Lawrence would grow to manhood.

With time he was joined by more additions to the family; Susan in 1838, William H.H. in 1840, George in 1843 and Nancy in 1846.

Now a young man of twenty-one, Lawrence's thoughts began to turn towards a family of his own, and increasingly a young lady he had grown up with in Alabama, Susan Goyne, began to catch his eye. Courtship led to marriage and they were wed on Christmas Eve 1846.

Standing: William Eldridge and Emily (Moore) Byars. Sitting: Lawrence W. and Susan (Goyne) Byars.

For the next few years the young couple lived with his parents, helping with the farming and endless chores necessary in making a living from the land.

In the spring of 1848 their first child, William Eldridge, was born. The following year Lawrence's parents had their last child, Robert Stripling, named for their parents, Robert Goode and Stripling Byars.

Increasingly, talk began to center on the rich farmland said to be available in the newly admitted state of Texas, and in 1852 Lawrence's brother James, also recently married and living in nearby Pontotoc County, decided to see for himself. That same year, on February 24th, saw the birth of Lawrence and Susan's second child, Andrew Lafayette.

Word from Texas must have been good as in 1856 Lawrence and his father gathered their families and moved to the area of "Old" Terryville in DeWitt County, a newly formed community, and began building their new homes on adjoining land.

Life on the frontier was rough, and death at a young age not uncommon. When Lawrence's sister Adeline passed away in 1856, he and his father took her children into their homes, and were joined by James and his children upon the death of his wife Savannah (Arvenia?) in 1859.

The following year Abraham Lincoln was elected President, much to the dismay of those in the South. Tensions ran high and on December 20, 1860, while the lame-duck President, Buchanan, was still in office, South Carolina called a state convention and repealed the act by which it had ratified the constitution seventy-two years earlier, thus returning the state to its former sovereign status. Within weeks Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana and Texas had followed suit, and upon a meeting of delegates in Montgomery, Alabama in February 1861 formed themselves into the Confederate States of America. After declaring their territory inviolate they began seizing all forts, shipyards and arsenals belonging to the United States government, which led to the bombardment of Fort Sumter in Charleston Harbor upon the refusal of the Federal Garrison there to surrender. This, combined with mob riots in Baltimore led the newly sworn President Lincoln to issue a call for 75,000 volunteers, whereupon Virginia, Arkansas, Tennessee and North Carolina cast their lot with the Confederacy.

During June 1861, in response to a call to arms by Jefferson Davis, a company of cavalry was formed, in the Terryville area under the command of Capt. A.J. Scarborough, named the Davis Guards. Lawrence and his brothers, James and George, joined with their neighbors as part of this unit for an enlistment of three months. Due to his age and responsibility as oldest son to take care of the farm and his brothers' families, Lawrence did not renew his enlistment to join the unit when it set out in the fall to participate in Sibley's rigorous campaign in New Mexico.

Following the Battle of Galveston in January 1863, Lawrence enlisted once again in Company F, 24th Brigade, Texas State Troops at Camp Stonewall Jackson near Victoria for three months. As the federal troops, evicted from Texas soil by Gen. McGruder and his Confederates, never returned, the crisis subsided and Lawrence returned to the farm.

With the collapse of the Confederacy and cessation of hostilities in 1865, those that could returned to their homes and families. Among these were Lawrence's brothers James, Joseph and William H.H. Notably absent was his brother George who had died near Richmond, Virginia in May 1862. During the war all had not been death and destruction, as on 30 July 1863 Lawrence and Susan had twin boys: John, named for Lawrence's brother who had died as an infant, and George, in honor of his fallen brother.

By 1870 Lawrence had moved his family to nearby Lavaca County, or possibly the county line had been redrawn, and it was here his last son, Lawrence W. was born on January 16th of that year. By this time his oldest son, William Eldridge, had married (1867) and was living nearby. He later moved with his family to Blanco County.

In 1883 Lawrence's mother passed away, followed by Lawrence's son John in 1884, when a horse fell on him, leaving a widow and two infant children. With the passing of his father in 1887 Lawrence and Susan decided to move to Blanco to be near their son William Eldridge, who had moved there a few years previously.

The following years were good to the aging pioneer couple as they watched their grand-children grow to maturity. On their 50th anniversary their grandson, William Lafayette, was married to Sibbie Massey, making the Christmas of 1896 a very special one for the whole family.

Doubtless the old couple pondered the changing times, the turn of the century, manned flight in 1903, the advent of motor cars; the world had come a long way since their childhood in Alabama.

On 15 April 1912, at the age of eighty-seven, Lawrence W. Byars passed away, followed by his wife Susan on 15 January 1916. Both were laid to rest in the Blanco Cemetery in Blanco, Texas. May they rest in peace.

