House Committee Procedures

Introduction

Art. 3, sec. 37, of the Texas Constitution prohibits legislation from becoming law unless it is referred to and reported by a committee in both houses. Committees serve as the preliminary screening process for legislation and allow the public the opportunity to testify about their views on legislative proposals. Proposed legislation may be closely examined and revised in committee before advancing to the next stage of consideration.

Most legislation dies in committee. During the 1995 regular session, for example, 3,369 House bills and joint resolutions were introduced, and 1,328 (39.4 percent) were reported favorably from House committees. The odds of favorable committee action improve greatly when legislation passed by one chamber is sent to the other. Of the 771 bills and joint resolutions that the House received from the Senate in 1995, 663 (86.0 percent) were reported favorably from House committees. Senate committees reported 689 (78.7 percent) of 875 House-passed bills and joint resolutions.

House committees must follow the requirements of the House Rules (HR 5 by Wilson), particularly Rule 4, which deals with committee procedures. Each committee also establishes its own internal operating procedures and practices.

Committees are not required to consider legislation referred to them. If a committee does act, legislation may be:

- ◆ left pending or laid on the table subject to call;
- ◆ referred to subcommittee and either reported or left pending;

- ◆ reported favorably without amendment, as amended, or as substituted; or
- ◆ reported unfavorably or on minority report.

This report reviews the rules and procedures used in House committees. It also provides some sample motions used to initiate committee action. Citations to House rule provisions are also included. For additional information on the legislative process, see House Research Organization Session Focus Report Number 75-4, How a Bill Becomes a Law, 75th Legislature, January 30, 1997.

Committee Authority

Referral by the speaker

The speaker refers all House bills and joint resolutions to committee after they are filed with the chief clerk. Simple and concurrent resolutions are also referred to committee, but are often considered by the House on suspension of the rules without committee action.

The speaker chooses the committee to which legislation is referred, using the general jurisdictional guidelines for committees found in House Rule 3. The House may change a referral by majority vote, although this rarely occurs. The speaker will sometimes correct or change a referral by switching legislation to another committee after consultation with the author and the chairs of the two affected committees. A change in referral may occur at any stage before a committee reports legislation (Rule 1, sec. 4).

Authority of the chair

The speaker appoints all committee chairs. Once appointed, chairs may not be removed during the two-year term of the legislature. The chair, in consultation with committee members and the leadership, determines the fate of legislation in committee. The chair decides if and when the committee considers legislation. No committee member may make a motion for the committee to act on legislation without being recognized for that purpose by the chair. The chair appoints subcommittee chairs and members. Legislation sent to subcommittee dies if the chair does not appoint subcommittee members (Rule 4, sec. 6). If at least three committee members object to a ruling by the chair, the ruling may be appealed to the committee (Rule 4, sec. 14).

Committee Analysis

Staff analysis

The committee staff must provide a written analysis of legislation before the committee considers it. The chair usually requests the author or sponsor of legislation to provide the committee with an analysis (Rule 4, sec. 7).

Fiscal notes, impact statements

The chair determines whether legislation requires a fiscal note or an impact statement and requests its preparation by the Legislative Budget Board (LBB). A fiscal note is required for legislation that authorizes spending state funds, has a statewide impact on units of local governments of the same type or class, requires spending of local funds or affects local taxes, fees, licenses or penalties (Rule 4, secs. 33 and 34).

Impact statements include:

- ◆ criminal justice policy statements, for legislation involving a change in punishment for felonies committed by adults;
- ◆ equalized education funding impact statements, for legislation involving a change in the public school finance system;
- ◆ water development policy impact statements, for legislation proposing to create certain water districts;
- ◆ tax equity notes, for legislation that would create or impact a state tax or fee, estimating the general impact on distribution of tax and fee burdens among individuals and businesses, and
- ◆ actuarial impact statements, for legislation affecting a public-employee retirement system, prepared by the LBB in cooperation with the State Pension Review Board.

Unlike fiscal notes, impact statements need not be completed before legislation is considered in committee (Rule 4, sec. 34).

If committee amendments change the potential impact of legislation, a new fiscal note or impact statement is required. Original and updated fiscal notes and impact statements must accompany legislation throughout the legislative process, including submission to the governor.

