Title III: It's about teaching and learning

Keeping our students in school and helping them be successful (Activity 1)

Jerry Hamby, x391

Updates teaching strategies for developmental reading, writing and math to incorporate use of computers and improve student learning. Led effort to create two computer labs—one for writing-reading (Bonner Hall, Room 225), one for mathematics (Rundell Hall, Room 206) with computers and software purchased with grant funds. Does the same for Huntsville Center. Welcomes faculty members' ideas on using computer labs to improve student learning in all subjects, not just developmental courses.

Jeff Gibson, x224

Worked with Jerry Hamby and Gary Ervin to install developmental labs. Works with Julian Davis to create on-campus computer network. This network will allow faculty members in Baytown or Huntsville to summon student records and other information to increase their effectiveness in advising students.

Linda Austin, x406

Coordinates entire project with advisory committees and Title III team. Ensures goals, objectives and grant requirements are being met.

Helping instructors learn the most up-to-date ways to teach students (Activity 2)

Bonnie Hobbins, x824

Leads committee review of faculty proposals for multimedia classroom presentations; encourages modernization of teaching techniques. Monitors student interest and success. Schedules training for Microsoft Office software, e-mail, Internet and student advising.

Troy Oehler, x220

Faculty know what they want to present in class; Troy develops the best ways to present it with computers.