BYRAM, GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS HENRY AND HARRIET JANE AGNES HOUSE

F135

Gustavus Adolphus Henry Byram and Harriet Jane Agnes (House), 1880 Christmas.

Albert C. Byram

Elizabeth (McGuire) Byram

Gustavus Adolphus Henry Byram, the first born son of Albert C. and Elizabeth McGuire Byram, was born in Robertson County, Tennessee on 15 April 1845. Henry had an older sister, Martha Jane (born 1844), a younger brother, John C. (born 1848) and a baby sister, Sarah (born 1859).

Shortly before the Civil War, Albert C. moved his family to Little Rock, Pulaski Co., Arkansas where they had built a stately, classical, revival-style two story home in the city, in addition to their homeplace, which was further out in Pulaski Co., Ark. Among other business interests in Little Rock, Albert owned a livery stable.

On 1 March 1862, at Little Rock, Albert enlisted as a Confederate private in Co. F, 51 Regiment, Arkansas Militia, Provisional Army of Arkansas. (Later his son, John, joined this same unit.) Henry Byram, not yet seventeen years of age, quickly followed his father's example and joined the Confederate forces of Capt. Carroll's Company of Arkansas Volunteers as a drummer. However, he was given a twenty day leave for medical treatment in Little Rock because of a chronic enlargement of his spleen. Still, he was able to rejoin the Confederate forces on 19 July 1862 as the drummer in Capt. Townsend's Co., McRae's Regiment, 36 Arkansas Infantry. Later in 1863, Henry became the drummer for Glenn's Regiment, Ark Infantry. Henry was wounded in battle and never regained his health and full strength after the war's sad end. However, during the quiet times between battles Henry and Doctor Franklin "Dock" Couch, of Woodruff Co., Ark. (who later founded the Couch Community in Karnes Co., TX) both listened with great joy to the countless tales of Fred House's exploits in DeWitt Co., TX. Both "Dock" and Fred were instrumental in taking care of Henry during some of the bloodiest battles including Chickamauga where "Dock" was critically wounded. After the war, both "Dock" and Henry were convinced by Fred to test their fate in Texas. "Dock" Couch, wife, Nancy Elizabeth "Lizzie" Westmoreland Couch, and daughter, Lena Mack Couch, settled first at Meansville, San Patricio, TX but Henry had accepted a generous offer from Fred to be his personal secretary and bookkeeper.

Henry's help with the correspondence and record keeping was vitally important as Fred had by this time the power of attorney for over seven hundred cattlemen whose herds they drove up (primarily) the Chisholm Trail to market during the 1870's to 1890's.

On 13 January 1876, Henry married Fred and Sarah Elizabeth Powell House's daughter, Harriet Jane Agnes House (born at the House ranch at Davy, DeWitt Co., TX on 12 February 1858), at the House ranch at Davy. They soon moved to their own land which Henry received as pre-exemption land grant (#52) of 160 acres situated on the headwaters of Mustang Creek about 111/2 miles NW of Yorktown. Their first of two children, Albert F. "Allie" Byram was born at the Byram ranch house. It was here that Henry raised prized sheep and his land adjoined that of the Gorham Sheep Ranch. However, Henry's health began to rapidly deteriorate and matters in Little Rock, Ark. demanded his immediate attention, so Henry moved his pregnant wife, Jane and small son, "Allie" there late in the fall of 1880. Presley Randolph Byram was born on 18 January 1881 shortly after they arrived in Little Rock. The Byram family enjoyed the luxuries of living in a large city and in a beautiful home on the corner of 16 and State for four years before Henry died there of typhoid fever on 5 October 1885. Henry was buried the following day in Oakland Cemetery (plot #809, NW corner), Little Rock, Arkansas. (There is not a marker on his grave; however, Jane wisely wrote the information in the Byram family Bible which has been lovingly preserved by her granddaughter, Muriel Morrison Byram Hartman.) With a tearful farewell, Jane and her two small sons left Little Rock and returned home to the House ranch at Davy, Texas. Fred taught his two grandsons to be cattlemen and both made several cattle drives up the Chisholm Trail with their grandfather's herds.

On 12 January 1898, Jane married secondly, William Poetter. The following year, William Poetter was appointed postmaster of Davy by the US Postmaster General. Fred had given Jane a large tract of land near Davy and helped to build a ranch house there which was similar to his own but was far more ornately trimmed in the Victorian style of the time period.