Committee Meetings

Committee meetings begin with the call to order by the chair, who instructs the clerk to call the roll to determine if a quorum — a majority of the committee members — is present. Minutes of each meeting are kept showing actions taken by the committee, recording votes and listing witnesses (Rule 4, secs. 16 and 18).

Committees may act on legislation during public hearings or formal meetings. Committees may also hold work sessions, in which they may discuss legislation but take no formal action. Notice of public hearings must be posted at least five calendar days in advance during a regular session, 24 hours in advance during special sessions. Formal meetings and work sessions require two hours' advance written notice, posted and transmitted to each committee member, or an announcement filed with the journal clerk and read by the reading clerk while the House is in session (Rule 4, sec. 11).

No committee or subcommittee may meet while the House is in session unless it receives permission by a majority vote of the House. No committee may meet in the House chamber while the House is in session (Rule 4, sec. 9).

Public hearings, formal meetings and work sessions must be open to the public except for meetings to consider an impeachment or other quasi-judicial matter. All votes must be taken in open meetings.

House rules do not require a public hearing be held before legislation is reported from committee; Senate rules do require a public hearing. However, during regular sessions House committees usually hold public hearings before acting on House legislation. When Senate-passed legislation is referred to a House committee and the House committee has already held a hearing on the House companion of the Senate legislation, the committee often does not hold another hearing before acting on the Senate legislation (Rule 4, sec. 12).

House members are the "author" of House legislation they introduce and the "sponsor" of companion Senate legislation sent to the House.

House members have an unconditional right to testify on the legislation they author or sponsor and may open and close the testimony on their legislation. No legislation may be acted on adversely unless its author or sponsor has first been given an opportunity to testify (Rule 4, sec. 30).

Anyone may testify at a committee hearing. Persons who wish to be recognized to address the committee must fill out and sign a sworn statement including their name, home and business addresses, telephone number, the entity (if any) they represent, the type of business, profession or occupation of the entity represented and its business address. They must also designate if they are appearing in favor, against, or neutral ("on") concerning the measure before the committee. All testimony must be electronically recorded. The chair designates on the statement whether witnesses were actually recognized to address the committee, and those witnesses are listed in the committee minutes in a separate attachment and in the committee report (Rule 4, secs. 19, 20). Committee members desiring to question witnesses must seek recognition by the chair.

House employees may appear as witnesses only by permission granted by majority vote of the committee (Housekeeping Resolution, HR 4 by Goolsby, sec. 4.09). The General Appropriations Act prohibits state employees from influencing the outcome of legislation, other than to provide information at the request of a legislator (HB 1, 74th Legislature, art. 9, sec. 5). When state employees appear at public hearings as witnesses, they testify "on" legislation.

Committees may, by record vote of at least two-thirds of the members present, issue subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses or require production of information. Anyone disobeying a lawfully issued committee subpoena may be prosecuted for contempt of Legislature, a misdemeanor offense punishable by a fine ranging from $100 to $1,000 and a jail term of from 30 days to 12 months (Government Code sec. 301.024-.027; Rule 4, sec. 21).

Committee Action

No formal action may be taken by a committee unless a quorum is present. Voting by proxy is not allowed (Rule 4, sec. 16).

Once legislation is laid before a committee, the chair may delay consideration by postponing it, leaving it pending or referring it to subcommittee. The committee may also take these actions by adopting a motion. Another way to delay action on legislation is to adopt a motion to "lay on the table." Legislation left pending may be considered without formal action; however, legislation that was laid on the table may be considered only if the committee adopts a motion to call it from the table.

While delaying motions are allowed, motions that would prevent a committee from reporting legislation are out of order (Rule 4, sec. 25). Also, committees may not adopt a rule that would automatically send all legislation to subcommittee or otherwise have the effect of thwarting the will of a majority of the committee or subcommittee (Rule 4, sec. 13).

Subcommittees

Committee chairs may refer legislation to subcommittee on their own authority, or the committee may adopt a motion to send legislation to subcommittee. The chair may establish and routinely refer legislation to standing subcommittees or may appoint subcommittees ad hoc as needed. The chair is not required to appoint members of a subcommittee even when the committee adopts a motion referring legislation to a subcommittee "to be named later." Subcommittees need not be of any particular size, but usually have a smaller number of members — often three to five — than the whole committee and have an odd number of members to prevent tie votes.

The subcommittee chair, appointed by the chair of the full committee, decides if and when the subcommittee will consider legislation referred to it. Subcommittee hearings are governed by the same rules as committee hearings, except that subcommittees may not issue subpoenas. Any amendment or substitute previously adopted by the full committee is voided when legislation is sent to subcommittee.

After reviewing legislation a subcommittee submits a written report of its recommendations to the chair of the full committee. The full committee may not act on a subcommittee report until 48 hours after the report has been provided to all members of the full committee. At any point before the subcommittee reports the chair may recognize a member to move that the legislation be recalled from subcommittee (Rule 4, secs. 43-50).

Offering amendments or substitutes

A committee may adopt proposed amendments to legislation. Committee amendments are only recommendations made to the House, which must vote separately on each committee amendment during floor consideration of the legislation. Committee amendments are attached at the end of the original version of legislation on a separate page.

Rather than adopt individual amendments, a committee may adopt a complete substitute to the original legislation. Often when the committee has adopted amendments to legislation, a substitute incorporating the amendments will be prepared. If a substitute is adopted, the substitute, not the original version, is reported to the House. If the legislation is considered on the House floor, the House does not vote separately to adopt the substitute as it does for committee amendments but considers the substitute in place of the original bill.

House rules concerning germaneness and other restrictions that apply to amendments offered on the floor also apply to amendments and substitutes offered in committee. Amendments and substitutes are in order any time after legislation is laid out. For example, a substitute may be offered and adopted before testimony is heard. Committee members often submit amendments or substitutes in advance to the chair, who lays them out and recognizes their author for an explanation, or members may seek recognition and offer amendments during the course of committee consideration. Amendments are usually adopted by unanimous consent or nonrecord vote, but record votes on amendments sometimes occur if a substantial minority on the committee is opposed (Rule 4, secs. 39-41).

MOTIONS FOR COMMITTEE ACTION

Once legislation has been laid out in committee, the chair or any committee member recognized by the chair may make any of several motions. Some committees require a second for certain motions; others do not. Most motions are adopted by nonrecord vote — either without objection or by voice vote.

Delaying action

Once legislation has been laid out, action may be delayed by postponing consideration of the legislation, leaving it pending, laying it on the table subject to call or referring it to subcommittee. In many committees, these motions are routinely made by the chair and adopted without objection. Also, the chair is authorized to postpone legislation, leave it pending or refer it to subcommittee without a motion. A member gaining recognition by the chair may move:

to leave HB/SB (or HJR/SJR) _____ pending;

to lay HB/SB _____ on the table subject to call; or to refer HB/SB _____ to subcommittee. If this motion is adopted, the chair decides whether to refer the legislation to a standing subcommittee, name a subcommittee immediately or at a later date or not name a subcommittee at all.

Action on legislation previously laid out

To renew consideration of legislation that was laid out and then not acted on, the chair or a committee member may move:

to lay out HB/SB _____ on pending business;

to call HB/SB _____ from the table;

to recall from subcommittee and lay out HB/SB _____; or to lay out HB/SB _____ on subcommittee report.

Amendments

Once legislation is laid out and is under consideration, it may be amended. Often the chair will lay out proposed amendments or a substitute. Members seeking to offer amendments must be recognized by the chair.

Often amendments are simply laid out and explained, but a formal motion may be used, such as:

I move to amend HB/SB _____ [as substituted] by [brief description of amendment].

After adopting individual amendments, the committee may incorporate them into a single substitute. Another common practice is to lay out the substitute first, then any subsequent amendments are offered to the substitute.

Reporting legislation

The wording of the motion to report legislation favorably to the full House varies depending on the committee. The motion to report legislation requires a record vote.

A standard motion for reporting legislation is:

I move that HB/SB _____ [as amended, as substituted] be reported favorably to the full House with a recommendation that it do pass and [not] be printed [and sent to the Local and Consent Calendars Committee].

Substitute motions

A member may supersede a pending motion by offering a substitute motion. The committee is required to vote on the substitute motion first. For example, if a motion is made to report legislation to the full House, a substitute motion may be made to refer the legislation to subcommittee.