Jane died of breast cancer on 2 July 1915 and was buried the following day in the House Cemetery at Davy, DeWitt County, Texas.

ever the family's great happiness during this time of prosperity was short lived as Gustavus Adolphus Henry Byram died of typhoid fever at their home on 5 October 1885 and was buried the following day in Oakland Cemetery (Plot 809, NW corner), in Little Rock, Arkansas. Jane and her two small sons moved back home to her parents (Fred House and Sarah Elizabeth Powell House) and lived for sometime with them until Fred decided that she and the boys needed a home of their own and built a house on land nearby which he deeded to her.

On 29 May 1900 in Yorktown, Texas, Presley Randolph Byram married Lena Zenobia Morrison, the daughter of John Wingfield Morrison and his wife, Mary Jane Victoria Reese Cox Morrison. Lena was born in San Antonio, Bexar Co., TX on 21 February 1881. Their only daughter, Muriel Morrison Byram, was born on 20 October 1902 at the Byram ranch at Davy, DeWitt Co., Texas. A son was born shortly after Muriel but either died at birth or shortly thereafter and was buried at House family cemetery at Davy.

Presley Randolph went on several trail drives up the Chisholm Trail with his grandfather, Fred House's cattle, and those of 700 other cattlemen for whom Fred had power of attorney to take their cattle to market. Both Presley Randolph and his brother, "Allie" were well trained by Fred House in the cattle and livestock industry and Presley Randolph opened a meat market at Davy, TX around the turn of the century. He was often gone as he bought livestock all over South Texas some of which were butchered for his meat market. Others were used as stock for the Byram ranch or shipped by rail to market. During World Wars I and II, Presley Randolph was a purveyor of livestock for the United States government.

Muriel Morrison Byram married August Blanton Hartman, son of William and Emma Ardelia Woods Hartmann, on 21 November 1923 at the Byram ranch in Davy, Texas. The first of the four Byram grandchildren, Vernon Blanton "Bob" Hartman was born at Davy on 29 November 1924. He married first on 19 Nov 1946, Mary Fuller (died 7 January 1947, buried at Karnes City, TX), and secondly, on 16 November 1952, Mickey Lorraine Blake (born 15 August 1919, died 19 August 1982, buried at Karnes City). Bob died in a tragic truck accident on 28 June 1974 and was buried in the Hartman family plot at Karnes City cemetery with his wives and father, August (died 10 November 1971). The second Byram grandchild, Jacquelyn Woods Hartman was born at Davy on 25 July 1926, married Sidney Ross Rhodes on 4 May 1946 and had two daughters: Suzanne (born 28 June 1956, Karnes City) and Jann (born 30 November 1959, Karnes City). The third Byram grandchild, Lavelle Hartman was born in Yorktown, Texas on 28 March 1928. She married Ray Slater Hall on 23 June 1946 and had three children: Marianne Elizabeth (born 20 August 1948, Houston, TX), Laurinda Rae (born in Karnes City, 18 February 1952), and William Allen "Bill" on 27 February 1960 in El Paso, Texas. The last of the Byram grandchildren, Alton Randolph Hartman was born at Yorktown, TX on 7 March 1934. With his second wife, Evelyn Henke he had three children: Preslev Randolph Hartman (born 14 October 1967, Karnes City), Perry Blaine Hartman (born 17 November 1969 at Karnes City) and Sandra Kay Hartman (born 27 January 1972, Karnes City).

As Lena's health began to fail, Muriel and August Hartman moved their family to the Byram Ranch at Davy where Muriel could better care for her mother. Lena died on 23 November 1943 at the Byram ranch at Davy and was buried the following day at Salt Creek cemetery, Davy, DeWitt Co., Texas.

Presley Randolph continued his ranching and meat market endeavors with the help of his son-in-law, August, until shortly before he had to be hospitalized in Kenedy, Karnes Co., TX. Presley Randolph Byram died in Kenedy Hospital on 24 May 1947 and was buried the following day at Salt Creek cemetery, Davy, DeWitt Co., Texas next to his beloved wife, Lena Zenobia Morrison Byram. Lena's mother, Mary Jane Victoria Reese Cox Morrison is buried on Lena's right side and her grave remains unmarked at this time. Muriel Byram Hartman had beautiful stone memorials placed on her parents' graves and the entire plot covered with concrete.

CALHOUN, FAMILY F137

Elizabeth Hungerford Smith Calhoun was the daughter of Sarah Jenkins and James Norman Smith. She was born in Maury County, Tennessee, August 9, 1814.

She was only six years old when her mother died, and her grieving father, unable to care for three small children, boarded her with the family of Rev. Thomas J. Hall, a Presbyterian minister with a daughter Elizabeth's age and two older girls. Here, Elizabeth was well cared for and educated. She moved home after her father's remarriage in 1825, and later attended school in Covington, Tennessee.