Reporting Legislation

Committee work on legislation is considered final when a majority of the committee reports favorably or unfavorably or reports an inability to act (Rule 4, sec. 26). "Reporting" means taking final, formal action.

Typically the chair will not recognize a member to make a motion to report legislation favorably unless convinced that the motion has majority support. As a result, a motion to report legislation favorably rarely fails. Committees may also vote to report legislation unfavorably, formally killing it, something that occurs even more rarely.

In the event of a tie vote or other inability to act on a committee motion to report legislation favorably or unfavorably, the House by majority vote may leave legislation in committee for further consideration, refer it to another committee or order it printed, in which case the legislation is sent to the Calendars Committee (Rule 4, sec. 27).

When a committee votes to report legislation unfavorably, it officially kills it. If this happens, members of the committee desiring to report the bill favorably may file a minority report and seek the permission of the House to "print the bill on minority report," thereby sending the legislation to the Calendars Committee (Rule 4, secs. 28, 29). This is also rarely done.

Committee reports

If legislation is reported favorably, a committee report is printed. Committee reports must be signed by the committee chair or by a majority of the committee members. Committee reports must be addressed to the speaker and contain the following:

- ◆ the record vote adopting the report;
- ◆ the committee's recommendations;
- ◆ the date on which the recommendations were made;
- ◆ a detailed analysis, including background information, of what the legislation proposes and an analysis of its content;

- ◆ for Senate legislation, the primary House sponsor and all House joint sponsors or co-sponsors;
- ◆ a statement of differences between a committee substitute and the original version, if applicable;
- ◆ a statement indicating whether any rule-making authority is expressly delegated by the legislation and identifying the sections in which the rulemaking is delegated;
- ◆ a summary of the committee hearing;
- ◆ a list of persons recognized to address the committee and the entities they represent;
- ◆ a notation that the legislation has been forwarded for preparation of a fiscal note or impact statement, if applicable;
- ◆ a brief explanation of each amendment adopted by the committee; and
- ◆ any recommendation that legislation be sent to the Local and Consent Calendars Committee for placement on an appropriate calendar (Rule 4, secs. 6, 32).

The committee report is attached to a copy of the original version of the bill or committee substitute on "1st Printing," along with any proposed committee amendments to the original bill and any fiscal notes or impact statements.

Instructing the committee to report

After legislation has been in committee for at least six calendar days, a member may move on the House floor to instruct the committee to report it. Adoption of such a motion requires a two-thirds vote during the first 76 days of the session, a majority vote thereafter. If instructed to report by the House, the committee must report within a week. Within seven days after a committee is instructed to report, the House may consider a motion to re-refer the legislation to another committee (Rule 7, secs. 46, 47).

Referral to calendars committee

All legislation reported from committee is sent to either the Calendars Committee or the Local and Consent Calendars Committee, which decides if and when legislation will be scheduled for floor consideration. A committee recommendation to send legislation to the Local and Consent Calendars Committee, rather than to the Calendars Committee, requires unanimous consent (Rule 6, sec. 23). Generally a recommendation that legislation be sent to the Local and Consent Calendars Committee is made as part of the motion to report the legislation.

If a point of order is raised and sustained on the House floor that a committee substitute is not germane, in whole or part, to the original version, the legislation is returned to the Calendars Committee. The Calendars Committee may have the original version printed and placed on the calendar or may return the legislation to committee for further action (Rule 4, sec. 41).

Procedural Issues

The procedure most often used on the House floor to send legislation back to committee is to raise a point of order that a House rule has been violated. Far less common is a motion to recommit legislation to committee, which may be offered either by a routine motion or during floor consideration of the legislation. During consideration of a motion to recommit, the merits of the legislation are not debatable, unless the motion is to recommit "with instructions," such as for the committee to report by a particular time or date (Rule 7, secs. 17-19).

According to House precedent, once legislation has been reported from committee in conformity with the rules, the speaker will not hear points of order referring to parliamentary errors or erroneous rulings allegedly made by the chair during committee deliberations (Rule 4, sec. 14). However, points of order may be raised on the House floor regarding committee actions taken after legislation has been reported. For example, points of order are sometimes raised that a committee report or committee minutes were not prepared in strict adherence to the rules. If the point of order is sustained, the legislation is returned to committee.
